The Bahir

Section I

The First Verses of Creation

1. Rabbi Nehuniah ben HaKana said:

One verse (Job 37:21) states, "And now they do not see light, it is brilliant (Bahir) in the skies...[round about God in terrible majesty]."

Another verse, however, (Psalms 18:12), states, "He made darkness His hiding place." It is also written (Psalms 97:2), "Cloud and gloom surround Him." This is an apparent contradiction.

A third verse comes and reconciles the two. It is written (Psalms 139:12), "Even darkness is not dark to You. Night shines like day -- light and darkness are the same."

2. Rabbi Berachiah said:

It is written (Genesis 1:2), "The earth was Chaos (Tohu) and Desolation (Bohu).

What is the meaning of the word "was" in this verse? This indicates that the Chaos existed previously [and already was].

What is Chaos (Tohu)? Something that confounds (Taha) people.

What is Desolation (Bohu)? It is something that has substance. This is the reason that it is called Bohu, that is, Bo Hu -- "it is in it."

3. Why does the Torah begin with the letter Bet? In order that it begin with a blessing (Berachah).

How do we know that the Torah is called a blessing? Because it is written (Deuteronomy 33:23), "The filling is God's blessing possessing the Sea and the South."

The Sea is nothing other than the Torah, as it is written (Job 11:9), "It is wider than the sea."

What is the meaning of the verse, "The filling is God's blessing?" This means that wherever we find the letter Bet it indicates a blessing.

It is thus written (Genesis 1:1), "In the beginning (BeReshit) [God created the heaven and the earth." BeReshit is Bet Reshit.]

The word "beginning" (Reshit) is nothing other than Wisdom. It is thus written (Psalms 111:10), "The beginning is wisdom, the fear of God."

Wisdom is a blessing. It is thus written, "And God blessed Solomon." It is furthermore written (I Kings 5:26), "And God gave Wisdom to Solomon."

This resembles a king who marries his daughter to his son. He gives her to him at the wedding and says to him, "Do with her as you desire."

4. How do we know that the word Berachah [usually translated as blessing] comes from the word Baruch [meaning blessed]? Perhaps it comes from the word Berech [meaning knee]. It is written (Isaiah 44:23), "For to Me shall every knee bend." [Berachah can therefore mean] the Place to which every knee bends.

What example does this resemble? People want to see the king, but do not know where to find his house (Bayit). First they ask "Where is the king's house?" Only then can they ask "Where is the king?"

The Bahir

It is thus written, "For to Me shall every knee bend" -- even the highest -- "every tongue shall swear."

5. Rabbi Rahumai sat and expounded:

What is the meaning of the verse (Deuteronomy 33:23), "The filling is God's blessing, possessing the Sea and the South"?

This means that wherever we find the letter Bet it is blessed.

This is the Filling referred to in the verse, "The filling is God's blessing."

From there it nourishes those who need it. It was from this Filling that God sought advice.

What example does this resemble? A king wanted to build his palace among great cliffs. He mined into the bedrock and uncovered a great spring of living water. The king then said, "Since I have flowing water, I will plant a garden. Then I will delight in it, and so will all the world."

It is therefore written (Proverbs 8:30), "I was with Him as a craftsman, I was His delight for a day, a day, frolicking before him at every time."

The Torah is saying, "For two thousand years I was in the bosom of the Blessed Holy One as His delight."

The verse therefore says, "a day, a day." Each day of the Blessed Holy One is a thousand years, as it is written (Psalms 90:4), "A thousand years in Your eyes is as but yesterday when it is passed."

From then on, it is at times, as the verse states, "[frolicking before Him] at every time."

The rest is for the world. It is thus written (Isaiah 48:9), "I will [breathe out] My praise through My nose for you."

What is the meaning of "My praise"? As it is written (Psalms 145:2), "A praise of David, I will raise You high [my God, O King, and I will bless Your name for the world and forever]."

Why is this a praise? Because I will "raise You high."

And what is this elevation? Because "I will bless Your name for the world and forever."

8. What is a blessing?

It can be explained with an example. A king planted trees in his garden. It may rain and water them, and the ground may be wet and provide them with moisture, but still, he must water them from the spring.

It is thus written (Psalms 111:10), "The beginning is Wisdom, the fear of God, good intelligence to all who do them [His praise endures forever]."

You may think that it lacks something. It is therefore written, "His praise endures forever."

7. Rabbi Amoraï sat and expounded:

What is the meaning of the verse (Deuteronomy 33:23), "The filling is God's blessing, possessing the Sea and the South?"

Moses was saying, "If you follow my decrees, you will inherit both this world and the next."

The World to Come is likened to the sea, as it is written (Job 11:9), "It is wider than the sea."

The present world is referred to as the South. It is thus written (Joshua 15:19), "[Give me a blessing] for you have set me in the land of the south, [therefore give me springs of water]."

The Targum translates this, "behold the earth is the south."

8. Why did God add the letter Heh to Abraham's name, rather than any other letter?

This was so that all parts of man's body should be worthy of life in the World to Come, which is likened to the sea.

To the extent that we can express it, the Structure was completed in Abraham. [Regarding this Structure] it is written (Genesis 9:6), "For in the form of God, He made the man."

The numerical value of Abraham is 248, the number of parts in man's body.

9. What is the meaning of (Deuteronomy 33:23), "[The filling is God's blessing, the Sea and the South] he shall inherit it (YiRaShaH)?" It would have been sufficient if the verse said, "inherit (RaSh) [the Sea and the South]."

But this comes to teach us that God must also be included. The word YiRaShaH thus contains the letters RaSh YH [meaning, "inherit God"].

What does this resemble? A king had two treasuries, and he hid one away. After many days he said to his son, "Take what is in these two treasuries." The son replied, "Perhaps you are not giving me all that you have hidden away." The king said, "Take everything."

It is thus written, "the Sea and the South, he shall inherit it." Inherit God (YH RaSh) -- everything will be given to you if you only keep My ways.

10. Rabbi Bun said:

What is the meaning of the verse (Proverbs 8:23), "I was set up from eternity (Me-Olam), from a head, before the earth?"

What is the meaning of "from eternity (Me-Olam)?" This means that it must be concealed (He-elam) from the world.

It is thus written (Ecclesiastes 3:11), "He has also placed the world (Ha-Olam) in their hearts [that they should not find out the work that God has done from the beginning to the end]." Do not read Ha-Olam (the world), but He-elam (concealment).

The Torah said, "I was first, so that I might be the head of the world." It is thus written, "I was set up from eternity, from a head."

You may think that the earth was before it. It is therefore written, "before the earth."

It is thus written (Genesis 1:1), "In the beginning created God the heaven and the earth."

What is the meaning of "created"? He created everything that was needed for all things. And then God. Only after that is it written "the heaven and the earth."

11. What is the meaning of the verse (Ecclesiastes 7:14), "Also one opposite the other was made by God."

He created Desolation (Bohu) and placed it in Peace, and He created Chaos (Tohu) and placed it in Evil.

Desolation is in Peace, as it is written (Job 25:2), "He makes peace in His high places."

This teaches us that Michael, the prince to God's right, is water and hail, while Gabriel, the prince to God's left, is fire. The two are reconciled by the Prince of Peace. This is the meaning of the verse, "He makes peace in His high places."

12. How do we know that Chaos is in Evil? It is written (Isaiah 45:7), "He makes peace and creates evil."

How does this come out? Evil is from Chaos, while Peace is from Desolation.

He thus created Chaos and placed it in Evil, [as it is written "He makes peace and creates evil." He created Desolation and placed it in Peace, as it is written, "He makes peace in His high places."]

13. Rabbi Bun also sat and expounded:

The Bahir

What is the meaning of the verse (Isaiah 45:7), "He forms light and creates darkness?" Light has substance. Therefore, the term "formation" is used with regard to it. Darkness has no substance, and therefore, with regard to it, the term "creation" is used. It is similarly written (Amos 4:12), He forms mountains and creates the wind."

Another explanation is this:

Light was actually brought into existence, as it is written (Genesis 1:3), "And God said, let there be light." Something cannot be brought into existence unless it is made. The term "formation" is therefore used.

In the case of darkness, however, there was no making, only separation and setting aside. It is for this reason that the term "created" (Bara) is used. It has the same sense as in the expression, "That person became well (hi-Bria)."

14. Why is the letter Bet closed on all sides and open in the front? This teaches us that it is the House (Bayit) of the world. God is the place of the world, and the world is not His place. Do not read Bet, but Bayit (house).

It is thus written (Proverbs 24:3), "With wisdom the house is built, with understanding it is established, [and with knowledge are its chambers filled]."

15. What does the Bet resemble? It is like a man, formed by God with wisdom. He is closed on all sides, but open in front. The Aleph, however, is open from behind.

This teaches us that the tail of the Bet is open from behind. If not for this, man could not exist.

Likewise, if not for the Bet on the tail of the Aleph, the world could not exist.

16. Rabbi Rahumai said:

Illumination preceeded the world, since it is written (Psalms 97:2), "Cloud and gloom surround Him." It is thus written (Genesis 1:3), "And God said, 'let there be light,' and there was light."

They said to Him, "Before the creation of Israel your son, will you then make him a crown?" He replied yes.

What does this resemble? A king yearned for a son. One day he found a beautiful, precious crown, and he said, "This is fitting for my son's head."

They said to him, "Are you then certain that your son will be worthy of this crown?"

He replied, "Be still. This is what arises in thought."

It is thus written (2 Samuel 14:14), He thinks thoughts [that none should be cast away].

The Bahir
Section II
The Aleph-Beth

17. Rabbi Amoraï sat and expounded:

Why is the letter Aleph at the beginning? Because it was before everything, even the Torah.

18. Why does Bet follow it? Because it was first.

Why does it have a tail? To point to the place from which it came.

Some say, from there the world is sustained.

19. Why is Gimel third?

It has three parts, teaching us that it bestows (gomel) kindness.

But did Rabbi Akiba not say that Gimel has three parts because it bestows, grows, and sustains. It is thus written (Genesis 21:8), "The lad grew and was bestowed."

He said: He says the same as I do. He grew and bestowed kindness to his neighbours and to those entrusted to him.

20. And why is there a tail at the bottom of the Gimel?

He said: The Gimel has a head on top, and is like a pipe. Just like a pipe, the Gimel draws from above through its head, and disperses through its tail. This is the Gimel.

21. Rabbi Yochanan said:

The angels were created on the second day. It is therefore written (Psalm 104:3), "He rafters His upper chambers with water [He makes the clouds His chariot, He walks on the wings of the wind]." It is then written (Psalm 104:4), "He makes the winds His angels, His ministers from flaming fire."

[Rabbi Haninah said: The angels were created on the fifth day, as it is written (Genesis 1:20), "And flying things shall fly upon the firmament of heaven." Regarding the angels it is written (Isaiah 6:2), "With two wings did they fly."]

Rabbi Levatas ben Taurus said: All agree, even Rabbi Yochanan, that the water already existed [on the first day]. But it was on the second day that "He raftered His upper chambers with water." [At that time He also created] the one who "makes the clouds his chariot," and the one who "walks on the wings of the wind." But His messengers were not created until the fifth day.

22. All agree that none were created on the first day. It should therefore not be said that Michael drew out the heaven at the south, and Gabriel drew it out at the north, while God arranged things in the middle.

It is thus written (Isaiah 44:24), "I am God, I make all, I stretch out the heavens alone, the earth is spread out before Me." [Even though we read the verse "from Me" (May-iti), it can also be read] Mi iti -- "Who was with Me?"

I am the One who planted this tree in order that all the world should delight in it. And in it, I spread All.

I called it All because all depend upon it, all emanate from it, and all need it. To it they look, for it they wait, and from it, souls fly in joy.

The Bahir

Alone was I when I made it. Let no angel rise above it and say, "I was before you."

I was also alone when I spread out My earth, in which I planted and rooted this tree. I made them rejoice together, and I rejoiced in them.

"Who was with Me?" To whom have I revealed this mystery?

23. Rabbi Rahumai said: From your words we could conclude that the needs of this world were created before the heavens.

He answered yes.

What does this resemble? A king wanted to plant a tree in his garden. He searched the entire garden to find a spring flowing with water that would nourish the tree, but could not find any. He then said, "I will dig for water, and will bring forth a spring to nourish the tree." He dug and opened a well, flowing with living water. He then planted the tree, and it stood, giving forth fruit. It was successfully rooted, since it was always watered from the well.

24. Rabbi Yanai said: The earth was created first, as it is written (Genesis 2:4), "[On the day that God made} earth and heaven."

They said to him: Is it not written (Genesis 1:1), "[In the beginning God created] the heaven and the earth"?

He replied: What is this like? A king bought a beautiful object, but since it was not complete, he did not give it a name. He said, "I will complete it, I will prepare its pedestal and attachment, and then I will give it a name."

It is thus written (Psalm 102:26), "From eternity You founded the earth" -- and then, "the heavens are the work of Your hands."

It is furthermore written (Psalm 104:2), "He covered Himself with light like a garment, He spread out the heaven like a curtain, He rafters His upper chambers with water." It is then written (Psalm 104:4), "He makes the winds His angels, His ministers of flaming fire."

Finally, it is written (Psalm 104:5), "He founded the earth on its pedestals, that it not be removed for the world and forever."

When He made its pedestal, He strengthened it. It is therefore written, "that it not be moved."

What is its name? "And Forever (VoEd) is its name. And [the name of] its pedestal is "World" (Olam). It is therefore written, "for the World And Forever."

25. Rabbi Berachiah said:

What is the meaning of the verse (Genesis 1:3), And God said, 'Let there be light,' and there was light"? Why does the verse not say, "And it was so"?

What is this like? A king had a beautiful object. He puts it away until he had a place for it, and then he put it there.

It is therefore written, "Let there be light, and there was light." This indicates that it already existed.

26. Rabbi Amorai said: What is the meaning of the verse (Exodus 15:3), "God is a man (Ish) of war"?

Mar Rahumai said to him: Great master, do not ask about something that is so simple. Listen to me and I will advise you.

He said to him: What is this like? A king had a number of beautiful dwellings, and he gave each one a name. One was better than the other. He said, "I will give my son this dwelling whose name is Aleph. This one whose name is Yod is also good, as is this one whose name is Shin." What did he do then? He gathered all three together, and out of them he made a single name and a single house.

He said: How long will you continue to conceal your meaning?

The other replied: My son, Aleph is the head. Yod is second to it. Shin includes all the world.

Why does Shin include all the world? Because with it one writes an answer (T'shuvah).

27. The students asked him: What is the letter Daleth?

He replied: What is this like? Ten kings were in a certain place. All of them were wealthy, but one was not quite as wealthy as the others. Even though he is still very wealthy, he is poor (Dal) in relation to the others.

28. They said to him: What is the letter Heh?

He grew angry and said: Did I not teach you not to ask about a later thing and then about an earlier thing?

They said: But Heh comes after [Daleth].

He replied: The order should be Gimel Heh. Why is it Gimel Daleth? Because it must be Daleth Heh.

And why is the order Gimel Daleth?

He said to them: Gimel is in the place of Daleth, on its head it is in the place of Heh. Daleth with its tail is in place of the Heh.

29. What is the letter Vav?

He said: There is an upper Heh and a lower Heh.

30. They said to him: But what is Vav?

He said: The world was sealed with six directions.

They said: Is not Vav a single letter?

He replied: It is written (Psalm 104:2), "He wraps Himself in light as a garment, [he spreads out the heavens like a curtain]."

31. Rabbi Amorai asked: Where is the Garden of Eden?

He replied: It is on earth.

32. Rabbi Ishmael expounded to Rabbi Akiba:

What is the meaning of the verse (Genesis 1:1), "[In the beginning God created] (et) the heaven and (et) the earth"? [Why is the word et added in both places?]

If the word et (an untranslated preposition that connects a transitive verb to its predicate noun) were absent, we would think that "heaven" and "earth" were gods. [For we could have read the verse, "In the beginning, God, the heaven and the earth created..." taking all three nouns as subjects of the sentence.]

He replied: By the Divine Service! You may have reached out for the true meaning, but you have not sorted out, and therefore you speak in this manner. But [in the case of "heaven"] the word et comes to include the sun, moon, stars and constellations, while [in the case of "earth"] it comes to add trees, plants, and the Garden of Eden.

33. They said to him: It is written (Lamentations 2:1), "He threw the beauty of Israel from heaven to earth." From here we see that it fell.

He replied: If you have read, you did not review, and if you reviewed, you did not go over it a third time. What does it resemble? A king had a beautiful crown on his head and a beautiful cloak on his shoulders. When he heard evil tidings, he cast the crown from his head and the cloak from his shoulders.

34. They asked him: Why is the letter Cheth open? And why is its vowel point a small Patach?

He said: Because all directions (Ruach-ot) are closed, except for the North, which is opened for good and for evil.

They said: How can you say that it is for good? It is not written (Ezekiel 1:4), "And behold, a stormy wind coming from the north, a great cloud and burning fire." Fire is nothing other than fierce anger, as it is written (Leviticus 10:2), "And fire went out from before God, and it consumed them and killed them."

He said: There is no difficulty. One case is speaking of when Israel does the will of God, while the other is speaking of when they do not do His will. When Israel does not do His will, then the fire comes close [to destroy and punish]. But when they do God's will, then the Attribute of Mercy encompasses and surrounds it, as it is written (Micah 7:18), "He lifts up sin and passes over rebellion."

35. What is this like? A king wanted to punish and whip his slaves. One of his governors stood up and asked the reason for this punishment. When the king described the offence, the governor said, "Your slaves never did such a thing. I will be their bondsman until you investigate it more thoroughly." In the meantime, the king's anger was calmed.

36. His students asked: Why is the letter Daleth thick on the side?

He replied: Because of the Segol which is in the small Patach.

It is thus written (Psalms 24:7), "The openings (pitcher) of the World." There He placed a Patach above and a Segol below. It is for this reason that it is thick.

37. What is the Patach? It is an opening (Petach).

What is meant by an opening? This is the direction of north, which is open to all the world. It is the gate from which good and evil emerge.

And what is good?

He mocked them and said: Did I not tell you that it is a small Patach (opening)?

They said: We have forgotten, teach us again.

He reviewed it and said: What is this like? A king had a throne. Sometimes he carried it on his arm, and sometimes on his head.

They asked why, and he replied: Because it is beautiful and it is a pity to sit on it.

They asked: Where did he place it on his head?

He replied: In the open Mem. It is thus written (Psalms 85:12), "Truth sprouts up from the earth, and the righteousness looks down from heaven."

38. Rabbi Amora sat and expounded:

What is the meaning of the verse (Psalms 87:2), "God loves the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob."

"The gates of Zion" are the "openings of the World."

A gate is nothing other than an opening. We thus say, "Open for us the gates of mercy."

God said: I love the "gates of Zion" when they are open. Why? Because they are on the side of evil. But when Israel does good before God and are worthy that good be opened for them, then God loves them -- "more than all the dwellings of Jacob."

["The dwellings of Jacob"] are all peace, as it is written (Genesis 25:27), "Jacob was a simple man, dwelling in tents.

39. This is like two men, one who is inclined to do evil and does good, and the other who is inclined to do good and does evil.

Who is more praiseworthy? The one who is inclined to do evil and does good, for he may do good again.

It is therefore written (Psalm 87:2), "God loves the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." These [dwellings] are all peace, as it is written (Genesis 25:27), "Jacob was a simple man, dwelling in tents."

40. His students asked: What is Cholem?

He replied: It is the soul -- and its name is Cholem.

If you listen to it, your body will be vigorous (Chalam) in the Ultimate Future. But if you rebel against it, there will be sickness (Choleh) on your head, and diseases (Cholim) on its head.

41. They also said: Every dream (Chalom) is in the Cholem.

Every white precious stone is in the Cholem. It is thus written [with regard to the High Priest's breastplate] (Exodus 28:19), "[And in the third row...] a white stone (aChLaMah)."

42. He said to them: Come and hear the fine points regarding the vowel points found in the Torah of Moses.

He sat and expounded: Chirek hates evildoers and punishes them. Its side includes jealousy, hatred and competition.

It is thus written (Psalm 37:12), "He gnashes (Chorek) his teeth at them." Do not read chorek (gnashes), but rochek (repels).

Repel (rachek) these traits from yourself, and repel yourself from evil. Good will then certainly attach itself to you.

43. Chirek. Do not read ChiRiK but KeRaCh (Ice). Whatever the Chirek touches becomes ice. It is thus written (Exodus 34:7), "and cleanses."

44. What is the indication that Chirek has the connotation of burning?

This is because it is fire that burns all fire. It is thus written (1 Kings 18:38), "And God's fire fell, and it consumed the burnt offering, the wood, the stones, the dust, and evaporated the water that was in the trench."

The Bahir

Section III

The Seven Voices and the Sephiroth

45. He (Rabbi Amorai) said:

What is the meaning of the verse (Exodus 20:15), “And all the people saw the voices.” These are the voice regarding which King David spoke.

It is thus written (Psalms 29:3), “The voice of God is upon the waters, the God of glory thunders.” [This is the first voice.]

[The second voice is] (Psalms 29:4), “The voice of God comes in strength.” Regarding this it is written (Isaiah 10:13), “By the strength of my hand have I done it.” It is likewise written (Isaiah 48:13), “Also My Hand has founded the earth.”

[The third voice is] (Psalms 29:4), “The voice of God is with majesty.” It is also written (Psalms 111:3), “Splendour and majesty are His works, his righteousness stands forever.”

[The fourth voice is] (Psalms 29:5), “God’s voice breaks the cedars.” This is the bow that breaks the cypress and cedar trees.

[The fifth voice is] (Psalms 29:7), “God’s voice draws out flames of fire.” This is what makes peace between water and fire. It draws out the power of the fire and prevents it from evaporating the water. It also prevents [the water] from extinguishing it.

[The sixth voice is] (Psalms 29:8), “God’s voice shakes the desert.” It is thus written (Psalms 18:51) “He does kindness to his Messiah, to David and his descendants until eternity” – more than [when Israel was] in the desert.

[The seventh voice is] (Psalms 29:9), “God’s voice makes hinds to calf, strips the forests bare, and in His Temple, all say Glory.” It is thus written (Song of Songs 2:7) “I bind you with an oath, O daughters of Jerusalem, with the hosts, or with the hinds of the field.”

This teaches us that the Torah was given with seven voices. In each of them the Master of the universe revealed Himself to them, and they saw Him. It is thus written, “And all the people saw the voices.”

46. One verse states (2 Samuel 22:10), “He bent the heavens and came down, with gloom under His feet.” Another verse says (Exodus 19:20) “And God came down on Mount Sinai, to the top of the mountain.”

Still another verse, however, (Exodus 20:22) states “From heaven I spoke to you.”

How is this reconciled? His “great fire” was on earth, and this was one voice. The other voices were in heaven.

It is thus written (Deuteronomy 4:36), “From the heavens He let you hear His voice, that He might instruct you. And on the earth He showed you His great fire, and His words you heard from the fire.”

Which [fire] was that? It was the “great [fire]” that was on the earth.]

From where did the speech emanate? From this fire, as it is written, “and His words you heard from the fire.”

47. What is the meaning of the verse (Deuteronomy 4:12), “You saw no form, only a voice”?

The Bahir

This was explained when Moses said to Israel (Deuteronomy 4:15), “You did not see an entire image.” You saw an image, but not an “entire image.”

What is this like? A king stands before his servants wrapped in a white robe. Even though he is far away, they can still hear his voice. This is true even though they cannot see his throat when he speaks. In a similar manner, they saw an image, but not an “entire image”.

It is therefore written, “You saw no form, only a voice.” It is also written (Deuteronomy 4:12) “A voice of words you heard.”

48. One verse (Exodus 20:15), states, “and all the people saw the voices.” Another verse, however, (Deuteronomy 4:12) states, “The voice of words you heard.” How can [the two be reconciled]?

At first they saw the voices. What did they see? The seven voices mentioned by David. But in the end they heard the word that emanated from them all.

But we have learned that there were ten.

Our sages taught that they were all said with a single word.

But we have said that there were seven.

There were seven voices. Regarding three of them it is written (Deuteronomy 4:12), “The voice of words you heard, but you saw no form, only a voice.” This teaches us that they were all said with a single word.

This is so that Israel should not make a mistake and say, “Others helped him. It might have been one of the angels. But His voice alone could not be so powerful.” It was for this reason that he came back and included them [in a single word].

49. Another explanation:

It was so that the world should not say that since there were ten sayings for ten kings, it might be that He could not speak for them all through one. He therefore said (Exodus 20:2), “I am [the Lord your God],” which included all ten.

What are the ten kings? They are the seven voices and three sayings (Amarim).

What are the sayings? [They are the ones alluded to in the verse] (Deuteronomy 26:18) “God has said for you today.”

“What are the three? [Two are mentioned in the verse] (Proverbs 4:7), “The beginning is Wisdom: acquire Wisdom, with all your acquisition, acquire Understanding.”

It is thus written (Job 32:8), “The soul of Shaddai gives them Understanding.” The soul of Shaddai is what gives them Understanding.

What is the third one?

As the old man said to the child, “What is hidden from you, do not seek, and what is concealed from you, do not probe. Where you have authority, seek to understand, but you have nothing to do with mysteries.”

50. We have learned (Proverbs 25:2), “The glory of God is to hide a word.”

What is “a word”? That of which it is written (Psalms 119:160), “The Beginning of Your word is truth.”

[It is also written] (Proverbs 25:2), “The glory of kings is to probe a word.”

What is this “word”? That of which it is written (Proverbs 25:11), “A word spoken in its proper place (Aphen-av)”, do not read “its proper place” (Aphen-av), but “its wheel” (Ophen'av).

The Bahir

51. The students asked Rabbi Berachiah, "Let us discuss these words with you," but he would not give them permission. Once, however, he did give them permission, but he did so to test them, to see if they would now pay good attention.

One day he tested them and said, "Let me hear your wisdom."

They began and said:

"In the beginning" is one.

[Two is] (Isaiah 57:16), "The spirit that unwraps itself is from Me, and I have made souls."

[Three is] (Psalms 65:10), "The divisions of God are filled with water."

What are these "divisions?" You taught us, our master, that God took the waters of creation and separated them, placing half in the skies and half in the ocean. This is the meaning of "the divisions of God are filled with water."

Through them, man studies the Torah.

Rabbi Chama thus taught: Because of the merit of deeds of kindness, a person can study the Torah. It is thus written (Isaiah 55:1), "Ho, let all who are thirsty come for water, let him without silver come, stock up and eat." Go to Him, and He will do kindness with you, and you will "stock up and eat."

52. "Let him without silver come" can also be explained in another way. Let him come to God, for He has silver. It is thus written (Haggai 2:8), "Mine is the silver, and Mine is the gold."

What is the meaning of the verse, "Mine is the silver, and Mine is the gold"?

What is this like? A king had two treasuries, one of silver, and one of gold. He placed that of silver to his right, and that of gold to his left. He said [of the silver], "This should be ready, and easy to take out."

He keeps his words calm. He is attached to the poor and directs them calmly. It is thus written (Exodus 15:6), "Your right hand, O God, is mighty in power."

If he rejoices in his portion, then all is well. If not, then (Exodus 15:6), "Your right hand, O God, crumbles the enemy."

He said to them: This is referring to the gold. It is thus written, "Mine is the silver, and Mine is the gold."

53. Why is [gold] called Zahav? Because it includes three attributes, [alluded to in its three letters, Zayin, Heh, Beth].

[The first attribute is] Male, (Zachar). This is the Zayin.

[The second is] the Soul. This is the Heh. [The numerical value of Heh is five, alluding to] the five names of the soul: Nephesh, Ruach, Neshamah, Chiah, Yechidah.

What is the purpose the Heh? It is a throne for the Zayin. It is thus written (Ecclesiastes 5:7), "For one above the other watches."

The Beth is its sustenance. It is thus written (Genesis 1:1), "In (Beth) the beginning [God] created..."

54. What is its function here?

What is this like? A king once had a daughter who was good, pleasant, beautiful and perfect. He married her to a royal prince, and clothed, crowned and bejewelled her, giving her much money.

Is it possible for the king to ever leave his daughter? You will agree that it is not. Is it ever possible for him to be with her constantly? You will also agree that it is not. What can he then do? He can place a window between the two, and whenever the father needs the daughter, or the daughter needs the father, they can come together through the window. It is thus written (Psalms 45:14), “All glorious is the king’s daughter inside, her garment is interwoven with gold.”

55. What is the Beth at the end? [As it is written] (Proverbs 24:3), “With wisdom will the house (Bayit) be built.”

The verse does not say “was built”, but “will be built”. In the future God will build and decorate it, thousands of times more than it was.

It is as we have said: Why does the Torah begin with a Beth? As it is written (Proverbs 8:30), “I was with Him as a craftsman, I was His delight for a day, a day, [frolicking before Him at every time].” These are the two thousand years, which are the “beginning”.

Two? But the scripture says seven, as it is written (Isaiah 30:26), “The light of the moon shall be like the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold [like the light of the seven days.]” And we said, “Just like the sun was for seven, so the moon was for seven.” [He replied,] “I said thousands.”

56. They said to him: Up until now there are five. What comes next?

He replied: First I will explain gold. What is gold? We learn that it is where justice emanates. If you bend your words to the right or left, you will be punished.

57. What is the meaning of the verse (Isaiah 30:26), “The light of the moon shall be like the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, like the light of the seven days.”

The verse does not say “seven days,” but “the seven days.” These are the days regarding which it is written (Exodus 31:17), “For six days God made [the heaven and the earth].” As you said, God made six beautiful vessels. What are they? “The heaven and the earth.” Are they not seven? Yes, as it is written (ibid.) “And on the seventh day, He rested and souled.”

What is the meaning of “souled?” This teaches us that the Sabbath sustains all souls. It is therefore written that it souled.

58. Another explanation:

This teaches us that it is from there that souls fly forth. It is thus written, “and He souled.” This continues for a thousand generations. It is thus written (Psalms 105:8), “The word that He commanded until a thousand generations.”

Immediately after this it says, “[the covenant] that He cut with Abraham.”

What is the meaning of “cut”? He cut a covenant between the ten fingers of his hands and the ten toes of his feet.

Abraham was ashamed. God then said to him (Genesis 17:4), “And I, behold My covenant is with you,” and with it, “you will be the father of many nations.”

59. Why is heaven called Shamayim?

This teaches that God kneaded fire and water, and combined them together. From this He made the “beginning of His word.” It is thus written (Psalms 119:160), “The beginning of your word is truth.”

It is therefore called Shamayim – Sham Mayim (there is water) – Esh Mayim (fire water). He said to them: This is the meaning of the verse (Job 25:2), “He makes peace in His heights.” He placed peace and love between them. May He also place peace and love among us.

60. We also say (Psalms 119:164), “seven times each day I praised You for Your righteous judgement.”

They asked him, “What are they?”

He replied, “You do not look at it carefully. Be precise and you will find them.”

61. They asked him, “What is the letter Tzaddi?”

He said: Tzaddi is a Nun and a Yod. Its mate is also a Nun and a Yod.

It is thus written (Proverbs 10:25), “The righteous (Tzadik) is the foundation of the world.”

62. They asked him: What is the meaning of the verse [with regard to Balak and Balaam] (Numbers 23:14), “And he took him to the field of the seers.”?

What is the “field of the seers”? As it is written (Song of Songs 7:12), “Come my beloved, let us go out to the field.”

Do not read Sadeh (the field), but Sidah (carriage).

What is this carriage? He said, “The Heart of the Blessed Holy One.”

His heart said to the Blessed Holy One, “Come my beloved, let us go out to the carriage to stroll. It will not constantly sit in one place.”

63. What is his heart?

He said: If so, Ben Zoma is outside, and you are with him.

The heart (Lev) [in numerical value] is thirty-two. These are concealed, and with them the world was created.

What these 32?

He said: These are the 32 Paths.

This is like a king who was in the innermost of many chambers. The number of such chambers was 32, and to each one there was a path. Should the king bring everyone to his chamber through these paths? You will agree that he should not. Should he reveal his jewels, his tapestries, his hidden and concealed secrets? You will again agree that he should not. What then does he do? He touches the Daughter, and includes all the paths in her and in her garments.

One who wants to go inside should gaze there.

He married her to a king, and also gave her to him as a gift. Because of his love for her, he sometimes calls her “my sister,” since they are both from one place. Sometimes he calls her his daughter, since she is actually his daughter. And sometimes he calls her “my mother.”

64. Furthermore, if there is no wisdom, then there is no justice.

It is thus written (1 Kings 5:26), “And God gave wisdom to Solomon.” He then judged the case [of the two mothers and the infant] correctly, and it is then written (1 Kings 3:28), “And all Israel of the judgement that the King had judged, and they feared the king, for they say that the wisdom of God was in him to do judgement.”

65. And what wisdom did God give to Solomon?

Solomon had God’s name. We have thus said that whenever Solomon is mentioned in the Song of Songs, it is a holy name, except in one case.

God said to him, “Since your name is like the name of My Glory, I will let you marry my daughter.”

But she is married!

Let us say that He gave her to him as a gift. It is thus written (1 Kings 5:26), “And God gave wisdom to Solomon.”

Here, however, it is not explained. Where then is it explained? When the scripture states (1 Kings 3:28), “For they saw that the wisdom of God was in him to do judgement.” We then see that the wisdom that God gave him was such that he could “do judgement.”

What is the meaning of “to do judgement?” As long as a person does judgement, God’s wisdom is inside him. This is what helps him and draws him near. If not, it repels him, and not only that, but it also punishes him. It is thus written (Leviticus 26:28), “I will chastise you, also I.”

66. And Rabbi Rahumai said: What is the meaning of the verse (Leviticus 26:28), “[I will chastise you,] also I”?

God said, “I will chastise you.”

The Congregation of Israel said, “Do not think that I will seek mercy for you, but I will chastise you. Not only will I render judgement, but I will also chastise you.”

67. What is the meaning of (Leviticus 26:28), “[I will chastise you, also I], seven for your sins”?

The Congregation of Israel said: “I will chastise you, also I” – and also those regarding which it is written (Psalms 119:164), “Seven each day I praised You.”

They joined her and replied: Also us seven. Even though among us is the one who reverses itself, the one who oversees good and merit, we too will reverse ourselves and chastise.

Why? Because of your sins.

But if you return to Me, then I will return to you. It is thus written (Malachi 3:7), “Return to Me, and I will return to you.”

The scripture does not say, “I will bring you back to Me.” Instead it says, “I will return to you” – with you. We will all seek mercy from the King.

What does the King say? [He says] (Jeremiah 3:22), “Return you backsliding children, I will heal your backslidings.” [He also says] (Ezekiel 18:30), “Return and bring back.”

What is the meaning of the verse, “Return and bring back”? Come back and ask those Seven to return with you. The scripture therefore says, “and bring back” – those regarding which it is written, “seven for your sin.”

68. The disciples asked Rabbi Rahumai: What is the meaning of the verse (Habakkuk 3:1), “A prayer of Habakkuk the prophet, for errors.” A prayer? It should be called a praise [since it speaks of God’s greatness].

But whoever turns his heart from worldly affairs and delves in the Works of the Chariot* is accepted before God as if he prayed all day. It is therefore called “a prayer.”

What is the meaning of “for errors”? As it is written [regarding wisdom] (Proverbs 5:19), “With its love you shall always err.”

Regarding what is this speaking? The Works of the Chariot, as it is written (Habbakuk 3:2)

* i.e “Maaseh Merkavah” or Merkavah Mysticism which Kaplan says was synonymous with the Qabalah at the time the Bahir was first composed.

The Bahir

“O God, I heard a report of You and I feared.”

69. What is the meaning of, “I heard a report of You and I feared, [O God, bring to life Your works in the midst of the years]”?

Why does the verse say “I feared” after “I heard a report of You,” and not after “in the midst of the years”?

But it was “from the report of You” that “I feared.”

What is the “report of You”? It is the place where they listen to reports.

Why does the verse say “I heard” and not “I understood”? [The word “heard” has the connotation of understanding] as we find (Deuteronomy 38:49), “A nation whose language you do not hear.”

70. Why did he say “I feared”? Because the ear looks like the letter Aleph.

The Aleph is the first of all letters. Besides this, the Aleph causes all the letters to endure.

The Aleph looks like the brain.

When you mention the Aleph you open your mouth. The same is true of thought, when you extend your thoughts to the Infinite and Boundless.

From Aleph emanate all letters. Do we not see that it is first?

It is thus written (Micah 2:13), “God (YHVH) is at their head.” We have a rule that every Name that is written Yod He Vav He is specific to the Blessed Holy One and is sanctified with holiness.

What is the meaning of “with holiness”? This is the Holy Palace.

Where is the Holy Palace? We would say that it is in thought and in the Aleph.

This is the meaning of the verse, “I heard a report of You and I feared.”

71. Habakkuk therefore said: I know that my prayer is accepted with delight. I also delighted when I came to that place where I understood “a report of You and I feared.” Therefore, “Bring to life your works in the midst of the years” – through Your unity.

What is this like? A king who was talented, hidden and concealed went into his house and commanded that no one seek him. One who does seek is therefore afraid, lest the king find out that he has violated the king’s order. [Habakkuk] therefore said, “I feared, O God, bring to life Your works in the midst of the years.”

This is what Habakkuk said: Because Your name is in You, and You is Your name, “bring to life Your works in the midst of the years.” Thus will it be forever.

72. Another explanation of “Bring to life Your works in the midst of years”:

What is this like? A king had a beautiful pearl, and it was the treasure of his kingdom. When he is happy, he embraces it, kisses it, places it on his head, and loves it.

Habakkuk said: Even though Kings are with You, the beloved pearl is in Your world.

Therefore, “Bring to life Your works in the midst of years.”

What is the meaning of “years”? It is written (Genesis 1:3), “And God said, ‘Let there be light.’” Light is nothing other than day, as it is written (Genesis 1:16), “The great light to rule the day, and the small light to rule the night.”

Years are made from days.

It is thus written, “Bring to life Your works in the midst of years” – in the midst of that pearl that gives rise to years.

The Bahir

73. But it is written (Isaiah 43:5), “[Fear not, for I am with you,] I will bring your seed from the east.” The sun rises in the east, and you say that the pearl is day.

[He replied:] I am only speaking with regard to the verse (Genesis 1:5) “And it was evening and it was morning, day.” Regarding this it is written (Genesis 2:4), “In the day that God made earth and heaven.”

74. And it is written (Psalms 18:12), “He made darkness His hiding place round about, His Succah the darkness of waters, thick clouds of the skies (Shechakim).”

He said: Regarding this it is written (Isaiah 45:8), “The skies (Shechakim) pour down righteousness.”

This righteousness (Tzadik) is the Attribute of Judgement for the world. It is thus written (Deuteronomy 16:20), “Righteousness, righteousness shall you pursue.”

Immediately after this, it is written, “that you may live and occupy the land.” If you judge yourself, then you will live. If not, then it will judge you, and it will be fulfilled, even against your will.

75. Why does the Torah say “righteousness, righteousness” twice?

He said: Because the scripture continues (Psalms 18:13), “At the glow opposite Him.”

The first “righteousness” is literal righteousness (Tzedek). This is the Divine Presence [i.e. Shekinah]. It is thus written (Isaiah 1:21), “Righteousness dwells in it.”

What is the second “righteousness”? This is the righteousness that frightens the righteous. Is this righteousness charity (Tzadakah) or not?

He said that it is not.

Why? Because it is written (Isaiah 59:17), “He put on righteousness like a coat of mail, and [a helmet of salvation on His head].”

His head is nothing other than Truth. It is thus written (Psalms 119:160), “The head of Your word is truth.”

Truth is nothing other than peace. It is thus written [that King Hezekiah said] (Isaiah 39:8), “There shall be peace and truth in my days.”

Is it possible for a man to say this? But this is what Hezekiah said: The attribute that You gave to David my ancestor is half of my days, and peace and truth are half of my days. It is for this reason that he mentioned “my days.”

He mentioned both “peace and truth” and “in my days,” since it is all one. It is thus written (Genesis 1:5), “And it was evening, and it was morning, one day.”

[The day reconciles morning and evening, and is therefore peace.] Just as the day is peace, so he chose peace. It is therefore written (2 Kings 20:19), “Peace and truth shall be in my days.”

This shall be through the attribute that You gave to David. Regarding this, it is written (Psalms 89:37), “His throne shall be like the sun before Me.”

76. What is the meaning of the verse (Habakkuk 3:2), “In the midst of years make it known”?

He said: I know that You are the holy God, as it is written (Exodus 15:11), “Who is like You, mighty in holiness?” Holiness is in You and You are in holiness. Nevertheless, “in the midst of years make it known.”

What is the meaning of “make it known”? [This means] that You should have mercy. It is thus written (Exodus 2:25), “And God saw the children of Israel, and God knew.”

The Bahir

What is the meaning of, “and God knew”?

What is this like? A king had a beautiful wife, and had children from her. He loved them and raised them, but they went out to bad ways. He then hated both them and their mother.

The mother went to them and said, “My children! Why do you do this: Why do you make your father hate both you and me?” [She spoke to them in this manner] until they had remorse and did the will of their father.

When the king saw this, he loved them as much as he did in the beginning. He then also remembered their mother. This is the meaning of the verse, “And God saw... and God knew.”

This is also the meaning of the verse, “In the midst of years make it known.”

77. What is the meaning of the verse (Habakkuk 3:2) “In anger, you shall remember love (rachem)”?

He said: When Your children sin before You and You are angry at them, “remember love.”

What is the meaning of “remember love”? That regarding which it is written (Psalms 18:2), “I love (rachem) You O God, my strength.”

And You have him this attribute, which is the Divine Presence of Israel. He recalled his son whom he inherited, and whom You gave to him. It is thus written (I Kings 5:26), “And God gave wisdom to Solomon.”

And You should remember their father Abraham, as it is written (Isaiah 41:8), “The seed of Abraham My friend” – “In the midst of years make it known.”

78. Where do we see that Abraham had a daughter? It is written (Genesis 24:1), “And God blessed Abraham with all (Bakol).”

It is also written (Isaiah 43:7), “All that is called by My name, for My glory I created it, I formed it, also I made it.”

Was this blessing his daughter, or was it not?

Yes, it was his daughter.

What is this like? A king had a slave who was complete and perfect before him. The king tested the slave in many ways, but the slave withstood all temptation.

The King said, “What will I give that slave? What should I do for him? I can do nothing but command my older brother to advise him, watch over him and honour him.” The slave thus went to the older brother and learned his attributes. The brother loved him very much, and called him his friend. It is thus written (Isaiah 41:8), “The seed of Abraham My friend.”

He said, “What will I give him? What can I do for him? Behold I have made a beautiful vessel, and in it are beautiful jewels. There is nothing like it in the treasures of kings. I will give it to him, and he will be worthy in his place.”

This is the meaning of the verse, “And God blessed Abraham with all.”

79. Another explanation:

[It is written] (Habakkuk 3:2), “I heard a report of You and I feared.” [This means] “I understood what was reported about You and I feared.”

What did he understand? He understood God’s thought. Even [human] thought has no end, for man can think, and descend to the end of the world.

The ear also has no end and is not satiated. It is thus written (Ecclesiastes 1:8), “The ear is not satiated from hearing.”

Why is this so? Because the ear is in the shape of an Aleph. Aleph is the root of the Ten Commandments. Therefore “the ear is not satiated from hearing.”

The Bahir

80 What is the meaning of the letter Zayin in the word Ozen (ear)?

We have said that everything that the Blessed Holy One brought into His world has a name emanating from its concept. It is thus written (Genesis 2:19), “All that the man called each living soul, that was its name.” This teaches us that each thing’s body was thus.

And how do we know that each thing’s name is its body?

It is written (Proverbs 10:7), “The memory of the righteous shall be a blessing, and the name of the wicked shall rot.” What actually rots, their name or their body? [One must agree that it is their body.] Here too, [each thing’s name refers to] its body.

81 What is an example of this?

Take the word for root – Shoresh (Shin – Resh – Shin).

The letter Shin looks like the roots of a tree.

[Resh is bent, since] the root of every tree is bent.

And what is the function of the final Shin? This teaches us that if you take a branch and plant it, it will root again.

What is its function of the Zayin [in Ozen – ear]?

[Its numerical value is seven] corresponding to the seven days of the week. This teaches us that each day has its own power.

And what is its function [in the word Ozen]?

This teaches us that just like there is infinite wisdom in the ear, so is there power in all parts of the body.

82 What are the seven parts of man’s body?

It is written (Genesis 9:6), “In the form of God, He made man.” It is also written (Genesis 1:27), “In the form of God He made him” – counting all his limbs and parts.

But we have said: What does the letter Vav resemble? It is alluded to in the verse (Psalms 104:5), “He spreads out light like a garment.” For Vav is nothing other than the six directions.

He replied: The covenant of circumcision and man’s mate are considered as one.

His two hands then make three, his head and body, five, and his two legs make seven.

Paralleling all these are their powers in heaven. It is thus written (Ecclesiastes 7:14), “Also one opposite the other had God made.”

These are the days [of the week, as it is written] (Exodus 31:17), “Because six days God made the heaven and the earth.” The scripture does not say “in six days,” but rather, “six days.” This teaches us that each day [of the week] has its own specific power.

83 What is the significance of the Nun [in the word Ozen]?

This teaches us that the brain is the main part of the spinal cord. It constantly draws from there, and if not for the spinal cord, the brain could not endure. And without the brain, the body could not endure.

The entire body exists only in order to provide for the needs of the brain. And if the body did not endure, then the brain would also not endure.

The spinal cord is the channel from the brain to the entire body. It is represented by the bent Nun.

But [in the word Ozen] the Nun is a straight one.

The Bahir

The straight Nun is the one that is always at the end of a word. This teaches us that the straight Nun includes both the bent one and the straight one.

But the bent Nun is the Foundation. This teaches us that the straight Nun includes both male and female.

84. The open Mem. What is the open Mem?

It includes both male and female.

What is the closed Mem?

It is made like a belly from above.

But Rabbi Rahumai said that the belly is like the letter Teth.

He said it is like a Teth on the inside, while I say that it is like a Mem on the outside.

85 What is a Mem?

Do not read Mem, but Mayim (water). Just like water is wet, so is the belly always wet.

Why does the open Mem include both male and female, while the closed Mem is male?

This teaches us that the Mem is primarily male. The opening was then added to it for the sake of the female.

Just like the male cannot give birth, so the closed Mem cannot give birth. And just like the female has an opening with which to give birth, so can the open Mem give birth. The Mem is therefore open and closed.

86. Why should the Mem have two forms, open and closed?

Because we said: Do not read Mem, but Mayim (Water).

The woman is cold, and therefore, must be warmed by the male.

Why should the Nun have two forms, bent and straight?

Because it is written (Psalm 72:17), "Before the sun shall his name reign (ya-Nun)."[This is] from two Nuns, the bent Nun and the straight Nun, and it must be through male and female.

87. It is written (Ecclesiastes 1:8), "The ear is not satiated from hearing." It is also written (Ecclesiastes 1:8), "The eye is not satiate from seeing." This teaches us that both draw from thought.

What is thought?

It is a king that is needed by all things that were created in the world, both above and below.

88. What is the meaning of the expression, "It rose in thought"? Why do we not say that "it descended [in thought]"?

Indeed, we have said, "One who gazes into the vision of the Chariot first descends and then ascends."

We use the expression [of descent] there because we say, "One who gazes into the vision (Tzafayat) of the Chariot." The Aramaic translation of "vision" (Tzafiyat) is Sechuta [meaning a covering, and alluding to the fact that one is looking down from above]. It is also written (Isaiah 21:8), "And he called as a lion: 'Upon the watchtower (Mitzpeh), O God.'" Here, however, we are speaking of thought, [and therefore only speak of ascent]. For thought does not include any vision, and has no ending whatsoever. And anything that has no end or limit does not have any descent.

People therefore say, "Someone descended to the limit of his friend's knowledge." One can arrive at the limit of a person's knowledge, but not at the limit of his thought.

89. Rabbi Amoraï sat and expounded:

What is the meaning of the Segol? Its name is Segulah (treasure). It comes after the Zarka. What is the meaning of Zarka?

It is like its name – something that is thrown (ni Zrak). It is like something that is thrown, and after it comes (Ecclesiastes 2:8), “the treasures of kings and lands.”

90. What is the reason that it is called Zarka?

It is written (Ezekiel 3:12), “Blessed is the glory of God from His place.” This indicates that no being knows His place. We recite [God's] name of the Crown, and it goes to the head of the Owner. It is thus written [regarding God] (Genesis 14:19), “Owner of heaven and earth.” When it goes, it is like it is thrown (Zarka). Following it is treasure (Segulah). It is at the head of all letters.

91. Why is [this accent] at the end of a word, and not at the beginning?

This teaches us that this Crown rises higher and higher.

It is included and crowned, as it is written (Psalms 118:22), “The stone that the builders rejected has become the head cornerstone.” It ascend to the place from which it was graven, as it is written (Genesis 49:24), “From there is the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel.”

92. He also said:

What is the reason that we place blue wool in the Tzitzit? And why are there 32 [threads]? What is this like? A king had a beautiful garden, and in it were 32 paths. He placed a watchman over them to show that all these paths belong to him alone. [The king] said to him, “Watch them, and walk upon them every day. As long as you walk these paths, you will have peace.”

What did the watchman do? He appointed other watchmen [as his assistants to watch] over them. He said, “If I remain alone on these paths, it is impossible for me, a single watchman, to maintain them all. Besides that, people may say that I am the king.” The watchman therefore placed his assistants over all the paths. These are the 32 paths.

93. What is the reason for the blue?

The watchman said, “Perhaps those assistant watchmen will say that the garden belongs to us.” He therefore gave them a sign, and told them, “See this. It is the sign of the king, indicating that the garden belongs to him. He is the one who made these paths, and they are not mine. This is his deal.”

What is this like? A king and his daughter had slaves, and they wanted to travel abroad. But [the slaves] were afraid, being in terror of the king. He therefore gave them his sign. They were also afraid of the daughter, and she [also] gave them a sign. They said, “From now on, with these two signs, ‘God will watch you from all evil, He will safeguard your soul.’”

94. Rabbi Amoraï sat and expounded:

What is the meaning of the verse (1 Kings 8:27), “Behold the heaven and the heaven of heaven cannot contain You”?

This teaches us that the Blessed Holy One has 72 names.

All of them were placed in the Tribes [of Israel]. It is thus written (Exodus 28:10), “Six of their names on one stone, and the names of the other six on the other stone, according to their generations.”

It is also written (Joshua 4:9), “He raised up twelve stones.” Just like the first are (Exodus 28:12), “stones of memorial,” so these are (Joshua 4:7), “stones of memorial.”

[There are therefore] 12 stones [each containing six names] making a total of 72. These parallel the 72 names of the Blessed Holy One.

Why do they begin with twelve? This teaches us that God has twelve Directors. Each of these has six Powers [making a total of 72].

What are they? They are the 72 languages.

95. The Blessed Holy One has a single Tree, and it has twelve diagonal boundaries:

The northeast boundary, the southeast boundary;

The upper east boundary, the lower east boundary;

The southwest boundary, the northwest boundary;

The upper west boundary, the lower west boundary;

The upper south boundary, the lower south boundary;

The upper north boundary, the lower north boundary;

They continually spread forever and ever;

They are the arms of the world.

On the inside of them is the Tree. Paralleling these diagonals there are twelve Functionaries.

Inside the Sphere there are also twelve Functionaries.

Including the diagonals themselves, this makes a total of 36 Functionaries.

Each of these has another. It is thus written (Ecclesiastes 5:7), “For one above another watches.” [This makes a total of 72.]

It therefore comes out that the east has nine, the west has nine, the north has nine, and the south has nine.

These are twelve, twelve, twelve, and they are the Functionaries in the Axis, the Sphere, and the Heart.

Their total is 36. The power of each of these 36 is in every other one.

Even though there are twelve in each of the three, they are all attached to each other.

Therefore, all 36 Powers are in the first one, which is the Axis. And if you seek them in the Sphere, you will find the very same ones. And if you seek them in the Heart, you will again find the very same ones.

Each one therefore has 36. All of them do not have more than 36 forms.

All of them complete the Heart [which has a numerical value of 32]. Four are then left over.

Add 32 to 32 and the sum is 64. These are the 64 Forms.

How do we know that 32 must be added to 32? Because it is written (Ecclesiastes 5:7), “For one above another watches, [and there are higher ones above them].”

We thus have 64, eight less than the 72 names of the Blessed Holy One. These are alluded to in the verse, “there are higher ones above them,” and they are the seven days of the week.

But one is still missing. This is referred to in the next verse (Ecclesiastes 5:8), “The advantage of the land in everything is the King.”

What is this “advantage”? This is the place from which the earth was graven. It is an advantage over what existed previously.

And what is this advantage? Everything in the world that people see is taken from its radiance. Then it is an advantage.

The Bahir

96. What is the earth from which the heavens were graven?

It is the Throne of the Blessed Holy One. It is the Precious Stone and the Sea of Wisdom. This parallels the blue in the Tzitzit.

Rabbi Meir thus said: Why is blue chosen above all other colours [for the Tzitzit]? Because the blue resembles the sea, the sea resembles the sky,^l and the sky resembles the Throne of Glory. It is thus written (Exodus 24:10), “They saw the God of Israel, and under His feet was like a pavement of sapphire, like the essence of heaven in clarity.” It is furthermore written (Ezekiel 1:26), “As the likeness of a sapphire stone was the appearance of a Throne.”

97. Rabbi Berachiah sat and expounded:

What is the meaning of the verse (Exodus 25:2), “And they shall take for Me a lifted offering (Terumah)”? It means, “Lift Me up with your prayers.”

And whom? Those whose “hearts make them willing.” These are the ones who are willing to draw themselves away from this world.

Honour him, for it is in him that I rejoice, since he knows My name. From him it is fitting to take My lifted offering, as it is written (Exodus 25:2), “from each man whose heart makes him willing, you shall take My lifted offering.” From he who makes himself willing.

Rabbi Rahumai said: [This refers to] the righteous and pious in Israel who raise Me over all the world through their merit. From them the Heart is sustained, and the Heart sustains them.

98. And all the Holy Forms oversee all the nations. But Israel is holy, taking the Tree itself and its Heart.

The Heart is the beauty (hadar) of the fruit of the body. Similarly, Israel takes (Leviticus 23:40), “the fruit of a beautiful (hadar) tree.”

The date palm is surrounded by its branches all around it and has its sprout (Lulav) in the centre. Similarly, Israel takes the body of this Tree which is its Heart.

And paralleling the body is the spinal cord, which is the main part of the body.

What is the Lulav? [It can be written] Lo Lev – “it has a heart.” The heart is also given over to it.

And what is this Heart? It is the 32 Hidden paths of Wisdom that are hidden in it.

In each of their paths there is also a Form watching over it. It is thus written (Genesis 3:24), “To watch the way of the Tree of Life.”

99. What are these Forms? They are that regarding which it is written (Genesis 3:24), “And He placed the Cherubim to the east of the Garden of Eden, and the flame of a sword revolving, to guard the way of the Tree of Life.”

What is the meaning of, “He placed to the east (kedem) of the Garden of Eden”? He placed it in those paths that preceded (kadmu) the place that was called the Garden of Eden. It was also before the Cherubim, as it is written, “the Cherubim.” It was furthermore before the flame, as it is written, “the flame of a sword revolving.”

Is it then before [the flame]? Heaven is called Shamayim, indicating that fire and water existed before it. It is written (Genesis 1:6), “Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it be a division between water and water.” It is then written (Genesis 1:8), “And God called the firmament heaven (Shamayim).”

How do we know that the heaven is fire? It is written (Deuteronomy 4:24), “For the Lord your God is a consuming fire, a jealous God.”

The Bahir

100. And how do we know that “” refers to the Blessed Holy One?

It is written (1 Kings 8:36), “And you, O Heaven, shall hear.” Was Solomon then praying to heaven that it should hear their prayers? But [we must say] he was praying to the One whose name is Heaven.

It is thus written (1 Kings 8:27), “Behold the heaven and the heaven of heaven cannot contain You.” This is the name of the Blessed Holy One.

You therefore have fire. How can you then say that it was before?

But we must say that their Power existed before the Forms of that place. Only then did these Holy Forms come into existence.

What is their Power? It is that regarding which it is written (1 Samuel 2:2), “There is none holy like God, there is none other than You, and there is no Former like our God.”

101. Rabbi Berachiah sat and expounded:

What is the Lulav that we discuss? It is the 36 (Lu) given over to 32 (Lav).

And how?

He replied: There are three Princes, the Axis, the Sphere and the Heart. Each one is twelve, and the three therefore constitute a sum of 36, through which the world is sustained. It is thus written (Proverbs 10:25), “And Righteous is the foundation of the world.”

102. We learned: There is a single pillar extending from heaven to earth, and its name is Righteous (Tzadik).

[This pillar] is named after the righteous. When there are righteous people in the world, then it becomes strong, and when there are not, it becomes weak.

It supports the entire world, as it is written, “And Righteous is the foundation of the world.” If it becomes weak, then the world cannot endure.

Therefore, even if there is only one righteous person in the world, it is he who supports the world. It is therefore written, “And a righteous one is the foundation of the world.”

You should therefore take My lifted offering from him first. Then (Exodus 25:3), “And this is the lifted offering that you should take from them” – from the rest. What is it? “Gold, silver and copper.”

103. Another explanation:

It is written (Exodus 25:2), “and they shall take for Me (Li) a lifted offering.” [Li (for Me) can also be read, “for the Yod.”] They shall take the Yod, which is the tenth, as a lifted offering to make it holy.

How do we know that the tenth is holy? Because it is written (Leviticus 27:32) “The tenth shall be holy to God.”

What is holy? That regarding which it is written (Ezekiel 44:30), “The beginning of all the first fruits ... and every lifted offering of every thing.”

It is furthermore written (Psalms 111:10), “The beginning of wisdom is the fear of God.” Do not read “is the fear” but “and the fear.” [The verse will then read, “The beginning is wisdom and the fear of God.”]

104. The disciples asked Rabbi Eliezer: Our master, what is the meaning of the verse (Exodus 13:2), “Sanctify to Me every first-born”? Does the Blessed Holy One then have a first-born?

He replied: “Sanctify to Me (Li) every first-born” refers to nothing other than the second level of holiness.

It is the name that is given to Israel, as it is written (Exodus 7:22), “My son, My first-born, Israel.”

To the extent that we can express it, He was with them [in Egypt] in the time of their oppression. It is therefore written (Exodus 4:27), “Send forth My son and he will serve Me.” [Here, only “My son” is mentioned,] and not “My first-born.”

Rabbi Rahumai said:

What is the meaning of the verse (Deuteronomy 22:7), “You shall surely send away the mother, and the children you shall take for yourself.” Why does it not say, “You shall surely send away the father”?

But the scripture says, “you shall surely send away the mother” in honour of the one who is called the Mother of the World. It is thus written (Proverbs 2:3), “For you shall call Understanding a Mother.”

105. What is the meaning of, “and the children you shall take for yourself”?

Rabbi Rahumai said: These are the children that she raised. And who are they? They are the seven days of creation, and the seven days of Succot.

Are the seven [days of Succot] then not the same as the seven days of the week?

The difference is that [the days of Succot] are more holy. Regarding them it is written (Leviticus 23:37), “holy convocations.”

But then, why not [also include the seven weeks before] Shavuot, since this is also called (Leviticus 23:21), “a holy convocation”?

He replied: Yes, but this is the one and the other is two. It is thus written (Exodus 12:16), “The first day shall be a holy convocation, and the seventh day shall be a holy convocation.”

He said:

Why is Shavuot one [day]?

Because the Torah was given to Israel on that day. And when the Torah was created in the beginning, the Blessed Holy One ruled His world alone with it. It is thus written (Psalms 111:10), “The beginning is wisdom, the fear of God.” [God] said [to it], “This being so, your holiness shall be yours by yourself.”

And what is Succot?

He replied: the letter Beth [which has the connotation of a house (Bayit)]. It is thus written (Proverbs 24:3), “With wisdom a house is built.”

And how do we know that Succot has the connotation of a house? As it is written (Genesis 33:17), “And Jacob travelled to Succot. He built himself a house, and for his livestock he built Succot (huts). Therefore he named the place Succot.”

106. Rabbi Berachiah sat and expounded:

What is the Axis (Teli)?

This is the likeness that is before the Blessed Holy One. It is thus written (Song of Songs 5:11), “His locks are curled (Taltalim).”

What is the Sphere? This is the Womb.

What is the Heart? It is that regarding which it is written (Deuteronomy 4:11), “unto the heart of heaven.” In it are included the 32 mystical paths of Wisdom.

107. What is the meaning of the verse (Numbers 6:24-26), “May God (YHVH) bless you and watch you. May God (YHVH) make His face shine on you and be gracious to you. May God (YHVH) lift His face to you and give you peace.”

The Bahir

This is the explicit Name of the Blessed Holy One. It is the Name containing twelve letters, as it is written, YHVH YHVH YHVH.

This teaches us that God's names consists of three troops. Each troop resembles the other, and each one's name is like [the other's] named. All of them are sealed with Yod He Vav He.

And how?

The [four letters] Yod He Vav He can be permuted 24 different ways, forming one troop.

This is, “May God (YHVH) bless you...”

In a similar manner, the second one, “May God (YHVH) make His face shine...” These are 24 names of the Blessed Holy One.

In a similar manner, the third one, “May God (YHVH) lift His face...” These are 24 names of the Blessed Holy One.

This teaches us that each army, with its leaders and officers, has 24. Multiply 24 by three and you have the 72 names of the Blessed Holy One.

These are the 72 names derived from the verses (Exodus 14:19-21), “And travelled... And came ... And stretched ...”

108. And who are the Officers? We learned that there are three.

Strength (Geburah) is the Officer of all the Holy Forms to the left of the Blessed Holy One. He is Gabriel.

The Officer of all the Holy Forms to His right is Michael.

In the middle is Truth. This is Uriel, the Officer of all the Holy Forms [in the centre].

Each Officer is over 24 Forms. But there is no reckoning of his troops, as it is written (Job 25:3), “Is there a number to His troops?”

But if so, then there are 72 plus 72 [making a total of 144].

He said: This is not the case. For when Israel brings a sacrifice before their Father in heaven, they are united together. This is the unification of our God.

109. Why is this sacrifice called a Karban [which means “bringing close”]?

Because it brings the Forms of the Holy Powers close. It is thus written (Ezekiel 37:17), “And you shall join one of them to the other, making one stick, and they shall become one in your hands.”

And why is [the sacrifice] called a “pleasant fragrance”?

Fragrance is only in the nose. The sense of smell is through breath, and this is nowhere but in the nose.

“Pleasant” (nicho'ach) means nothing other than “descending.” It is thus written (Leviticus 9:22), “And he descended,” and the Targum translates this as Ve-Nachit [having the same root as nicho'ach].

The fragrance-spirit descends and unifies itself with those Holy Forms, bringing itself close through the sacrifice. It is for this reason that [a sacrifice] is called a Karban.

110. There is a name that is derived from the three verses (Exodus 14:19-21), “And travelled ... And came ... And stretched...”

The letters of the first verse, “And travelled...” are arranged in this name in the order that they are in the verse.

The letters of the second verse, “And came ...” are arranged in the name in reverse order.

The Bahir

The letters of the third passage, “And stretched...” are arranged in the name in the same order as they occur in the verse, just like the case of the first verse.

Each of these verses has 72 letters.

Therefore, each of the names that is derived from these three sentences, “And travelled... And came... And stretched...” contains three letters.

These are the 72 names. They emanate and divide themselves into three sections, 24 to each section.

Over each of these sections is a higher Officer.

Each section has four directions to watch, east, west, north and south. The four directions then have a total of 24 forms. [This is true of the first section] as well as the second and the third.

All of them are sealed with YHVH, God of Israel, the living God, Shaddai, high and exalted, who dwells in eternity on high, whose Name is holy, YHVH. Blessed be the name of the glory of His kingdom forever and ever.

111. Rabbi Ahilai sat and expounded:

What is the meaning of the verse, “God (YHVH) is King, God (YHVH) was king, God (YHVH) will be King forever and ever.”?

This is the Explicit Name (Shem Ha Mephoresht), for which permission was given that it be permuted and spoken. It is thus written [regarding the above-mentioned Priestly Blessing] (Numbers 6:27), “And they shall place My name upon the children of Israel, and I will bless them.”

This refers to the Name containing twelve letters. It is the name used in the Priestly Blessing, “May God bless you...” It contains three names [each having four letters] making a total of twelve.

Its vowel points are Yapha'al Y'pha'oel Yiph'ol.

If one safeguards it and mentions it in holiness, then all his prayers are heard. And not only that, but he is loved on high and below, and immediately answered and helped.

This is the Explicit Name that was written on Aaron's forehead.

The Explicit Name containing 72 letters and the Explicit Name containing twelve letters were given over by the Blessed Holy One to [the angel] Mesamariah, who stands before the Curtain. He gave it to Elijah on Mount Carmel, and with them he ascended and did not taste death.

112. These are the Explicit Holy Exalted Names. There are twelve Names, one for each of the twelve tribes of Israel:

Ah-Tzitzah-ron

Aklithah-ron

Shemaqtharon

Demushah-ron

Ve-Tzaphtzaphithron

Hurmyron

Brach Yah-ron

Eresh Gadra-aon

Basavah Monahon

Chazhavayah

Havahayryhah

The Bahir

Ve-Harayth-hon

All of them are included in the Heart of heaven.

They include male and female. They are given over to the Axis, the Sphere and the Heart, and they are the wellsprings of Wisdom.

113. Rabbi Rahumai sat and expounded:

What are the twelve tribes of Israel?

But this teaches us that the Blessed Holy One has twelve rods [on high. The word Shevet is the same for both “tribe” and “rod.”]

What are they?

What is this like? A king had a beautiful fountain. All his brothers have no water other than this fountain, and could not endure thirst. What did he do? He made twelve pipes for the fountain, and named them after his brothers' children.

He then said to them, “If the sons are as good as their fathers, they will be worthy, and I will let water flow through the pipes. The fathers will then drink all they wish, and so will the sons. But if the sons are not worthy and do not do what is right in my eyes, then regarding this, these pipes will stand. I will give them water only on the condition that they give none to their children, since they do not obey my will.”

114. What is the meaning of the word Shevet [which has the connotation of both a tribe and a rod]?

It is something simple and not square.

What is the reason?

Because it is impossible to have one square inside another square. A circle inside a square can move. A square inside a square cannot move.

115. What are the things that are circular?

They are the vowel points in the Torah of Moses, for these are all round. They are to the letters like the soul, which lives in the body of man.

It is impossible for [man] to come [into this world] unless [the soul] endures within him. It is impossible for him to speak anything, great or small, without it.

In a similar manner, it is impossible to speak a word, great or small, without the vowel points.

116. Every vowel point is round, and every letter is square.

The vowel points are the life of the letters, and through them, the letters endure.

These vowel points come through the pipes to the letters through the fragrance of a sacrifice, which immediately descends. It is therefore called “A descending (pleasant) fragrance to God” – indicating that it descends to God.

This is the meaning of the verse (Deuteronomy 6:4), “Hear O Israel, the Lord is our God, the Lord is One.”

117. Rabbi Yochanan said:

What is the meaning of the verse (Exodus 15:3), “God is a man (Ish) of war, God (YHVH) is His name”?

Man (Ish) indicates a sign. The Targum thus renders, “God is a man of war,” as “God is the Master of victory in war.”

The Bahir

What is this Master?

Aleph is the first, the Holy Palace.

Do we then say that the Palace is holy? Instead we say, “the Palace of the Holy One.”

118. Yod is the Ten Sayings with which the world was created.

What are they? They are the Torah of Truth, which includes all worlds.

What is the Shin?

He said: It is the root of the tree. The letter Shin is like the root of a tree.

119. What is this tree that you mentioned?

He said: It represents the Powers of the Blessed Holy One, one above the other.

Just like a tree brings forth fruit through water, so the Blessed Holy One increases the Powers of the Tree through water.

What is the water of the Blessed Holy One?

It is wisdom. It is the souls of the righteous. They fly from the fountain to the great pip, ascend and attach themselves to the Tree.

Through what do they fly?

Through Israel. Why they are good and righteous, the Divine Presence dwells among them.

Their deeds then rest in the bosom of the Blessed Holy One, and He makes them fruitful and multiplies them.

120. How do we know that the Divine Presence is called Tzedek (Righteous)? It is written (Deuteronomy 33:26), “He who rides in the heavens is your help, and His majesty is in the skies (Shechakim).” It is also written (Isaiah 45:8), “The skies (Shechakim) run with Righteousness (Tzedek).”

Tzedek is the Divine Presence, as it is written (Isaiah 1:21), “Righteousness (Tzedek) dwells in it.”

Righteousness was given to David, as it is written, (Psalms 146:10), “May God reign forever, your God O Zion, for generation to generation.” It is also written (1 Chronicles 11:1), “Zion is the city of David.”

121. What is the meaning of “generation to generation”?

Rabbi Papias said: “A generation goes and a generation comes (Ecclesiastes 1:4).”

Rabbi Akiba said: “The generation came” – it already came.

122. What is this like? A king had slaves, and he dressed them with garments of silk and satin according to his ability. The relationship broke down, and he cast them out, repelled them, and took his garments away from them. They then went on their own way.

The king took the garments, and washed them well until there was not a single spot on them. He placed them with his storekeepers, bought other slaves, and dressed them with the same garments. He did not know whether or not the slaves were good, but they were [at least] worthy of garments that he already had and which had been previously worn.

[The verse continues] (Ecclesiastes 1:4), “But the earth stands forever.” This is the same as (Ecclesiastes 12:6), “The dust returns to the earth as it was, but the spirit returns to God who gave it.”

The Bahir

Section IV

The Ten Sephiroth

123. Rabbi Amoraï said:

What is the meaning of the verse (Leviticus 9:22), “And Aaron raised up his hands to bless the people, and he blessed them and he descended [from making the sin offering, the burnt offering, and the peace offerings].”?

Did he not already descend? But he descended “from making the sin offering, the burnt offering, and the peace offerings,” and then “Aaron raised up his hands to bless the people.” What is the meaning of this raising [of hands]?

It was because he had offered a sacrifice and brought them before their Father in heaven, as we have said. Those who offer sacrifice must elevate them, [and those who] unify them [must] unify them among these.

And; what are they? The people, as it is written “to the people.” [This means] “for the sake of the people.”

124. Why are the hands lifted when they are blessed in this manner?

It is because the hands have ten fingers, alluding to the Ten Sephiroth with which heaven and earth were sealed.

These parallel the Ten Commandments.

In these Ten are included the 613 Commandments. If you count the letters in the Ten Commandments, you will find that there are 613 letters.

They contain all 22 letters except Teth, which is missing in them.

What is the reason for this? This teaches us that Teth is the belly – and is not included among the Sephiroth.

125. Why are they called Sephiroth?

Because it is written (Psalms 19:2), “The heavens declare (me-Saprim) the glory of God.”

126. And what are they?

They are three. Among them are three troops and three dominions.

The first dominion is light. Light is the life of water.

The second dominion includes the Chaioth Ha-Qadesh, the Ophanim, the wheels of the Chariot, and all the troops of the Blessed Holy One. The bless, exalt, glorify, praise and sanctify the might King with the Kedushah. Arranged in the mystery of the great Kedushah is the fearsome and terrible King. And they crown Him with three “holies.”

127. Why are there three “holies” and not four?

Because the holiness on high is three by three. It is thus written, “God is King, God was King, God will be King forever and ever.”

It is also written (Numbers 6:24-26), “May God bless you... May God shine upon you... May God lift...”

The Bahir

It is furthermore written (Exodus 34:6), “God (YHVH), God (YHVH).” The third one includes the rest of God’s Attributes.

What are they? [As the verse continues], “God, merciful and gracious” – the thirteen Attributes [of Mercy].

128. [The Kedushah is the verse (Isaiah 6:3), “Holy holy holy is the Lord of Hosts, the whole earth is filled with His Glory.”]

What is the meaning of “holy holy holy”? [And why is it] followed by, “the Lord of Hosts, the whole earth is filled with His glory”?

The [first] “holy” is the highest Crown.

The [second] “holy” is the root of the Tree.

The [third] “holy” is attached and unified in them all.

[This is followed by], “the Lord of Hosts, the whole earth is filled with His glory.”

129. What is the “holy” that is attached and unified?

What is this like? A king had sons, who in turn also had sons. When the [grand]sons do his will, he mingles with them, supports them, and satisfies them all. He gives [his sons] everything good, so that they should be able to satisfy their children. But when the [grand]children do not do his will, then he only gives the fathers as much as they need.

130. What is the meaning of, “the whole earth is filled with His glory”?

This is the earth that was created on the first day. It is on high, filled with God’s glory and paralleling the Land of Israel.

And what is [this glory]? It is Wisdom, as it is written (Proverbs 3:35), “The wise shall inherit glory.”

131. What is “God’s glory”?

What is this like? A king had a matron in his chamber, and all his troops delighted in her. She had sons, and each day they came to see the king and to bless him.

They asked him, “Where is our mother?” He replied, “You cannot see her now.” They said, “Let her be blessed wherever she is.”

132. What is the meaning of “from His place”? This indicates that none know his place.

This is like a royal princess who came from a far place. People did not know her origin, but they saw that she was a woman of valour, beautiful and refined in all her ways. They said, “She certainly originates from the side of light, for she illuminates the world through her deeds.”

They asked her, “From where are you?” She replied, “From my place.” They said, “If so, the people of your place are great. May you be blessed, and may your place be blessed.”

133. Is this “glory of God” then not one of His hosts? Is it not inferior? Why then do they bless it?

But what is this like? A man had a beautiful garden. Outside the garden but close to it, he had a nice section of field. On this section, he planted a beautiful flower garden.

The first thing that he would water would be his garden. The water would spread over the entire garden. It would not reach the section of field however, since it was not attached, even though it was all one. He therefore opened a place for it and watered it separately.

The Bahir

134. Rabbi Rahumai said:

Glory (Kavod) and Heart (Lev) both have the same [numerical value, namely 32]. They are both one, but Glory refers to its function on high, and Heart refers to its function below.

“God’s glory” and the heart of heaven” are therefore both identical.

135. Rabbi Yochanan said:

What is the meaning of the verse (Exodus 17:11), “And it was when Moses would raise his hands, Israel would prevail, and when he would lower his hands, Amalek would prevail.”? This teaches us that the whole world endures because of the Lifting of Hands.

Why?

Because the name of the power given to Jacob is Israel.

Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were each given a particular Power. The counterpart of the attribute in which each one walked was given to him.

Abraham did deeds of kindness. He prepared food for everyone in his area and for all wayfarers. He acted kindly and went out to greet them, as it is written (Genesis 18:2), “and he ran to greet them.” Not only that, but (Genesis 18:2), “He bowed to the earth.” This was a complete act of kindness.

God therefore granted him the same measure and gave him the attribute of Kindness (Chesed). It is thus written (Micah 7:20), “You give truth to Jacob, Kindness to Abraham, as You swore to our fathers from days of yore.”

What is the meaning of “from days of yore”? This teaches us that if Abraham did not do deeds of kindness, then he would not have been worthy of the attribute of Truth. Jacob would then not have been worthy of the attribute of Truth.

In the merit through which Abraham was worthy of the attribute of Kindness, Isaac became worthy of the attribute of Terror. It is thus written (Genesis 31:53), “And Jacob swore by the Terror of his father Isaac.”

Does anyone then swear in this manner, mentioning his belief in the Terror of his father?

But up until that time, Jacob had not been given any power. He therefore swore by the power that was given to his father. It is for this reason that it is written, “And Jacob swore by the Terror of his father Isaac.”

What is it?

It is Chaos. It emanates from evil and astounds people.

And what is that? It is that regarding which it is written (I Kings 18:38), “And fire came down and it consumed the burnt offering, and the stones, and the earth, and it evaporated the water that was in the trench.” It is also written (Deuteronomy 4:24), “The Lord your God is a consuming fire, a jealous God.”

136. What is Kindness?

It is the Torah, as it is written (Isaiah 55:1), “Ho, let all who are thirsty come for water, let he without silver come, [stock up and eat – come, stock up wine and milk, without silver and without payment].”

[Kindness is therefore] silver. It is thus written, “come, stock up and eat – come, stock up wine and milk, without silver and without payment.” He fed you Torah and taught you, for you have already earned it through the merit of Abraham, who did deeds of kindness.

Without silver, he would feed others, and without payment, he would give them wine and milk.

The Bahir

137. Why wine and milk? What does one have to do with the other?

But this teaches us that wine is Terror and milk is Kindness.

Why is wine mentioned first? Because it is closer to us.

Do you then think that this refers to actual wine and milk? We must say that it is the Form of wine and milk.

Through the merit of Abraham, who was worthy of the attribute of Kindness, Isaac was worthy of the attribute of Terror. And because Isaac was worthy of the attribute of Terror, Jacob was worthy of the attribute of Truth, which is the attribute of Peace.

God bestowed him according to his measure. It is thus written (Genesis 25:27) "Jacob was a complete man, dwelling in tents." The word "complete" means nothing other than peace. It is thus written (Deuteronomy 18:13), "You shall be complete with the Lord your God," and the Targum renders this, "You shall be at peace (sh'lim)."

The word "complete" refers to nothing other than the Torah. It is thus written (Malachi 2:6), "A Torah of truth was in his mouth." What is written in the very next phrase? It sates, "With peace and uprightness, he walked before Me." "Uprightness" is nothing other than peace, as it is written (Psalms 25:21), "Complete and upright."

It is therefore written (Exodus 17:11), "And it was when Moses would raise his hands, Israel would prevail. This teaches us that the Attribute that is called Israel has in it a "Torah of Truth."

138. What is the meaning of "a Torah of Truth?"

It is that which teaches (Moreh) the Truth of [all] worlds, as well as His deeds in thought.

He erected Ten Sayings, and with them the world stands. It is one of them.

In man He created ten fingers, paralleling these Ten Sayings.

Moses raised his hands and concentrated to some degree on the Attribute that is called Israel, which contains the Torah of Truth. With his ten fingers, he alluded that he was upholding the Ten. For if [God] would not help Israel, then the Ten Sayings would not endure every day. It was for this reason that "Israel prevailed."

[The verse continues], "And when he lowered his hands, Amalek prevailed." Would Moses then do anything that would cause Amalek to prevail? But [this teaches us] that it is forbidden for a person to stand for [more than] three hours with his hands spread out to heaven.

139. His disciples asked: To whom are the hands raised?

He replied: To the heights of heaven. How do we know this? It is written (Habbakkuk 3:10), "The deep gives forth its voice, it lifts up its hands on high." This teaches us that the Lifting of Hands is only to the heights of the heaven.

When among Israel there are people who are wise and know the mystery of the Glorious Name, and they lift up their hands, they are immediately answered.

It is thus written (Isaiah 58:9), "Then (Az) you will call and God will answer." If you call God "then" (Az), He will answer you immediately.

140. What is the meaning of "then" [- Az – spelled Aleph Zayin]?

This teaches us that it is not permissible to call Aleph alone. [It can] only [be called] through the two letters that are attached to it, which sit first in the kingdom.

Together with the Aleph, they are then three. Seven of the Ten Sayings then remain, and this is the Zayin [which has the numerical value of seven].

It is also written (Exodus 15:1), “Then (Az) sang Moses and the children of Israel.”

141. What are the Ten Sayings?

The first is the Highest Crown. Blessed and praised be it name and its people.

Who are its people?

They are Israel. It is thus written (Psalms 100:3), “Know that the Lord is God, He made us, and not (Lo) we, His people.” [Lo is spelled Lamed Aleph and can be read, “to Aleph”.] The verse then reads, “to Aleph are we.”

[It is our duty] to recognise and know the Unity of Unities, who is unified in all His names.

142. The second one is Wisdom .

It is thus written (Proverbs 8:22), “God procured me, the beginning of His way, before his works, from then (Az).” A “beginning” is nothing other than Wisdom, as it is written (Psalms 111:10), “The beginning is wisdom, the fear of God.”

143. The third one is the quarry of the Torah, the treasury of Wisdom, the quarry of the “spirit of God”.

This teaches us that God carved out all the letters of the Torah, engraved it with spirit, and with it made all Forms. This is the meaning of the verse (1 Samuel 2:2), “There is no Rock (Tzur) like our God” – there is no Former (Tzayir) like our God.

144. These are three. What is the fourth?

The fourth is (Deuteronomy 33:21), “the charity of God,” His merit and his Kindness (Chesed) to all the world.

This is the Right Hand of the Blessed Holy One.

145. What is the fifth?

The fifth is the great fire of the Blessed Holy One> Regarding this it is written (Deuteronomy 18:16), “Let me see the great fire no more, lest I die.”

This is the Left Hand of the Blessed Holy One.

What are they? They are the Chaioth ha-Qadesh and the holy Seraphim, to their right and their left. They are the “pleasant ones” which ascend higher and higher, as it is written (Ecclesiastes 5:7), “And ones higher than they.”

It is also written (Ezekiel 1:18), “And as for their height, they had height, and they had fear, and their height was filled with eyes, around the four.” And around Him are angels. Those around them also bow down before them, kneeling and declaring, “The Lord He is God, the Lord He is God.”

146. The sixth one is the Throne of Glory, crowned, included, praised and hailed.

It is the house of the World to Come, and its place is in Wisdom . It is thus written (Genesis 1:3), “And God said, ‘Let there be light,’ and there was light.”

147. And Rabbi Yochanan said:

There were two [types of] light, as it is written, “[let there be light,] and there was light.” Regarding both of them it is written (Genesis 1:4), “[And God saw the light] that it was good.”

The Bahir

The Blessed Holy One took one [of these types of light] and stored it away for the righteous in the World to Come. Regarding this it is written (Psalms 31:20), “How great is the good that You have hidden away for those who fear You, that You have accomplished for those who find shelter in You...”

We learn that no creature could look at the first light. It is thus written (Genesis 1:4), “And God saw the light that it was good.”

It is furthermore written (Genesis 1:21) “And God saw all that He made, and behold, it was very good.” God saw all that He had made and saw shining, brilliant good.

He took of that good, and included in it the 32 paths of Wisdom, giving to this world. This is the meaning of the verse (Proverbs 4:2), “I have given you a doctrine of good, My Torah, do not abandon it.” We say that this is the treasury of the Oral Torah.

The Blessed Holy One said, “This Attribute is considered to be included in this world, and it is the Oral Torah. If you keep this Attribute in this world, then you will be worthy of the World to Come, which is the good stored away for the righteous.”

What is it?

It is the force of the Blessed Holy One. It is thus written (Habakkuk 3:4), “And the glow will be like light, [He has rays from His hand, and His hidden force is there].” The glow that was taken from the first Light will be like [our visible] light if His children keep the “Torah and Commandment that I wrote to teach them.” It is thus written (Proverbs 1:8), “Hear my son, the admonition of your father, and do not abandon the Torah of your mother.”

148. And it is written (Habakkuk 3:4), “He has rays from His hand, and His hidden force is there.”

What is “His hidden force”?

This is the light that was stored away and hidden, as it is written (Psalms 31:20), “[How great is the good] that You have hidden away for those who fear You, [that You have accomplished for those who find shelter in You].”

What remains for us in that which “You have accomplished for those who find shelter in You.” These are the ones who find shelter in Your shadow in this world, who keep Your Torah, observe Your Commandments, and sanctify Your name, unifying it secretly and publicly. The verse thus concludes, “in the sight of the sons of man.”

149. Rabbi Rahumai said:

This teaches us that Israel had light. Torah is light, as it is written (Proverbs 6:23), “For a commandment is a lamp, Torah is light, [and the way of life is the rebuke of admonition].” And we say that a lamp is a commandment, illumination (Orah) Oral Torah, and light (Or) is the written Torah. [How can we then say that the Oral Torah is light (Or)?]

Because this light has already been kept, it is called light.

What is this like? A room was hidden at the end of a house. Even though it is day, and there is bright light in the world, one cannot see in this room unless he brings along a lamp.

The same is true of the Oral Torah. Even though it is a light, it needs the written Torah to answer its questions and explain its mysteries.

150. Rabbi Rahumai said:

What is the meaning of the verse (Proverbs 6:23), “And the way of life is the rebuke of admonition”?

This teaches us that when a person accustoms himself to study the Mystery of Creation and the Mystery of the Chariot, it is impossible that he not stumble. It is therefore written (Isaiah 3:6), "Let this stumbling be under your hand." This refers to things that a person cannot understand unless they cause him to stumble.

The Bahir

The Torah calls it "the rebuke of admonition," but actually it makes one worthy of "the way of life." One who wishes to be worthy of "the way of life" must therefore endure "the rebuke of admonition."

151. Another explanation:

"Life" is the Torah, as it is written (Deuteronomy 30:19), "And you shall choose life." It is furthermore written (Deuteronomy 30:20), "For it is your life and your length of days."

If one wants to be worthy of it, he should reject physical pleasure and accept the yoke of the commandments. If he is afflicted with suffering, he should accept it with love. He should not ask, "Since I am fulfilling the will of my Maker and am studying the Torah each day, why am I afflicted with suffering?" Rather, he should accept it with love.

Then he will be completely worthy of the "way of life."

For who knows the ways of the Blessed Holy One? Regarding all things, one must therefore say, "Righteous are You, O God, and Your judgement is fair. All that is done from heaven is for the good."

152. You said [that the sixth one was] His Throne. Have we then not said that it is the Crown of the Blessed Holy One? We have said, "Israel was crowned with three crowns, the crown of priesthood, the crown of royalty, and the crown of Torah above them all."

What is this like? A king has a pleasing, beautiful vessel and he was very fond of it.

Sometimes he placed it on his head – this is the Tefillin worn on the head. At other times he carried it on his arm – in the knot of the Tefillin worn on the arm. Sometimes he lend it to his son so that it should remain with him.

Sometimes it is called His Throne. This is because He carries it as an amulet on His arm, just like a throne.

153. What is the seventh? It is the heaven [called] Aravot.

And why is it called heaven (Shamayim)? Because it is round like a head.

We learn that it is in the centre, with water at its right and fire at its left. It supports water (Sa Mayim) from fire and water, and brings peace between them.

Fire comes and finds the attribute of fire on its side. Water comes and finds the attribute of water on its side. It is therefore written (Job 25:2), "He makes peace in His high places."

154. Is it then the seventh? Is it nothing more than the sixth.

But this teaches us that the Holy Palace is here, and it supports them all. It is thus counted as two. It is therefore the seventh.

And what is it?

It is Thought that does not have any end or boundary. This place likewise does not have any end or boundary.

155. The seventh one is the east of the world. It is from where the Seed of Israel comes.

The spinal cord originates in man's brain and extends to the [sexual] organ, where the seed is. It is therefore written (Isaiah 43:5), "From the east I will bring your seed, [and from the west I will gather you]."

The Bahir

When Israel is good, then this is the place from which I will bring your seed, and new seed will be granted to you. But when Israel is wicked, [then I will bring] seed that has already been in the world. It is thus written (Ecclesiastes 1:4), “A generation goes and a generation comes,” teaching us that it has already come.

156. What is the meaning of the verse (Isaiah 43:5), “And from the west I will gather you”? [This means that “I will gather you”] from the attribute that always points to the west. Why is [west] called MaAReV? Because it is there that all seed is mixed together (MitAReV). What is this like? A king’s son had a beautiful bride and he hid her in his chamber. He took riches from his father’s house and constantly brought it to her. She in turn took everything, constantly put it away, and mixed it all together. Ultimately he seeks to see what he had gathered and accumulated. It is therefore written, “And from the west I will gather you.” And what is his father’s house? It is that regarding which it is written, “From the east I will bring your seed.” This teaches us that it is brought from the east and sowed on the west. He then gathers what he has sowed.

157. What is the eighth one? The Blessed Holy One has a single Righteous One (Tzadik) in His world, and it is dear to Him because it supports all the world. It is the Foundation (Yesod). This is what sustains it, and makes it grow, increasing and watching it. It is beloved and dear on high, and beloved and dear below; fearsome and mighty on high, and fearsome and mighty below; rectified and accepted on high, and rectified and accepted below. It is the Foundation of all souls. Did you then say that it is the eighth? And do you say that it is the Foundation of all souls? Is it then not written (Exodus 31:17), “And on the seventh day He rested and souled”? Yes, it is the seventh. This is because it decides between them. There are six, and three are below and three above, and it decides between them.

158. Why is it called the seventh? Is it then the seventh? It is not. But it is because the Blessed Holy One rested on the Sabbath with the attribute regarding which it is written (Exodus 31:17), “For six days God made the heaven and the earth, and on the seventh day He rested and souled.” This teaches us that each day has a Saying that is its Master. This is not because it was created on that day, but because that is when it does the task to which it was assigned. Each one does its task and maintains its activities. The seventh day therefore comes and does its task, making them all rejoice. Not only that, but it also causes their souls to grow, as it is written, “on the seventh day He rested and souled.”

159. What is this “rest”? It is the absence of work. It is a cessation which is called Shabbat (meaning rest). What is this like? A king had seven gardens, and the middle one contained a fountain, welling up from a living source. Three [of his gardens] are at its right, and three are at its left. When it performed its function and overflowed, they all rejoiced, saying, “It overflowed for our sake.” It waters them and makes them grow, while they wait and rest. Do we then say that it waters the seven? But it is written (Isaiah 43:5), “From the east I will bring your seed.” This indicates that one of [the seven] waters it.

We must therefore say that it waters the Heart, and the Heart then waters them all.

160. Rabbi Berachiah sat and expounded:

Each day we speak of the World to Come. Do we then understand what we are saying?
In Aramaic, the “World to Come” is translated “the world that came.”
And what is the meaning of “the world that came”?

We learned that before the world was created, it arose in thought to create an intense light to illuminate it. He created an intense light over which no created thing could have authority. The Blessed Holy One saw, however, that the world could not endure [this light]. He therefore took a seventh of it and left it in its place for them. Thee rest He put away for the righteous in the Ultimate Future.

He said, “If they are worthy of this seventh and keep it, I will give them [the rest] in the Final World.”

It is therefore called “the world that came,” since it already came [into existence] from the six days of creation. Regarding this it is written (Psalm 31:20), “How great is Your good that You have hidden away for those who fear You.”

161. What is the meaning of the verse (Exodus 15:27), “And they came to Elim, where there were twelve wells of water and seventy date palms, and they encamped there by the water”? What is so special about seventy date palms? In one small place there can be a thousand. But [this teaches us that] they were worthy of their counterpart. They are likened to date palms.

It is written (Exodus 15:23), “And they came to Marah, and they could not drink of the waters of Marah, for they were bitter (marah).” This teaches us that the north wind confused them. It is thus written (Exodus 15:25), “And he cried out to God, and He showed him a tree. He cast it into the waters, and the waters became sweet.”

God immediately placed His hand against the Satan and diminished him. It is thus written (Exodus 15:25), “There He gave them a decree and a law, and there He proved them.”

This teaches us that at this time, the Satan attached himself to them in order to blot them out from the world. It is thus written (Exodus 15:24), “And the people complained to Moses saying, ‘What shall we drink?’” [The Satan] continued to denounce Moses until he cried out to God and was answered.

What is the meaning of the verse, “And He showed him a tree”? This teaches us that the Tree of Life was near the water. The Satan came and removed it in order to denounce Israel and cause them to sin against their Father in heaven.

[The Satan] said to them, “Are you now then going into the desert? Even now [you have nothing] other than bitter water, but this has some benefit, since you can make some use of it. But when you enter the desert, you will not even find [water] with which to wash your hands and face. You will die from hunger and thirst, naked and having nothing.”

The people came to Moses and repeated these words, but he put them off. When [the Satan] saw that he could not overcome them, he strengthened himself [to overcome] Israel and Moses.

The people came, and “they complained to Moses.” They said, “Even here we lack water. What will we drink in the desert?”

The Satan had falsified the situation in order to cause the people to sin. As soon as Moses saw the Satan, “He cried out to God, and He showed him a tree.” This is the Tree of Life that Satan had removed. He then “cast it into the water, and the water became sweet.” The Blessed Holy One then gave the Satan a “decree and a law,” and it was there that He “proved” Israel. The Blessed Holy One warned Israel saying (Exodus 15:26), “If you listen to the voice of the Lord your God, [and do what is upright in His eyes, give ear to His commandments, and keep all His decrees, then all the sickness that I brought upon the Egyptians, I will not bring upon you, for I am God who heals you].”

The Bahir

162. What is this like? A king had a beautiful daughter, and others desired her. The king knew about it, but could not fight those who wanted to bring his daughter to evil ways. He came to his house and warned her, saying, “My daughter, do not pay attention to the words of these enemies and they will not be able to overcome you. Do not leave the house, but do all your work at home. Do not sit idle, even for a single moment. Then they will not be able to see you and harm you.”

They have one Attribute which causes them to leave aside every good way and choose every evil way. When they see a person directing himself along a good way, they hate him.

What is [this Attribute]? It is the Satan.

This teaches us that the Blessed Holy One has an Attribute whose name is Evil. It is to the north of the Blessed Holy One, as it is written (Jeremiah 1:14), “From the north will Evil come forth, upon all the inhabitants of the earth.” Any evil that comes to all the inhabitants of the earth comes from the north.

163. What is this One Attribute?

It is the Form of a Hand.

It has many messengers, and the name of them all is Evil Evil. Some of them are great, and some are small, but they all bring guilt to the world.

This is because Chaos is toward the north. Chaos (Tohu) is nothing other than Evil. It confounds (Taha) the world and causes people to sin.

Every Evil Urge (Yetzer HaRa) that exists in man comes from there.

And why is it placed to the left? This is because it does not have any authority any place in the world except in the north.

It is not accustomed to be anywhere except in the north. It does not want to be any place but in the north. If it remained the south until it learned the routes of the south, how could it lead others astray? It would have to stay there for [several] days until it learned, and then it could not cause people to sin. It therefore is always in the north, to the left.

This is the meaning of the verse (Genesis 8:21), “For the Urge of man’s heart is evil from his youth.” It is evil from his youth, and it does not incline [in any direction] other than the left, for it is already accustomed to be there.

It is regarding this that the Blessed Holy One said to Israel (Exodus 15:26), “If you listen to the voice of the Lord your God, and do what is upright in His eyes, and give ear to His commandments” – and not to the commandments of the Evil Urge – “and keep all His decrees” – and not the decrees of the Evil Urge – “[then all the sickness that I brought upon the Egyptians, I will not bring upon you,] for I am God who heals you.”

164. What does the Evil Urge gain?

What is this like? A king appointed clerks over the lands of his kingdom, over his work and over his merchandise. Each and every thing had its clerk. There was one clerk in charge of the storehouse containing good food. Another was in charge of the storehouse containing stones. Everyone came to the storehouse containing good food. The clerk in charge of the storehouse of stones came and saw that people were only buying from the other [clerk]. What did he do? He sent his messengers to tear down the weak house [so that people would need stones to rebuild them]. They could not do so, however, to the strong ones. He said, "In the time that it takes to tear down one strong [house], you can tear down ten weak ones. People will then all come and buy stones from me, and I will not be inferior to the other." It is thus written (Jeremiah 1:14), "From the north will evil come forth, upon all the inhabitants of the earth." The verse then continues (Jeremiah 1:15) "For I call all the families of the kingdom of the north – says God – and they will come, and each one will place his throne at the opening of the gates of Jerusalem..." Evil will be their business, and the Evil Urge will also constantly strive.

The word Satan means "turning aside," since he turns all the world aside to the balance of guilt.

How is this indicated? It is written (Genesis 38:16), "And he turned aside to her," and the Targum renders this VeSata, [Satah being the root of Satan]. It is likewise written (Proverbs 4:15), "Turn aside (S'the) from it and pass on."

165. What is the significance of the seventy date palms?

They had accepted upon themselves the commandments, as it is written (Exodus 15:26), "If you listen to the voice of the Lord your God." Immediately after this we find (Exodus 15:27) "And they came to Elim (Elimah) [where there were twelve wells of water and seventy date palms]."

What is the meaning of Elimah? It is Eli Mah – "to me is what."

"Where there were twelve wells of water." At first God gave it to them as wells, and in the end, he gave it back to them as stones. It is thus written [regarding the stones set up near the Jordan] (Joshua 4:9), "twelve stones."

What is the reason? It is because the Torah was originally likened to water in the world. Only later was it put in a permanent place. Water, however, is here one day and elsewhere the next.

166. What are the seventy date palms?

This teaches us that the Blessed Holy One has seventy Structures.

These draw from the twelve Simple Ones. Just like water is simple, so are these simple. How do we know that the date palm is a Structure? Because it is written (Song of Songs 7:8), "Your structure is like a date palm."

Besides that, there are seventy kinds of date palms. It is therefore written that there were seventy date palms. One was not like the other, their functions were all different, and the taste of one was not like the taste of the other.

167. You said that the seventy date palms represent the seventy Structures. But have you not said that there are 72?

There are 71. Israel makes 72, but it is not included.

But did you not say that there were seventy?

One is the Officer of the Satan.

What is this like? A king had sons and bought slaves for them. The king then told his sons, "I am giving you all equally."

One of them replied, "I do not want to be with you, for I have the power to steal everything from you.”

The king then said, “Because of this, you will not have a portion among them at all.” [The rebellious son] did what he could. He went out and lay in wait for [the slaves], showing them much gold, jewels and troops. He said, “Come over to me.”

What did the king do? He amassed his armies together with the armies of all his sons. He showed them to the slaves and said, “Do not let him trick you into thinking that his armies are stronger than mine. Behold the troops of that son. He is deceitful and wants to rob you. Therefore, do not listen to him, for at first he will speak smoothly in order to entice you into his trap, but in the end he will laugh at you. You are my slaves, and I will do for you everything good if you turn away from him and do not listen to him.”

He is the Prince of Chaos. It is thus written (1 Samuel 12:21), “Do not turn aside, for you will follow Chaos. It will not help or save, for it is Chaos.” [It cannot help or save,] but it can do harm.

The advice that I give you is that you should (Exodus 15:26), “Listen to the voice of the Lord your God, do what is right in His eyes, and give ear to His commandments, and keep all His decrees.”

When you keep all His decrees, then, “All the sickness that I brought upon the Egyptians, I will not bring upon you.”

Why did He say all this? In order to close all doors, so that he should not find you soft at times and hard at times.

When you keep all His decrees, then “all the sickness that I brought upon the Egyptians” – through My hand – “I will not bring upon you.”

What is the meaning of “for I am God who heals you”? This means that even when he comes and strikes, I am God who will heal you.

168. Why do you call it the eight?

Because with it the eight are begun, and with it the eight numbers are completed. In function, however, it is the seventh one.

And what are [the eight] that were begun? This is the fact that a child enters the Covenant of Circumcision when eight days old.

Are they then eight? They are nothing more than seven. Why then did the Blessed Holy One say eight? Because there are eight directions in man.

What are they? They are as follows:

The head, the body, and the Covenant as an arbitrator;

And his wife, who is his mate.

It is thus written (Genesis 2:24), “And he shall cling to his wife, and they shall be one flesh.”

They are the eight, and they parallel the eight days of circumcision. Are they then eight?

They are nothing more than seven, since the body and covenant are one. It is therefore eight.

169. What is the ninth?

He said to them: the ninth and tenth are together, one opposite the other.

One is higher than the other by 500 years.

They are like two Wheels (Ophanim). One inclines toward the north, while the other inclines toward the west. They reach down to the lowest earth.

The Bahir

What is the lowest earth? It is the last of the seven earths down below.

The end of the Divine Presence of the Blessed Holy One is under His feet. It is thus written (Isaiah 66:1), “The heaven is My throne, and the earth is the hassock for My feet.”

The Victory (Nitzachon) of the world is there. It is thus written (Isaiah 24:10), “for Victory of Victories (Netzach Netzachim).”

170. What is the meaning of “Victory of Victories”?

There is a single Victory (Netzach). Which is it? It is the one that inclines toward the west.

And what is secondary to it? This is the one that inclines toward the north.

And the third one? This is the one that is below.

The third one? But you have said that the Chariot has two wheels. We must therefore say that the end of the Divine Presence is also called Victory.

This is the meaning of “Victory of Victories.” “Victory” is one, and “Victories” is two, giving [a total of] three.

171. His disciples said to him: From above to below we know. But from below to above we do not know.

He replied: Is it not all one – below to above and above to below?

They said: Our master, ascending is not the same as descending. One can run while descending, but cannot do so while ascending.

He replied: Go out and see.

He sat and expounded to them:

There is a Divine Presence below, just like there is a Divine Presence above.

What is this Divine Presence? We have said that it is the light that was derived from the first Light, which is Wisdom. It also surrounds all things, as it is written (Isaiah 6:3), “The whole earth is filled with His glory.”

What is its function?

What is this like? A king had seven sons, and he assigned each one a place. He said to them, “Sit here, one above the other.”

The lowest one said, “I will not sit at the bottom. I do not want to be far from you.”

[The king] replied, “I will surround you and see you all day long.”

This is the meaning of the verse, “The whole earth is filled with His glory.”

Why is He among them? This is so that He should support them and sustain them.

172. And what are the sons?

I have already told you that the Blessed Holy One has seven Holy Forms.

All of them have a counterpart in man, as it is written (Genesis 9:6), “for in the form of God He made man.” It is likewise written (Genesis 1:27), “In the form of God He made him, male and female He made them.”

This is what they are:

The body, covenant and head.

But these are only six. You have said that there are seven.

The seventh is with his wife. It is thus written (Genesis 2:24), “And they shall be one flesh.”

But she was taken from his ribs, as it is written (Genesis 2:21), “And He took one of his ribs.”

He said: Yes from his ribs.

Does he then have a rib?

Yes. It is written (Exodus 26:20), “the ribs of the tabernacle.” The Targum renders this, “the side of the tabernacle.”

And what is His side?

What is this like? A king had an idea to plant ten male trees in a garden. All of them were date palms. He said, “Since they are all the same kind, it is impossible for them to endure.”

What did he do? He planted an Etrog among them. This was one of those which he had intended to be male.

And why is the Etrog female? Because it is written (Leviticus 23:40), “The fruit of a beautiful tree, fronds of a date palm, [branches of a tree of leaves, and willows of the brook].”

What is the fruit of a beautiful (hadar) tree?

The Targum renders this verse, “The fruit of the Etrog tree, and the Lulav.”

173. What is the meaning of “beautiful”? It is the beauty of all things. This is also the beauty of the Songs of Songs. Regarding it, it is written (Songs of Songs 6:10), “Who is she who looks forth as the dawn, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, terrible like an army with banners?”

This relates to the Female.

Because of her, the female was taken from Adam. This is because it is impossible for the lower world to endure without the female.

And why is the female called Nekevah? Because her orifices (Nekev) are wide. Also because she has more orifices than the male. What are they? They are the orifices of the breasts, the womb, and the receptacle.

174. And what is the reason that you said that the Song of Songs is beautiful?

Yes, it is the most beautiful of all the Holy Scriptures.

Rabbi Yochanan thus said: All Scripture is holy, and all the Torah is holy, but the Song of Songs is the Holy of Holies.

What is the meaning of the Holy of Holies? It means that it is holy for the Holy Ones.

What are the Holy Ones? They are the counterparts of the six directions that are in man.

That which is holy for them is holy for everything.

175. What is this that is Holy? It is the Etrog, which is the beauty (hadar) of them all.

Why is it called beautiful (hadar)? Do not read hadar, but HaDar – “Which dwells.”

This refers to the Etrog which is not bound together with the Lulav. Without it the commandment of the Lulav cannot be fulfilled.

It is also bound with them all. It is with each one of them, and is unified with them all.

176. What does the Lulav parallel? It is the counterpart of the spinal cord. It is thus written (Leviticus 23:40), “[fronds of a date palm,] a branch of a tree of leaves, and willows of the brook.”

The [leafy] branches [of the myrtle] must cover the majority [of the bunch]. If its branches do not cover its majority, it is invalid.

Why?

The Bahir

What is this like? A man has arms, and with them he protects his head. He has two arms, and his head makes three.

[It is therefore called] “a branch of a tree of leaves.” A “branch” is to the left, and the “leaves” are to the right. It then comes out that the “tree” is in the centre.

And why is it called a “tree”? Because it is the Root of the Tree.

177. What are “willows of the brook”? There are two [willow branches in the Lulav,] and these parallel the two legs in man.

Why are the [“willows of the brook”] called Arvey Nachal? Because the greater of the two is inclined toward the west (ma-Arev) and draws its strength from there.

The one to the north is smaller than it by a journey of 500 years. It is on the northwest side, through which it functions.

It is named after it, since they are both mixed (Arav).

178. Another explanation:

[Willows of the Brook] are called Arvey Nachal because the function of one is sometimes mixed (ma-arav) with that of the other.

Why are they called Willows of the Brook? This is because of the place in which they are fixed, which is called Brook. It is thus written (Ecclesiastes 1:7), “All the Brooks go to the sea, but the sea is not filled.”

What is this sea? We say that it is the Etrog.

How do we know that each of the seven Attributes is called a Brook (Nachal)? Because it is written (Numbers 21:19), “From Gift to Nachaliel [, from Nachaliel to Bamot, and from Bamot to the valley that is in the Field of Moab, the head of the cliff, and it looks down on the face of the Yeshimon].” Do not read Nachaliel, but Nachley El – Brooks of God.

And all six then go on one path to the sea.

What is this path? It is the one that arbitrates between them. It is thus written (Habbakuk 3:5), “Before Him goes the pestilence, and fiery bolt at His feet.”

All of them go to that pipe, and from that pipe to the sea.

This is the meaning of the verse, “From Gift to Brooks of God.” [Gift] is the place that is given, namely the brain. From there they go to the Brooks of God.

“And from Brooks of God to Bamot.” What is Bamot? As the Targum renders it, Ramta – “heights.” This is the Segol that follows the Zarka.

[The verse continues,] “And from Bamot to the valley that is in the Field of Moab, the head of the cliff, and it looks down on the face of the Yeshimon.”

“And from the heights (Bamot) to the valley that is in the Field of Moab.” This is that which is prepared. And what is that which was in the Field of Moab? Do not read Moab, but May-av – “from a father.” This is the father regarding which it is written (Genesis 26:5) “Because Abraham hearkened to my voice, kept My trust, My commandments and My decrees...”

What is this field? It is the one that is at “the head of the cliff,” and which also “looks down on the face of the Yeshimon.” [Yeshimon] is interpreted to mean Heaven.

Regarding that pipe, it is written (Song of Songs 4:15), “A fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, flowing from Lebanon.”

What is Lebanon? We say that this is Wisdom.

What are the Willows of the Brook (Nachal)? We say that this is that which gives inheritance (Nachalah) to Israel. It refers to the two Wheels of the Chariot.

The Bahir

179. We learned that there are Ten Spheres and Ten Sayings. Each Sphere has its Saying. It is not surrounded by it, but rather, it surrounds it.

This [physical] world is like a mustard seed inside a ring.

Why? Because of the Spirit that blows upon it, through which it is sustained. If this spirit were to be interrupted for even a moment, the world would be annihilated.

180. There are three Spheres in this world.

How? This world inclines to the north and the south.

How? North west south. North west is the first sphere that revolves around us.

Do we then say that it is to the north-west? But we say that its strength is to the north. This is the left foot.

Above it is the second Sphere, which is entirely to the west.

Do we then say that it is to the west? But we say that its power is to the west. These are the Victories of the world.

Above it is the third Sphere, and its power is to the south-west.

What is the original power that you said was second? We say that this is the right foot.

And what is the power that is to the south-west? This is the Foundation of the world.

Regarding this it is written (Proverbs 10:25), "The Righteous is the Foundation of the world."

The second power stands behind the Chariot, while the first power stands in front of it.

The "Righteous, Foundation of the world" is in the centre. It emanates from the south of the world, and is officer over the other two.

In its hand are also the souls of all living things. It is the Life of Worlds.

Whenever the word "creation" (Beriah) is used, it is done with it. Regarding it, it is written (Exodus 31:17), "He rested and souled."

This is the attribute of the Sabbath day. Regarding this it is written (Exodus 20:8), "Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy."

But it is also written (Deuteronomy 5:12), "Keep [the Sabbath]." This is speaking of the seventh attribute. Regarding this seventh attribute it is written (Leviticus 19:30), "My sabbaths you shall keep, and My sanctuary you shall fear."

What is the seventh attribute? This is the Blessed Holy One's attribute of Goodness.

181. Why is it written, "My sabbaths you shall keep," [in the plural] rather than "My sabbath" [in the singular]?

What is this like? A king had a beautiful bride, and every week she would set aside a day to be with him. The king also had beautiful beloved sons. He said to them, "Since this is the situation, you should also rejoice on the day of my joy. For it is for your sake that I strive, and you also respect me."

182. What is the reason that [the Torah says] "remember" [in one place,] and "keep" [regarding the Sabbath in another]?

"Remember" (zachor) refers to the male (Zachar). "Keep" (shamor) refers to the bride.

Why is it connected to, "and My sanctuary you shall fear"? This is because My sanctuary is holy. Why? "Because I am God who makes you holy" – from every side.

183. Why do we say [in the blessing after food], "On all that He created...[Blessed] is the Life of Worlds." Why do we not say, "On all that You created"?

The Bahir

But we bless the Holy One, who grants His wisdom to this “Life of Worlds.” It then provides for all.

184. What is the reason that we say [in blessings, “Blessed are you...] who made us holy with His commandments and commanded us” [in the third person]? Why do we not say, “that You made us holy with Your commandments, and You commanded us, “ [in the second person]?

This teaches us that all commandments are included in the Life of Worlds.

Because of His love for us, He gave us [the commandments] in order that they should make us holy and allow us to be worthy. Why? Because when we are in this world, we can become worthy of the World to Come, which is great.

In its hand is the treasury of souls. When Israel is good, these souls are worthy of emerging and coming to this world. But if they are not good, the [these souls] do not emerge.

We therefore say, “The Son of David will not come until all the souls in the Body are completed.”

What is the meaning of “all the souls in the Body”? We say that this refers to all the souls in man’s body. [When these are completed] new ones will be worthy of emerging.

The Son of David (the Messiah) will then come. He will be able to be born, since his soul will emerge among the other new souls.

What is this like? A king had an army, and he sent them much bread to eat. They were so lazy that they did not take care of [the bread] which they did not eat [immediately]. The bread therefore became mouldy and went to waste.

The king investigated to find out if they had what to eat, and to see if they had eaten what he had sent them. He found that the bread had become mouldy and they were ashamed to ask for new bread. How could they tell the king, “We did not take care of [what you sent us,] but now we are asking for more”?

The king also became angry. He took the mouldy bread and ordered that it be dried and rectified as much as possible. He swore to the men, “I will not give you any more bread until you eat all this mouldy bread.” He then returned the bread to them.

What did they do? They agreed to divide it up, and each one took his portion. The diligent one took his portion and placed it in the air, taking care of it and keeping it in good condition to eat. The other one took it and ate it lustfully. He ate what he could and laid the rest aside, not taking care of it since he had given up on it. It spoiled even more and became so mouldy that he could not eat it at all. He therefore starved to death.

He was then blamed for the sin of his body: Why did you kill yourself? Is it not enough that you ruined the bread the first time? But I returned it to you and you ruined it [again]. You ruined your portion because you were too lazy to take care of it. And not only that, but you also killed yourself.”

[The soldier] replied, “My lord, what could I have done?”

He answered, “You should have taken care of it. And if you claim that you were not able to, you should have watched your friends and neighbours with whom you shared the bread. You should have seen what they did and how they took care of it, and you should have kept it like they did.”

They also interrogated him: Why did you kill yourself? Is it not enough that you ruined the bread? But you also went ahead and killed the matter of your body. You shortened the days of your life, or [at least] caused it. It may have been possible that you would have had a good son. He could have saved you, and [rectified] the damage that you and others did. Your suffering will therefore be increased on all sides.

He became confused and replied, "What could I have done when I did not have any bread? With what could I have sustained myself?"

They answered: If you would have strived and worked in Torah, you would not reply foolishly and brazenly like this. Because of your reply, it is obvious that you have not worked or strived in Torah. It is thus written (Deuteronomy 8:3), "For not by bread alone does man live, but from all that emanates from God's mouth does man live." You should have searched and probed and asked, "what is it through which man lives?"

What is this which "emanates from God's mouth"

From here they said, "An ignoramus cannot be pious."

If a person does not act with kindness (Chesed) toward himself, he cannot be called pious (Chasid).

185. How can one do kindness to his Master?

By studying the Torah. All study of Torah is a deed of kindness toward one's Master. It is thus written (Deuteronomy 33:26), "He rides the heavens with your help, [His pride is in the skies]." God says, "When you study Torah for its own sake, then you help Me and I can ride the heavens."

Then, "His pride is in the skies (Shechakim)."

What is Shechakim? We say that it is in the innermost chamber. The Targum thus renders it, "His word is in the Heaven of Heaven."

Therefore, "not by bread alone does man live, but from all that emanates from God's mouth does man live."

However, "the fool answers brazenly."

"Abandon this brazenness, and do not reply in this manner!"

He is therefore punished. What is his punishment? We have already discussed it.

186. What is the meaning of the verse (Job 15:2), "Should a wise man answer knowledge of spirit?" What is "knowledge of spirit"?

This is the Knowledge that is close to the spirit. Regarding this it is written (Isaiah 11:2), "And there will rest upon him a spirit of God, a spirit of wisdom and understanding, [a spirit of counsel and strength, a spirit of knowledge and the fear of God]."

[First comes] Wisdom, and then comes Understanding. And in Understanding is "counsel, strength, knowledge and the fear of God."

But you told us that "counsel" is deeds of Kindness, and that Understanding is the Attribute of Justice.

[One is above the other.]

Knowledge is Truth. Knowledge is therefore that with which one recognises the truth.

"The fear of God" is the Treasury of the Torah .

This is like I say, but one is above the other.

Rabbi Akiba thus said: With whatever God created, He created its counterpart. It is thus written (Ecclesiastes 7:14), "Also one opposite the other has God made."

What is the Treasury of the Torah? It is that regarding which it is written (Isaiah 33:6), "The fear of God is His treasury." A person must first be god-fearing, and then he can study Torah.

This is like a person who comes to buy date honey but does not bring a vessel in which to carry it. He says, "I will carry it in my bosom." He tries to carry it in his bosom but it was very heavy, and he is also afraid that it will tear and soil his clothing. He therefore throws it away on the road.

This person is then punished twice. First because he ruined good food, and second because he wasted his money.

187. The fear of God is the one that is higher.

It is in the palm of God's hand. It is also His Force.

This palm (kaf) is called the pan of merit (Kaf Zechut). This is because it inclines the world to the pan of merit.

It is thus written (Isaiah 11:3), "I will grant him a spirit of the fear of God, and he will not judge by the sight of his eyes, he will not admonish according to what his ear hears." He will incline all the world to the pan of merit. From there counsel emanates, and from there health emanates to the world.

[It is also written,] (Genesis 49:24) "From there is the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel." This is the place that is called "There." Regarding this, it is written (Habakkuk 3:4), "[He has rays from His hand,] and His hidden Force is there."

188. Once this thing comes, sharpen it. What is its sharpening? Tell us the meaning of the verse, "He has rays from His hand."

Why does it first say "rays" and then "His hand"? It should have said "His hands" [in the plural].

There is no contradiction. This is very much like the verse (Exodus 32:19), "And Moses' anger flared, and he threw the tablets from his hands." The way this is written, however, it would be read "His hand" [in the singular].

It is likewise written (Exodus 17:12), "And his hands were faithful until the sun set." The verse says Emunah ("was faithful" – in the singular) and not Emunot ("were faithful" – in the plural).

They replied: Our master, we are pointing out a contradiction in order to receive an answer, and you are covering our eyes. Did you not teach us, master, that you must answer first things first and last things last?

[He said:] And what have you then asked? [The meaning of,] "He has rays from His hand."

By the Divine service, I have just explained it to you with my words.

They were ashamed.

When he saw that they were ashamed is it not true that [at first] there was water, and that fire emanated from it? Water therefore included fire.

And Master, what is the meaning of "rays"?

He replied: There are five rays. These are the five fingers on man's right hand.

189. And master, you are the one who told us in Rabbi Yochanan's name that there are only two arms of the world."

He replied: Yes. But here "rays" allude to the two rays that are below them.

And what are they?

He said: With the anger of your head.

And what is above?

He said: The fear of God.

190. And what is the fear of God?

The Bahir

It is the first light.

Rabbi [Meir] thus said: Why is it written (Genesis 1:3), “And God said, ‘let there be light,’ and there was light”? Why does it not say, “and it was so”?

But this teaches us that the light was very intense, so that no created thing could gaze upon it. God therefore stored it away for the righteous in the Ultimate Future.

This is the measure of all merchandise (Secorah) in the world. It is also the power of the precious stones that are called Socheret and Dar.

And upon what is the attribute of Dar?

This teaches us that God took a thousandth of its radiance, and from it He constructed a beautiful precious stone. In it He included all the commandments.

Abraham came, and He sought a power to give him. He gave him this precious stone, but he did not want it. He was worthy and took Kindness as his attribute, as it is written (Micah 7:20), “Kindness to Abraham.”

Isaac came, and He sought a power, but He gave it to him and he did not want it. He was worthy and took the attribute of Strength, which is [called] Terror. It is thus written (Genesis 31:53), “And Jacob swore by the Terror of Isaac his father.”

Jacob came and wanted it, but it was not given to him. They said, “Since Abraham is above and Isaac is below him, you will be in the centre and take all three.”

What is the centre?

It is peace, as it is written (Micah 7:20), “You give Truth to Jacob.” Truth is identical with Peace, as it is written (Esther 9:30), “Words of Peace and Truth.” It is likewise written (2 Kings 20:19), “For peace and truth will be in my days.”

This is the meaning of the verse (Isaiah 58:14), “I will feed you with the inheritance of Jacob your father.” This is a complete inheritance (Nachalah), comprising Kindness, Terror, Truth and Peace.

It is therefore written (Psalms 118:22), “The stone despised by the builders has become the chief cornerstone.” This is the Stone that was despised by Abraham and Isaac, the builders of the world, and that then became the chief cornerstone.

191. And why did they despise it? Is it not written (Genesis 26:5), “Because Abraham hearkened to My voice, and kept My watch, My commandments, My decrees, and My Torahs.”

What is the meaning of “My watch”?

It refers to what the Attribute of Kindness said: As long as Abraham was in the world, I did not have to do my job. Abraham stood there in my place and “kept my watch.” It is my task to bring merit to the world, and even when people are guilty, I bring them merit. I also bring them back, directing their hearts to do the will of their Father in heaven.

All this Abraham did, as it is written (Genesis 21:33), “And he planted a tamarisk in Beersheba, and he called there in the name of the Lord, God of the world.” He would share his bread and water with all the people in the world, bringing them merit. Seeking to convince them, he would say, “Whom then are you serving? Serve the Lord, God of heaven and earth.” He would preach to them until they would repent.

How do we know that he would also bring merit to those who were guilty?

It is written (Genesis 18:17), “Shall I then cover from Abraham what I am doing? Abraham is becoming a great, mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth will be blessed through him.”

[God said,] “I will give him merit. I know that he will seek mercy for them and be worthy.”

The Bahir

Is it then possible to say that the Blessed Holy One did not know that they could be saved? But He told this [to Abraham] to bring him merit. From here they said, “If one comes to purify himself, they help him. If one comes to defile himself, they open for him.” What is the meaning of, “they open for him”? It refers to those that are always open.

192. [It is written that Abraham kept] (Genesis 26:5), “My commandments, My decrees, and My Torahs.” He said, “Since I do not want [the precious stone], I will keep all the commandments that are included in it.”

What is the meaning of “My Torahs”? This teaches us that he knew and kept even the decisions (Horah) and discussions that are taught on high.

193. And what is the meaning of the verse (Genesis 49:24), “From there is the Shepherd, the Rock of Israel.”

From “There” is nourished the Rock of Israel.

What is the meaning of “from There”? We say that this is the Supernal Righteous One (Tzadik).

What is it?

It is [the precious stone called] Socheret. And the stone that is below it is called Dar.

And what are the rays mentioned in the verse (Habakkuk 3:4), “He has rays from His hand”? These are the five fingers of the right hand.

The Bahir

Section V

Mysteries of the Soul

194. Rabbi Rahumai said:

This I received [from the tradition]. When Moses wanted to know about the glorious fearsome Name, may it be blessed, he said (Exodus 33:18), “Show my please Your glory.” He wanted to know why there are righteous who have good, righteous who have evil, wicked who have good, and wicked who have evil. But they would not tell him. Do you then think that they did not tell him? Can one then imagine that Moses did not know this mystery? But this is what Moses said: “I know the ways of the Powers, but I do not know how Thought spreads through them. I know that Truth is in Thought, but I do not know its parts.” He wanted to know, but they would not tell him.

195. Why is there a righteous person who has good, and [another] righteous person who has evil?

This is because the [second] righteous person was wicked previously, and is now being punished.

Is one then punished for his childhood deeds? Did not Rabbi Simon say that in the Tribunal on high, no punishment is meted out until one is twenty years or older.

He said: I am not speaking of his present lifetime. I am speaking about what he has already been, previously.

His colleagues said to him: How long will you conceal your words?

He replied: Go out and see. What is this like? A person planted a vineyard and hoped to grow grapes, but instead, sour grapes grew. He saw that his planting and harvest were not successful so he tore it out. He cleaned out the sour grape vines and planted again. When he saw that his planting was not successful, he tore it up and planted it again.

How many times?

He said to them: For a thousand generations. It is thus written (Psalms 105:8), “The word that He commanded for a thousand generations.”

It is in relation to this that they said, “Lacking were 974 generations. The Blessed Holy One stood up and planted them in each generation.”

196. Rabbah said: If the righteous wanted, they could create a world. What interferes? Your sins, as it is written (Isaiah 59:2), “Only your sins separate between you and your God.”

Therefore, if not for your sins, there would not be any differentiation between you and Him. We thus see that Rabba created a man and sent it to Rav Zeira. He spoke to it, but it would not reply. But if not for your sins, it would also have been able to reply.

And from what would it have replied? From its soul.

Does a man then have a soul to place in it?

Yes, as it is written (Genesis 2:7), “And He blew in his nostrils a soul of life.” If not for your sins, man would therefore have a “soul of life.” [Because of your sins, however] the soul is not pure.

This is the difference between you and Him. It is thus written (Psalms 8:6), “And You have made him a little less than God.”

The Bahir

What is the meaning of “a little”? This is because [man] sins, while the Blessed Holy One does not. Blessed be He and blessed be His Name for ever and ever, He has no sins.

But the [Evil] Urge comes from Him.

Can we then imagine that it comes from Him? But it originated from Him until David came and killed it. It is thus written (Psalm 109:22), “My heart is hollow within me.”

David said: Because I was able to overcome it (Psalm 5:5), “Evil will not sojourn with You.”

How was David able to overcome it? Through his study, since he never stopped [studying] day or night. He therefore attached the Torah on high. For whenever a person studies Torah for its own sake, the Torah attaches itself to the Blessed Holy One.

They therefore say, “A person should always study Torah, even not for its sake, since if [he studies it] not for its sake, he will eventually come to [study it] for its sake.”

What is this Torah that you are discussing?

It is the Bride who is adorned and crowned, and who is included in the commandments. It is the Treasury of the Torah. It is the betrothed of the Blessed Holy One, as it is written (Deuteronomy 33:4), “Moses commanded us the Torah, the heritage (Morasha) of the congregation of Jacob.” Do not read “heritage” (Morasha) but “betrothed” (Me’urasa).

How is his so. When Israel engages in the Torah for its own sake, then it is the betrothed of the Blessed Holy One, then it is the heritage of Israel.

197. Rabbi Amrai sat and expounded:

Why was Tamar worthy of being the mother of Peretz and Zerach?

It was because her name was Tamar. Tamar was [also] the sister of Amnon. She was therefore made for this.

Why were they called Peretz and Zerach?

Peretz was named after the moon. The moon breaks out (paratz) at times, and will be built up in the future. Zerach was named after the sun, which always shines (zarach) in the same manner.

But Peretz was the first-born. Is then the sun not greater than the moon?

This is no difficulty, as it is written (Genesis 38:28), “One put out a hand,” [indicating that Zerach’s hand emerged before Peretz was born]. It is then written (Genesis 38:30), “This his brother, upon whose hand was the scarlet thread, emerged, and he was named Zerach.”

[Zerach] was supposed to have been the first-born. But God saw that Solomon would descend [from Peretz], and He had such great joy that He made [Zerach] return.

198. Why was she called Tamar and not any other name?

Because she was female.

Can we then say that [it was something special that] she was female?

But it is because she included both male and female. For [Tamar means a date palm, and] every date palm includes both male and female.

How is this? The frond (Lulav) is male. The fruit is male on the outside and female on the inside.

And how? The seed of the date has a split like a woman. Paralleling it is the power of the moon above.

The Blessed Holy One created Adam male and female, as it is written (Genesis 1:27), “Male and female He created them.” Is it then possible to say this? Is it then not written (Genesis

The Bahir

1:27), “And God created man in His image, in the image of God He created him”? It is only then later written (Genesis 2:18), “I will make him a helper opposite him,” and (Genesis 2:21), “And He took one of his ribs, and closed the flesh under it.” [We therefore see that the male was created first, and only later the female.]

But we must say that the Torah uses [three different words]: “formed” (yatzar), “made” (asah), and “created” (bara).

When the soul was made, the word “made” is used. [The word “created” is then used:] “Male and female He created them.” The word “formed” was used when the soul was combined with the body and the spirit was brought together.

How do we know that “forming” means bringing together? For it is written (Genesis 2:19), “And the Lord God formed (gathered) all the beasts of the field and all the flying things of the heaven, and He brought them to the Man to see what he would call each thing.”

This explains the verse (Genesis 5:2), “Male and female He created them.” It is also written (Genesis 1:28), “And God blessed them.”

199. The soul of the female comes from the Female, and the soul of the male comes from the Male. This is the reason why the Serpent followed Eve. He said, “Her soul comes from the north, and I will therefore quickly seduce her.”

And how did he seduce her? He had intercourse with her.

200. His disciples asked: Tell us how this took place.

He replied: The wicked Samael made a bond with all the host on high against his Master.

This was because the Blessed Holy One said [regarding man] (Genesis 1:26), “And let him rule over the fish of the sea and the flying things of heaven.”

[Samael] said, “How can we cause him to sin and be exiled from before God?” He descended with all his host, and sought a suitable companion on earth. He finally found the serpent, which looked like a camel, and he rode on it.

He then went to the woman and said to her (Genesis 3:1), “Did God also say, from all the trees of the garden [you shall not eat]?” [He said, “I know that He did not forbid all the trees,] but I will seek more – I will add in order that she should subtract.”

She replied, “He did not stop us from anything besides” (Genesis 3:2) “the fruit of the tree that is in the middle of the garden. God said, ‘Do not eat from it and do not touch it, lest you die.’”

She added two things. She said, “from the fruit of the tree that is in the middle of the garden,” while [God] had only said (Genesis 2:17), “from the Tree of Knowledge.” She also said, “do not touch it lest you die,” [while God had only spoken of eating it].

What did Samael do? He went and touched the tree. The tree cried out and said, “Wicked one, do not touch me!” It is thus written (Psalms 36:12), “Let not a foot of pride overtake me, and let not the hand of the wicked move me. There have the workers of iniquity fallen – they are thrust down, they cannot rise.”

He then said to the woman, “See, I touched the tree and I did not die. You can also touch it and not die.”

The woman went and touched the tree. She saw the Angel of Death approaching her and said, “Woe is to me. Now I will die and the Blessed Holy One will make another woman and give her to Adam. I will therefore cause him to eat with me. If we die, we will both die, and if we live, we will both live.”

She took the fruit of the tree and ate it, and she also gave some to her husband. Their eyes opened and their teeth were set on edge. He said, "What is this that you have given me to eat? Just as my teeth were set on edge, so will the teeth of all [future] generations be set on edge."

The Bahir

[God then] sat down in true judgement, as it is written (Psalms 9:5), "[You have upheld my cause, You have sat on the throne as a] righteous Judge." He called to Adam and said "Why do you flee from Me?"

[Adam] replied (Genesis 3:10), " 'I heard Your voice in the garden' – and my bones trembled. 'I was afraid because I was naked, and I hid.' I was naked of works, I was naked of commandments, and I was naked of deeds." It is therefore written "because I was naked, and I hid."

What was Adam's garment? It was a skin of fingernail. As soon as he ate from the fruit of the tree, this skin of fingernail was removed from him, and he saw himself naked. It is thus written (Genesis 3:11), "Who told you that you were naked? [Did you eat from the tree that I commanded you not to eat from it?]"

Adam said to the Blessed Holy One, "Master of all worlds: When I was alone, did I ever sin before You? But the woman that You placed with me enticed me from your word." It is thus written (Genesis 3:12), "The woman that you placed with me [gave it to me, and I ate]."

The Blessed Holy One said to her, "Is it not enough that you sinned? But you also caused Adam to sin."

She replied to Him, "Master of all worlds: The serpent enticed me to sin before You."

[God] took the three of them, and decreed upon them a sentence of nine curses and death.

He then cast the wicked Samael and his group from their holy place in heaven. He cut off the feet of the serpent and cursed it more than all the other animals and beasts of the field. He also decreed that it must shed its skin every seven years.

Samael was punished and made the guardian angel over the wicked Esau.

In the Future, when God uproots the Kingdom of Edom, he will lower him first. It is thus written (Isaiah 24:21), "God will punish the host of heights of high." This statement, death and punishment all came because she added to the commandment of the Blessed Holy One. Regarding this it is said, "Whoever increase diminishes."

*May God enlighten our eyes with the light of His Torah, May He place in our hearts His fear,
May we be worthy to greet Him.*

*He will enlighten the hear
Waken the heart with understanding
Make the heart shine with brilliance.*

THE REV. CANON G. H. BOX, M.A., D.D.
Davidson Professor of Old Testament Studies in the University of London

PREFACE

The writer owes profound gratitude to his teacher, Professor G. H. Box, of the University of London, without whose guidance, encouragement, generous interest and helpful criticism the present work would never have been brought into shape.

The Venerable the Archdeacon of Westminster, Dr R. H. Charles, has authorized the writer to give the present book the title "3 Enoch".

The second and third parts of the book (Translation with Notes and Hebrew text with critical apparatus) are in the main identical with those of the writer's thesis for the Ph.D. degree. The Introduction, however, has been wholly revised and partly shortened. The revision has been approved by Professor Box, who has been kind enough to read through the Introduction in its final form.

The writer wishes to express his thanks to the readers of the Cambridge University Press for the care and trouble which they have taken with the correction of the proofs and for the valuable suggestions given by them.

To the Senate of the University of London the writer is indebted for a grant of £100 out of the University of London Publication Fund, and to the Trustees of the Olaus Petri Stiftelse of the University of Upsala for a grant of the same amount towards the publication costs.

§ 3. MSS. & PRINTED BOOKS CONTAINING THE HEBREW BOOK OF ENOCH OR PARTS OF IT

THE complete Hebrew Book of Enoch has never been printed before. Most of the MSS. preserved also present 3 Enoch in a fragmentary form.

The MS. which is made the basis of the present edition is the

✓ (A) Bodleian MS. OPP. 556, foll. 314 seqq. (Neubauer, 1656: "Written in German Hebrew cursive characters by Yiṣḥaq יִשְׁחָק, about A.D. 1511?"), containing chh. 1-48 A B C D and entitled "Book of Enoch by R. Ishmael ben Elisha, High Priest". This MS. seems to be based on an earlier MS. in a very good textual condition, but it has suffered through the carelessness of the present copyist, though the corruptions caused by him are as a rule easily emended. Apart from these corruptions & without contradiction presents the very best readings of all the MSS. and printed fragments.

The text of A has throughout been collated with the following MSS. and printed fragments, and the different readings are given in the textual apparatus. The Hebrew text reproduces & exactly, but emendations are suggested in the Crit. App. and also, by the use of brackets, in the text.

The MSS. and printed fragments made use of are

- (2, B) Bodleian MS. MICH. 175, foll. 18 b seqq. (Neubauer 2257, written in German Hebrew cursive characters), containing chh. 3-22, 23, 24 and after chh. 15 and 22 respectively, the additional fragments chh. 15 B and 22 B C. The said fragments are included with the Ši'ur Qomā, 2 Ap. Ishm. and a few other fragments under the common title: Pirqē de R. Ishmael.
- (3, C) Bodleian MS. MICH. 256, foll. 25 a seqq. (written in Old German Hebrew cursive characters), containing chh. 3-12 and 15, entitled "The Elevation of Metatron". (Neubauer, 1748.) Valuable.
- (7, D) The fragments preserved in the printed editions of "Sefær Hekālōṣ" by the Tanna R. Išma'el, High Priest", viz. Lemberg, 1859 referred to as D 1, and Warsaw, 1864, referred to as D 2 (cf. Jellinek, Qontras ha-mMaggid, ii). Here are contained chh. 1-28, vs. 5 a and beg. of ch. 48 c. The readings are not very good, but sometimes valuable for critical purposes.
- (9, E) The printed fragm. in Jellinek, Beth ha Midrasch, vol. v, pp. 170-190, containing chh. 1-15, 23-48 A. The text in a bad condition.
- (1, F) The Enoch-Metatron fragments inserted at the end of letter Aleph in the printed ed. of Alphabet of R. 'Aqiba, Cracow, 1579, foll. 9 c-11 d, corresponding to ch. 48 B C D.
- (11, G) The same fragments in the reprinted edition of Alphabet of R. 'Aqiba, Amsterdam, 1708, foll. 11 a-12 b.
- (2, H) The same fragments in A. R. 'Aq. BH. vol. ii.
- (2, K) Bodleian MS. MICH. Add. 61 (Neubauer, 1915: Spanish Rabbinic characters), fol. 13 a, containing a short recension of chh. 48 B and 48 c.
- (3, L) British Museum Add. 27199 (writings of R. 'Ael'azār of Worms, copied by Elias Levita), containing chh. 3-12, 15, 16 (foll. 11 b-114 b); 13, 14, 15 B (fol. 116 a b: Lm); 48 c^{3-10, 12}, 48 D (fol. 115 a b: Lm); 22 B, 22 C (fol. 126 a: Lmr); 22 C, 19²⁻⁷ (foll. 78 a, 81 a: Lo).
- (YR, S (3)) Quotations in YR. and Šiyyumi.

In the Dropsie College Library in Philadelphia there is a MS. containing, acc. to B. Halper (Descriptive Catalogue of Genizah Fragments in Philadelphia, 1927, pp. 210 and 436), "the greater part of the Sefær Hekalot". It is possible that this MS. contains some parts of our book.

§ 4. THE MUTUAL RELATIONS AND AFFINITIES OF THE MSS. AND OTHER SOURCES

AN examination of the textual status of the various sources reveals a closer relation between γ and ψ on the one hand and between β , λ and ζ on the other, whereas $\aleph$ represents a comparatively independent textual tradition. ι , π and ς are more closely attached to each other than to $\aleph$. The relation of the various sources to an assumed archetype may be illustrated by the following diagram.

§ 5. SHORT SURVEY OF THE CONTENTS OF THE HEBREW BOOK OF ENOCH

THE Hebrew Book of Enoch may be divided into the following sections, viz.:

- (1) Introduction, chh. 1, 2.
- (2) Enoch-Metatron piece, chh. 3-16 (together with an additional fragment on the Ascension of Moses, ch. 15 B).
- (3) A section on Angelology, chh. 17-22, 25-28⁶. The section presents three different angelological systems, viz. A 2 (ch. 17), A 3 (ch. 18) and A 1 (chh. 19-22, 25-28⁶). Cf. below on the Angelology of 3 Enoch.
- (4) A section on the Judgment, chh. 28⁷-33².
- (5) The Celestial Q'ḏuššā, chh. 35, 36, 38-40.

- (6) The 'by-work' of the Mærkābā ('Divine Chariot') and the quasi-physical aspects of the heavenly regions, chh. 23, 24, 33³⁻⁵, 34, 37 and the additional chh. 22 B, 22 C.
- (7) Metatron shows R. Ishmael various wonders of the heavens, such as
- (a) the cosmic or mystical 'letters', ch. 41;
 - (b) polar opposites kept in balance by the Divine Names, ch. 42;
 - (c) the Pargod of the Throne, on which all past, present and future events are portrayed, ch. 45;
 - (d) the constellations and planets, ch. 46;
 - (e) the spirits of the unborn, of the dead and the spirits and souls of the punished angels, chh. 43, 44, 47;
 - (f) matters of Apocalyptic character, chh. 44⁷⁻¹⁰, 45⁵, 48 A.
- (8) The Divine Names, ch. 48 B.
- (9) A shorter Enoch-Metatron piece, ch. 48 C.
- (10) The names of Metatron, the transmission of the secrets to Moses, the protest of the angels, the chain of tradition.

§ 6. QUOTATIONS OF AND REFERENCES TO 3 ENOCH

THERE are numerous instances in the later mystical literature of dependence upon or acquaintance with 3 Enoch. This is particularly marked in the case of the conceptions of Metatron. The influence of 3 Enoch in this respect is dealt with below on "the conceptions of Metatron in related mystical literature" and "the conceptions of Metatron in later mystical literature" (sections 9 and 10).

Apart from this, fragments of 3 Enoch are quoted in YR. in Siyyumi, Reqanati, Moscato's Qol Yehudā, YRL. Ma'arækæp ha-²lohuḅ, Midraš Ruḅ, Zohar, Bāraiḅā de Ma'ase B'rešīḅ, etc.

(1) The question whether the Babylonian Talmud may be said to show acquaintance with the traditions embodied in 3 Enoch is discussed below, pp. 32-36, cf. also on "the conceptions of Metatron in Talmud, etc."

(2) Ḥayye Ḥanok (BH. iv. 129seqq., OM. i. 182a-183b, Sefær ha-yYāšār, Par. B'rešīḅ) shows dependence upon 3 Enoch, esp. chh. 6, 10³, 48 C¹, 4⁹, although that fragment in other parts moves in a quite different trend of traditions from our book. The Sefær No^{ah} (or T^efillaḥ 'Ādām hā Riṣon, BH. iii. 155; OM. ii. 401 a) also betrays some knowledge of the Enoch Literature, including 3 En.

(3) The Hekāloḥ Rabbāḥi, ch. 22^a, shows dependence upon 3 En. 18¹⁸; ib. ch. 26^b it reflects the expressions of 3 En. 12¹, 13¹.

(4) The Hekāloḥ Zoṯrāḥi, fol. 70 a, likewise betrays acquaintance with 3 En. 12¹, 13¹, etc.

(5) Harbā d^e Mošæ, end (ed. Gaster, London, 1896), reflects 3 En. 13 and 41.

(6) Bāraiḥā de Ma^{ase} Berešit (in Rab Pe'alim, Tiqqunim, etc., pp. 46 seqq.), towards the end, quotes 3 En. 17⁴, 5^{6b}.

The Midraš on Šemḥazai and 'Azza'el is, perhaps, dependent on 3 En. 5.

(7) Šimmušā Rabbā (BH. vi. 109 seqq.) resumes the contents of 3 En. 6-10 and 48 c.

(8) Yalquṯ R^e 'uḇeni, foll. i. 54 a seqq., contains a great many quotations from 3 Enoch. These quotations are sometimes cited from the writings of R. 'El'āzār ben Y^ehuḏā (of Worms), such as Soḏe Rāzā (54 b, 56 a) and H^akām hā-Rāzīm (55 a), sometimes from Pirqē Hekāloḥ (55 b). The quotations are: 3 En. 22 (fol. 54 a); 4 and 8 (fol. 54 b); 6, 15, 3 (fol. 55 b); 12, 48 c¹², 5¹⁻⁶, 13-14² (foll. 56 a, 57 b, 59 a b).

(9) The Lesser Yalquṯ R^e 'uḇeni, on Metatron no. 6, quotes 3 En. 6, 15 and 3 from Pirqē Hekāloḥ (cf. YR. i. 55 b).

(10) MSS. containing writings of R. 'Ēl'āzār of Worms quote 3 En. 3-12, 15 from "Bāraiḥās belonging to the Ma^{ase} Mærkābā" (Brit. Mus. MS. Add. 27199), and 3 En. 3-22, 23, 24, from Pirqē de R. Išma'el or Bāraiḥās (Bodl. MICH. 175).

(11) Šiyyuni, foll. 13 d, 14 a, quotes 3 En. 6, 15, 3 from Sefær Hekāloḥ, cf. ib. foll. 9 c d.

(12) S. ha-kKuzāri, beg. and (13) Reḡanati, comm. on the Pentateuch, ed. Venice, foll. 30 and 35 a, cf. 133 a, likewise (14) Moscato, Qol Y^ehuḏā, 189, quote fragments of the Enoch-Metatron pieces of 3 Enoch.

The quotations in the writings of R. 'El'āzār of Worms, in YR., YRL., Šiyyuni, Reḡanati, etc., show that at one time 3 Enoch had become incorporated into a larger collection of writings concerned with the Hekāloḥ, and, further, that this collection must have formed part of a compilation referred to as Ma^{ase} Mærkābā. From other quotations in the said works we know that the Ma^{ase} Mærkābā contained, besides 3 Enoch and the Hekāloḥ, also the Ši'ur Qomā, Revelations of Moses, etc.

(15) Ma^{aræḳæḥ} ha'^ælohuḥ, ed. Ferrara, 1557, foll. 116 a seqq., quotes 3 En. 48 c from 'The Haggadā on Enoch'.

(16) The Zohar refers to the Enoch-Metatron-Na'ar traditions as contained in 'the well-known Bārāiḡās' (i. 223 b).¹

The Zohar quite frequently quotes from 'The Book of Enoch'. These quotations show that 'The Book of Enoch' referred to in the Zohar was a large collection of Enoch traditions some of which are contained in 1 and 2 Enoch, others in writings now lost, whereas others again clearly emanate from 3 Enoch.

Zohar, i. 37 b,² iii. 240 a, 348 b, 10 b, quote from 'The Book of Enoch' matters contained in 3 Enoch.

Zohar, i. 37 b (after quotations clearly dependent upon 3 Enoch), ii. 55 a refer to details of 'The Book of Enoch', which are not found in 3 Enoch. They correspond well, however, with certain passages in 1 and 2 Enoch (vide 1 Enoch 24⁴, 5, 2 Enoch 8).

Zohar, i. 55 b, 58 b, ii. 100 a, 105 b, 192 b, 217 a, ii. 180 b, also cite 'The Book of Enoch' or 'The Book of the Secrets of Enoch' (ii. 180 b), but give no parallel whatever with 1, 2 or 3 Enoch.

It is evident that the Zohar regarded 3 Enoch as belonging to the Enoch Literature, and also, that it associated 3 Enoch with what is known to us as 1 and 2 Enoch. Lastly it should be noticed that 'The Book of Enoch' of the Zohar contains material from a time much later than 3 Enoch.

(17) Midraš Ruḡ, 85 b, resumes the traditions of 3 En. 48 c¹⁻⁹, 10, 12, 10, 6, 12.

(18) *Miškan hā'Ēḡuḡ*³ (by Moses de Leon) quotes from 'The Book of Enoch' passages reminding of 3 En. 39 and 48 B².

Brit. Mus. ms. Add. 15299, foll. 45 b seq., contains a 'Book of Enoch' which treats of the preparations necessary to obtain communion with the high angel-princes, in particular with YEHOEL (another name for Metatron). It is immediately followed by Sefær ha-yYāšār. At the beginning of the latter the frequent tradition is put forth, according to which the S. ha-yYāšār together with another book was given to Adam by the angel GALLIŠUR, by Adam committed to Seth and after him to Enoch. This is also set forth at the beginning of S. Rāzi'el ha-mMal'āk. Acc. to Zohar, i. 55 b, 58 b, one of these "two books" was 'The Book of Enoch'. On this cf. note on 3 En. 48 D¹⁰.

The 'S. ha-yYāšār' or, as it is also called, 'The Book of the First Adam' or 'The Book of Noah', really forms part of a vast literature consisting of various magical formulas, etc. The compilers of this magical literature were anxious to obtain authority for their 'books', and hence they tried to append them to the Enoch Literature by maintaining that 'two books were committed to Enoch'. The one was of course the older Enoch Literature, the other was intended to be understood as identical with the writings issued by them.

§ 7. ORIGIN AND DATE OF COMPOSITION OF THE HEBREW BOOK OF ENOCH AND ITS RELATION TO COGNATE MYSTICAL WRITINGS

THE present book has not been made the subject of critical investigation as to origin and date of composition—apart from the short discussion of it by M. Bittenwieser¹ (see below). On the rare occasions when it has been referred to² it has almost without exception been grouped with the bulk of Jewish mystical writings which are termed 'Gaonic Mystical Literature', and within this group it has usually been counted as one of the so-called Hekāloḥ works (mainly because one of the titles under which it is quoted is 'Sefær Hekāloḥ', cf. BH. v. 170).

The history of the grouping together of the mystical works in question under the term 'Gaonic Mystical Literature' may be considered to begin with the chapter entitled "Geheimlehre" (Secret Doctrine) in Zunz's Die gottesdienstlichen Vorträge der Juden, historisch entwickelt, 2nd ed., pp. 165-179. After dealing with the traces of mystical doctrines and speculations in the Talmud and accepting the possibility of the existence of early Bārāiḥās on mystical subjects, Zunz says:

"Erst mit der zweiten Hälfte des Geonäischen Zeitalters, etwa um

¹ Jewish Encyclopaedia, i. 678, article 'Apocalyptic Literature; Neo-Hebraic'.

² Usually the references to the 'Hebrew Book of Enoch' have in view only the fragments contained in ch. 48 B C D of our book, the actual 3 En. being unknown.

A.D. 780, also mit der Epoche der allmählich auflebenden Wissenschaftlichkeit und nachdem die Beschäftigung mit den Materien der Geheimlehre häufiger geworden, traten eigene (sic) Schriften auf, die sich an die Erläuterung der Schöpfung, an die Schilderung der göttlichen Majestät wagen." As mystical writings of this kind Zunz enumerates the following, viz.: (1) S. Y'esirā; (2) chh. iii and iv of Pirqē dē R. 'Ēli'āzār; (3) Hekāloḥ which he regards as older than P. R. 'El. iii, iv; (4) S. Rāzie'l (acc. to Zunz younger than the Hekāloḥ, though not to be confused with the Sefar Rāzie'l ha-Gādol by 'Ēli'āzār of Worms); (5) Alphabet of R. 'Aqiba; (6) Midraś Kōnēn; (7) S. ha-y Yāšār; (8) Yuhāsīn.

As may be seen from this list the present book was unknown to Zunz. Through the Alphabet of R. 'Aqiba in its printed edd. he might, however, have gained knowledge of the shorter Enoch-Metatron piece, corresponding to ch. 48 c of the present book, in Alph. R. 'Aqiba (ed. Cracow et seqq.) inserted at the end of letter Aleph.

M. Steinschneider does not, in his treatment of the mystical literature,¹ lay down the results of his own investigations, but, as he expressly declares, follows the exposition of Zunz in the aforementioned chapter in GV.

A much fuller treatment than that of Zunz(-Steinschneider) is given to these writings by H. Grätz.² Grätz does not know of the present book, but he attaches great importance to the Enoch-Metatron fragment contained in the Alph. R. 'Aqiba at the end of letter Aleph (identical with ch. 48 B C of 3 Enoch). He uses this fragment together with a MS. containing polemical strictures by Salmon ben Y'ruḥām against Sa'adyā, as starting-point for his theory as to the original literary connection between the various writings under consideration. Ben Y'ruḥām quotes various passages, occurring in different mystical writings, from the Alphabet of R. 'Aqiba. From a comparison with the passages quoted by Ben Y'ruḥām Grätz maintains:

(1) that the Enoch-Metatron fragment was an original constituent part of the Alph. R. 'Aqiba;

(2) that the Hekāloḥ belonged to the Enoch-Metatron fragments;³

² In B. Frankel's Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums, viii (1859), 67-78, 103-118, 140-153.

³ Grätz's demonstration on this point is not convincing; his arguments are:

(a) Ben Y'ruḥām, after quoting from A. R. 'Aq. a passage (which is in reality part of Ši'ur Qomā) attributed to R. Isma'el, continues by mentioning that R. Isma'el was one of the martyrs, which is maintained also in Hek. R., esp. chh. 3-5. Cf. 1 and 2 Leg. Mart.

(b) A MS. in the Oppenheimer Library (1061 a, after Steinschneider, cf. Neu-

(3) that there was originally a connection between the Heḱāloḅ, the Sar Torā (being chh. xxvii-xxx of the BH. edition of the Hek. R.) and the Ši'ur Qomā.

Grätz's argument for an original connection between the Sar Torā and the Ši'ur Qomā is in fact based on a misreading of Salmon ben Yēruḥām, the passage from which he gives in full on p. 76 op. cit. Grätz says that Salmon ben Yēruḥām in this passage quotes a chapter belonging to the Sar Torā from Ši'ur Qomā. The passage does not contain any reference at all to the Ši'ur Qomā, though the author in a preceding passage makes mention of the Ši'ur Qomā mysteries.

On the connection between the Sar Torā and the Hek. R., Grätz says: The Sar Torā really belongs to the Heḱāloḅ "mit dem es nicht bloss zufällig zusammen copiert und zusammengedruckt ist, denn es beruft sich zum Schluss auf die in den echten Hekaloth ausgegebenen Gebet- und Lobformeln" (i.e. the 'Tiḫaddar, Tiḫromem u' Tiḫnasse Maelæk M'fo'ār, etc.' which in ch. 30 is cited by the beginning words but given in full in ch. 7²). "Folglich hing das Sar Torah mit Hekaloth zusammen... als ein Zusammenhängendes scheint es auch R. Hai zu fassen" (when referring to Hek. R., Hek. Zot. and Sar Torā).

(4) The Rev. of Moses as it appears in Yalquṭ Re'uḇeni, 101 c d (ed. Warsaw, 1901, vol. ii. fol. 67 a b, cf. below on Metatron), belongs to the same "single opus of mystical writings".

Grätz here, p. 103 op. cit., bases upon a quotation from the same polemical writing of Salmon ben Yēruḥām, but the parallel between this quotation and the Rev. of Moses is far-fetched.

What Grätz's arguments show is merely the fact, that the mystical writings in question were known to Salmon ben Yēruḥām and possibly, as mystical writings on cognate subjects, were grouped together at that time, but it is not demonstrated by this that they originally formed a unity.

This is also, by the way, and almost inadvertently, admitted by bauer) gives the Heḱāloḅ under the title 'Book of Enoch'. This ms. is no other than the Bodl. opp. 556, the N of the text edition of the present book—but Grätz quite naturally was led to believe that the ms. represented the Heḱāloḅ as known at that time, i.e. the Hek. R., containing the references to the traditions connected with the 'Ten Martyrs'. In the ms. in question, being the Hebrew Book of Enoch, there is no mention of the martyrs, nor is R. Iṣma'el, who figures so prominently in it, referred to as one of the martyrs.

(c) Two quotations, one from Yalquṭ Re'uḇeni (100 d), the other from Šiyyuni, containing material of an Enoch-Metatron character, cite Pirqē Heḱāloḅ. On this point cf. further below.

Grätz when he says: "Wenigstens lag es (the 'mystical opus') als ein Ganzes Salmon ben Y'eruḥām vor, woraus er seine Waffen zur Bekämpfung des Rabbinismus gegen Sa'adyā nahm." But from this sound critical position the author immediately departs to treat of the writings as an original unity.

Having laid down his theory as to the unity of the mystical writings in question, Grätz proceeds to demonstrate that these writings belong to a post-Talmudic period, viz. the Ga'onic time, mainly, as he declares, on the grounds "dass die darin herrschenden Vorstellungen theils dem Talmudischen Zeitalter unbekannt waren, theils von Talmudischen Autoritäten perhorresciert wurden". His arguments are:

(1) Metatron is in the Talmud not identified with Enoch. In Talmud Metatron is an angel existing already at the creation (Grätz cites Tos. Yeb. 16 b, Hullin 60 a, i.e. the passages on the Prince of the World). Enoch, on the other hand, is in Talmudic times so little glorified as to be put on the list of the wicked or regarded as a 'Schwankender', sometimes righteous, at other times wicked. (Gen. R. xxv).¹

"Auch Metatron selbst stand den Talmudisten nicht so hoch, dass sie ihn gewissermassen zum δέυτερος θεός stempeln sollten. Sie lassen ihn bestraft werden... (alluding to TB. Hag. 15 a). Erst in folge der christlichen Dogmatik erhielt Henoch ein hohes Interesse: Die Interpretation des Verses (Gen. v. 24) wurde von der Patristik scharf betont, und Henoch galt als Protochristos und als Beweis für die Himmelfahrt, etc."

Because of his conviction of the entirely un-Jewish character of any glorification of Enoch, Grätz, on p. 106, polemizes violently against the view that the Ethiopic Enoch (1 En.) is of a pre-Christian origin. He says for instance: "Für jeden Unbefangenen aber ist es unzweifelhaft dass das Machwerk 'Buch Henoch' nicht in der politisch bewegten Hasmonäerzeit, sondern in der mystisch dämmernden nach-apostolischen Epoche entstehen konnte". The glorification of Enoch, Grätz maintains, must therefore have originated with Christians.

Grätz hence contends that the infiltration of the Enoch legend into Jewish circles must be relegated to the post-Talmudic age, and the medium through which it was brought into the circle of Jewish ideas was Islam, by whose adherents Enoch ('Idris) was held in high esteem (referring to Sura 19^{57, 58}).²

(2) Further, acc. to Grätz, the 'rude anthropomorphism' of this literature (Grätz has the Ši'ur Qomā in view) points to a post-Talmudic origin.

(3) In the Sar Torā he finds references to Ga'onic institutions, viz. in ch. xxviii. 2. The passage runs as follows:

אני יודע מה אתם מבקשים... לקשור כתרים בראשיכם ועמדות מלכות לכוון מלכים להשתחוות לכם ליוזק חזנים להשתמח לפניכם להפקיע שמכם בכל כיפה וזכרכם בכרכי הים להאיר פניכם כזריחת היום ובין עיניכם בכוכב שחר referring to the aspirations of the mystic who desires to partake of the magical power of the 'Seal' (Ḥoṣpām), the 'Magical Formula', i.e. the Letters and Names of the Kæpær Norā or the Sar Torā. In the preceding passage (ch. xxviii. 1) reference is made to Yeshiboth, to Torā, Talmud, H'elākā, Secrets, Pilpul, which do not particularly point to a Ga'onic origin: cf. especially the parallel in TB. Hag. 14 a: "Masters of Scripture, Mišna, Talmud, Agada and Šemu'ōḥ". The Sar Torā is, however, probably later than the Hek. R., and, in any case, it is later than 3 Enoch.

(4) His final argument for the post-Talmudic origin of the writings, Grätz finds in Sa'adyā's doubts as to R. Iśma'el's authorship of Ši'ur Qomā (in H'elīkoḥ Qæðæm, ed. Pollak, p. 69).

Within the Ga'onic period Grätz fixes the date of the whole group of mystical writings to the first half of the ninth century. His reasons are (apart from the fact that the quotations by Sa'adyā and ben Yeruḥām necessitate the existence of the writings before the tenth century):

(1) The Rev. of Moses (i.e. one recension) is contained in P'esiqḡa (Rabbāḡi), which collection was finished in the year 777 after the Destruction of the Temple (hence about A.D. 845). The P'esiqḡa as it wurden auch jüdischen Agadisten auf ihn aufmerksam und verwandeln ihn zu mystischen Zwecken indem sie ihn mit Metatoron identifizierten".

Sura 19^{57, 58}:

وَأَذْكُرْفِي الْكِتَابِ إِدْرِيسَ إِنَّهُ كَانَ صِدِّيقًا نَبِيًّا وَرَفَعْنَاهُ مَكَانًا عَلِيًّا

"And commemorate 'Idris (i.e. Enoch) in the Book; For he was righteous and a Prophet, and we lifted him up to a high place." Vide also Sura 21⁸⁵.

وَأِسْمَعِيلَ وَإِدْرِيسَ وَذَا الْكِفْلِ كُلٌّ مِنَ الصَّابِرِينَ

Grätz might with as much reason have derived the whole pseudepigraphical literature of the OT. from, say, the Mi'raj of Abū Yazīd al-Bistāmī (vide Nicholson, An Early Arabic Version of the Mi'raj, etc.). Grätz's impossible deductions are reproduced here at length, since they form, directly or indirectly, the only basis for the usual anti-mystically biased representations of the time and provenience of the so-called Ga'onic mystical literature.

lay before R. Tam contained a reference to the various names of Metatron (acc. to Tos. on TB. Yeb. 16 b¹).

(2) Bishop Agobard of Lyons, in a polemical epistle to Louis the Pious against the Jews (De judaïcis superstitionibus), about 829, betrays knowledge of the Ši'ur Qomā representations. The following may be cited:

"quod nobis non minime notum est qui quotidie pene cum eis (the Jews) loquentes mysteria erroris ipsorum audivimus. Dicunt denique Deum suum esse corporeum et corporis lineamentis per membra distinctum et alia quadam parte illum audire, alia videre, alia vero loqui, vel aliud quid agere, ac per hoc humanum corpus ad imaginem Dei factum, excepto quod ille digitos habeat inflexibiles ac rigentes, utpote qui nil manibus operetur", which—save for the 'inflexible fingers'—seems to reflect the Ši'ur Qomā. Another quotation from Agobard's letter given by Grätz presents the current picture of the Most High seated in the Raqi'^a 'arābōḥ, in 'magno quamvis palatio', and surrounded or carried by the Hayyōḥ (bestiis). A third passage runs: "(The Jews say) Deum habere septem tubas, quorum una mille ei cubitis metiatur" (cf. letter v in A. R. Aq.), and a fourth shows that these works were extant in writing at that time: "et conscripta mendacia, etc."

The origin of the mystical writings does not go back farther than about A.D. 820, says Grätz. This is, acc. to his opinion, not irreconcilable with the fact that already nine years later they were known in France to Bishop Agobard, for Grätz can point to a tradition preserved by Zaccuto² acc. to which

"der Kaiser Karl sich von dem Chalifen einen jüdischen Gelehrten für seine Staaten erbeten habe, und dieser hatte ihm einen R. Machir zugeschickt, der sich in Narbonne niedergelassen und... in Südfrankreich Schulen gegründet habe". And hence "literarische Erzeugnisse konnten in kurzer Zeit ihren Weg vom Orient nach Frankreich finden" (!).

The absence in Pirqē dē R. 'Eli'æzær (between 809 and 813) of any reference to Enoch-Metatron and the Ši'ur Qomā is to Grätz a further evidence that the mystical writings were not in existence at that time.

(If this 'argumentum e silentio' were valid, it would seem that it would prove that also the Talmud, e.g. tractate H'agigā, came into existence between the years 820 and 829 A.D. (!). Grätz concludes: "Die Mystik mag sich also erst um 820 Bahn gebrochen haben, und so konnte sie um 829 bereits in Frankreich bekannt sein".)

Grätz's interest in fixing the date to the beginning of the ninth century is due to his desire to maintain the Islamitic origin of the mystical writings in question. His contention is firstly, that the Ši'ur Qomā is the real kernel of the mysticism under consideration, secondly, that the 'gross anthropomorphism' of this writing cannot possibly have originated in Judaism, and must hence be derived from Islam, where especially the sect 'Mughassima' and men such as 'Mughira ibn Said Alighi' held anthropomorphic views of the Deity.¹

The notice preserved by Maqrizi, acc. to which the Jews were divided into Karaites, wholly repudiating anthropomorphism (by Maqrizi called Ananites after Anan), Rabbanites, accepting a milder form of picturing God after the manner of man, and Galutiya who went farther than the Rabbanites, is therefore acc. to Grätz to be interpreted to the effect that one sect, the mystics (i.e. the Galutiya), had accepted the anthropomorphism of the Arabic Mughassima school and the related Mushabbihites and Hishamites.

The anthropomorphisms of the Islamitic sects in question were, acc. to Grätz, derived from no other source than the Qoran, from a literal explanation of relevant passages.

It should be pointed out here that when Grätz emphasizes the gross anthropomorphism of the mystical writings in contrast to the 'Talmudic' representations, he can only refer to the short passage in the Ši'ur Qomā which on the face of it looks like a description of the measures and sizes of the various Divine members but in reality merely concerns the Throne-of-Glory manifestation and is on a level with the similar representation in the Babylonian Talmud, Hag. 13 a (see below). The rest of the mystical works in question in no way go beyond the Haggada passages of the Talmud as regards 'anthropomorphic views'.

The mystical works, belonging to the same group (or forming parts of the same large work) which Grätz thus finally assigns to the ninth century, are enumerated at the end of his article as follows: (a) Oḥiyyoḥ d' R. 'Aqiba, and the following belonging to it; (b) Sefər H'anoḵ (i.e. the small Enoch fragment at the end of letter Aleph in Alph. R. 'Aqiba); (c) Ši'ur Qomā; (d) Hekāloḥ Rabbāḥi; (e) Hekāloḥ Ze'erḥa (i.e. Hekāloḥ Zoṭerāḥi); (f) Sar Torā; (g) Ma'yan Hoḵmā (i.e. a recension of the Revelation of Moses. See above under 'Sources and Literature').

To these he adds (after Hai Ga'on's statement) the writings devoted to 'practical mysticism', i.e. mainly magical in character: (a) Sefər ha-y Yāšār; (b) Ḥarbā d' Mošæ; (c) Rāzā Rabbā or Sefær hā Rāzīm; (d) Sefær Šem bæn Noḥ.

The arguments and conclusions by Grätz have since been often repeated, whereas no further arguments in support of his theory have been adduced by subsequent writers. Thus S. Karppe bases exclusively, it seems, on Grätz.¹ He gives the same list of writings, only with the omission of the Sar Torā and the Revelation of Moses. Concerning the connection between the writings, he says:

“Nous nous trouvons, en effet, en présence d'un certain nombre de fragments d'œuvres sans que nous puissions dire à coup sûr où ils commencent et où ils finissent, s'ils sont les chapitres d'un grand ouvrage synthétique, ou des parcelles d'œuvres indépendantes que le hasard ou la confusion des citations ultérieures a enchevêtrées. Ces fragments sont communément dénommés ainsi” (follows an enumeration of the writings).

Phillipp Bloch² also follows (and cites) Grätz. The Arabic influence in these writings is to him obvious. He follows Grätz also in assigning the writings to the ninth century. He gives exactly the same list of mystical works as Grätz, while adding, quite ad rem: “Hechaloth Zutrathi und Sefer Chanoch lassen sich vorläufig nicht feststellen”.

Bloch translates a few passages from Heḳālōḥ and Alph. R. ^{‘Aqība}, among which are the Enoch-Metatron fragment at the end of letter Aleph in the printed edd. of Alph. R. ^{‘Aqība} and the introductory chapters of Sefær Heḳālōḥ (corresponding to chh. 1 and 2 of the present book). Furthermore he gives Ga'on Šerirā's responsum on the Ši'ur Qomā (in translation): “Gott behüte dass R. Ischmael derartige Dinge aus eigenem Kopf gesagt hätte. Wie sollte auch ein Mensch auf solche Einfälle aus eigenem Antrieb kommen! Ferner ist unser Schöpfer zu hoch und erhaben, als dass er Glieder und Maasse haben könnte, wie der einfache Wortlaut besagt... Das ist aber nur die Ausdrucksweise einer Wissenschaft, hinter der grosse, bergeshohe und wundersame Mysterien stecken...”.

A. Jellinek in editing chh. from a ms. that correspond to chh. 1-15, 23-48 A of the present book³ does not give any opinion as to the time of origin.

Louis Ginzberg, in enumerating the mystic works “of Ga'onic times" (evidently depending on Grätz), mentions the present book as "a version of the Hekaloth".¹

M. Bittenwieser treats at some length of the Hebrew Book of Enoch.² With regard to time of composition, he says:

"Apart from the fact that R. Ishmael, of the period of the Hadrianic persecution, figures as the author, and from the allusion in the last chapter to the Destruction of the Temple (through which data the earliest date possible is fixed), there are no definite references to historical events and conditions from which the date of the composition of the Book of Enoch could be more exactly determined. There is, however, a passage in Talmud Berakot about R. Ishmael which naturally suggests itself in this connection, and which admits of the adoption of at least a latest possible date." (Buttenwieser here translates the well-known passage Ber. 7 a on R. Išma'el beholding 'aḥapri'el Yāh YHWH Šēbā'ōḥ sitting upon the high and exalted throne, etc.) "The parallel is obvious. The passages quoted compel the conclusion that the Hebrew Book of Enoch cannot have been written later than the time of the completion of the Babylonian Talmud."

R. H. Charles³ accepts the general view of M. Buttenwieser.

G. F. Moore⁴ refers to our book in the following manner: "Much later (scil. than the time of the Talmuds) Enoch re-emerges in a similar rôle (scil. as conductor to Paradise and Gehenna and heavens in general) with descriptions of the Heavenly Courts and the like, showing that some reminiscence of his journeys through the universe had survived or been revived. Several pieces of this sort are to be found in Jellinek, Bet ha Midrasch... Among these particular mention may be made of that in Part v. pp. 170-190 (i.e. the fragment of 3 En. referred to in the present edition as E)".

It seems that M. Buttenwieser has opened the right way towards a determining of the time of composition and origin of the present book, in treating it primarily on its own merits, and only in the second instance in its connection with the other writings that have come to be associated with it. Further, the date suggested by Buttenwieser as a terminus ante quem is probably correct. The 'parallel' from TB. Ber. 7 a, adduced by him, is, however, of less value in this connection. The passage is not generally accepted as genuine, and bears the marks of a later time than our book. But there are closer parallels. It may be suggested, to begin with, that the main body of the book belongs to a time not later than e.g. TB. Hag. 11 b-16 a (the largest continuous exposition of mystical matters in the Babylonian Talmud).

The style, the matters dealt with in Hag. ii and chh. 3-48 A of our book respectively, as well as the general ideas met with in both, do not suggest a later time for our book, but, possibly, a different circle from which the conceptions have derived their peculiar shape. To show this, some parallels in ideas and manner of expression may be pointed out:

TB. Hag.:

Fol. 12 a: "The first Adam extended from one end of the world to the other" (as a symbol of his perfection), rel. by R. Y^ehuḏā b. 'Āl'ay.

Ib. "When he sinned, the Holy One diminished him."

Ib. "The first Adam saw by the first light from one end of the world to the other, but when God beheld the generation of the Flood and the generation of the confusion of tongues he removed it, etc." (cf. Gen. R. xi. 2, xii. 4, 5 including the generation of 'Eⁿoš); attr. to R. 'Āl'āzār.

Ib. "God created heaven by mixing water and fire" (Bāraiḇā).

Hag. 12 b (Bāraiḇā of R. Yose): "The earth is standing upon pillars, the pillars upon the water, the water upon the mountains, the mountains upon the wind, the wind upon the tempest and the tempest is suspended on the arm of the Holy One".

Ib. The seven heavens and their contents. The names of the heavens agree with those of 3 En. 17³ and 33⁵. In other respects the H^aḡigā passage here contains elements belonging to a later stage than our book. Thus 3 Enoch agrees, against H^aḡigā, with the earlier Apocalyptic and Pseudepigraphic writings in assigning angelic inhabitants to all the heavens: cf. Test. Levi iii, Ap. Bar., Asc. Isa., 2 En. 3-20. The conception of Mikael at the Celestial Altar does not occur in our book: only in the additional ch. 15 B the Celestial Tabernacle—of Metatron—is mentioned. The song-uttering angels (in Mā'ōn, the fifth heaven) are in H^aḡigā pictured in a manner more resembling that of Hek. R. than of 3 Enoch which here follows more closely the earlier traditions embodied e.g. in 1 Enoch and the Apocalypse of Abraham.

Ch. 42.

Ch. 41³: "the whole world is sustained by Wisdom, Understanding, Knowledge, Prudence, Meekness and Righteousness". The same idea is put forth in ch. 8. On this point Hag. seems to represent a more developed stage than our book. See notes ad loca.

The expressions used to describe the contents of Mākon, the sixth heaven, recall those of 3 En. 34 and 37 as well as of 2 En.: "the treasures of snow, of hail . . . chamber of the Stormwind" (Sufā), etc.

The representation of the contents of 'Arāboḥ Rāqīa', the seventh heaven—the treasures of Righteousness, Right, Mercy, Life, Peace, Blessings—corresponds to 3 En. 8, 10⁶, 48 c³; that of the souls of the righteous and the souls and spirits of those who are not yet created in 'Arāboḥ' exactly corresponds to 3 En. 43; for the pre-existence of spirits and souls the same scriptural passage, viz. Is. 57¹⁶, is quoted in both contexts; on the other hand, the conception of the resurrection-dew does not appear in our book. The short summary of the Mærkābā-picture in Haḡ. ib.—"Ofannim, Serafim, Hayyōḥ ha-qQodæš, the ministering angels, the Throne of Glory, the King, the Living God, high and lifted up"—is not substantially different from similar summaries in our book, cf. e.g. ch. 6². (Upon the present writer this passage TB. Haḡ. makes the impression of being dependent upon 3 Enoch. In this way a traditionist familiar with 3 Enoch could easily have summarized 3 Enoch in respect of the contents of the 'Arāboḥ Rāqīa'; especially the little incident of an additional, meaningless, 'and souls' in TB. Haḡ. compared with 3 En. 43 and 47 is highly suggestive here.)

That the material used in H^aḡiḡā contained a developed system of Mærkābā-angelology is apparent from the elaborate descriptions in the following context, e.g. on the Hayyōḥ on fol. 13 a.

The specific picture of the 'seven Halls' does not occur in H^aḡiḡā, but the idea itself is not unknown to judge from the expression in Haḡ. fol. 13 a: distinguishing between the בתי ג' and the בתי ברא' which corresponds to the division between the six outer and the seventh inmost Hall in 3 Enoch.

Fol. 13 a. The speculations on the "Rāqīa" above the heads of the Hayyōḥ" (after Ezek. 1²²) are more after the manner of the later Mærkābā-literature than of our book. (R. Aḥa b. Ya^aqōḇ, 4 B. A.) Cf. the additional chapters 15 B, 22 B C.

Ib. The measures or distances of the heavens and the sizes of the Hayyōḥ present a stage somewhat between the representations of 3 En. chh. 21 and 22 c (additional). Thus the description of the immense sizes of the Hayyōḥ is more extravagant in Haḡ. than in 3 En. 21.

It may be surmised, in fact, that the present passage, introduced as a Bārāiḡā of R. Yoḥ^anān bæn Zakkai, is more related to the Ši'ur Qomā picture. The reference to the measures of the "feet of the Throne of Glory", of the "Throne of Glory itself", and the implied distance between the "feet of the Throne of Glory" and the seat of the Divine Manifestation, the "King 'El Hay y^e Qayyām Rām y^e Nissā" (cf. 22 c^{2, 3}), reads like an introduction or allusion to the Ši'ur Qomā, 2¹. The Ši'ur Qomā (2) begins by stating the distances between the seat of the Throne downwards (the feet of the Throne) and between the seat and upwards. 'El Hay ʿe Qayyām is the expression used also in the Ši'ur Qomā when referring to the Divine Manifestation on the Throne.

Ib. The term Sipre Torā, i.e. the 'Secrets of Torah', the 'Secrets of the Law', is here used in the same sense as in 3 Enoch, i.e. as a technical term by preference for a certain aspect of the mystical doctrines. It designates the essence of the Torā and—what is considered equivalent—the first elements of the whole manifested world. Cf. 3 En. 11¹, 48 c^{4,7}, d^{3,7} and notes ad loca. (Attr. to R. 'Ammi, 3 P. A.)

Ib. The specific mystical importance attached to the Hašmal is paralleled in 3 En. 34, 36, 37, but more particularly in the additional ch. 15 B².

Haḡ. 13 b. The Hašmal used also with reference to a certain class of angels as in 3 Enoch where the Hašmallim are enumerated together with the Merkābā-creatures: chh. 7, 48 c⁴.

Ib. The speculations on and interpretations of the words רצוא ושוב Ezek. 1¹⁴, on which Haḡigā expatiates, are not found in 3 Enoch except in the additional ch. 22 c⁵. They are very frequent in later works. The Bāzāq (Ezek. 1¹⁴) is in 3 Enoch not yet the object of speculations as in Haḡigā here, and in Hek. R. (131, et al.).

Ib. "The אופן אחד בארץ (Ezek. 1¹⁵) refers to the angel Sandalfon." The conception of Sandalfon is nowhere met with in the present book. Neither is the picture of an angel-prince wreathing crowns for His Master represented in 3 Enoch. Both ideas seem to belong to a later stage than 3 Enoch. They recur frequently in later literature. Sandalfon is met with e.g. in Rev. of Moses (Hebrew) and in Hek. Zof. (Cf. below on the conception of Metatron, pp. 106 f.) Here a Bāraiḡā connected with R. 'Aḡl'āzār.

Ib. The various pānim (faces) of the Merkābā-angels, in particular the Hayyōḡ (after Ezek. 1¹⁰, 10¹⁴). On this subject Haḡigā is more elaborate than 3 Enoch, cf. 3 En. 2¹ ("eagles of the Merkābā"), 21^{1,3} and the add. ch. 15 B² ('the Lion'). Haḡigā here approaches the Hek. R., ch. 26⁴.

The changing of the שור into the כרוב is an idea not met with in 3 Enoch.

Ib. The numbers of the angels and the 'troops' or 'gēdudim' discussed on the basis of Dan. 7¹⁰. This is paralleled in 3 En. 17, 35⁴⁻⁶, etc.

Ib. Speculations on the Nēhar di-Nur or 'fiery river' (on the same scriptural basis). These are well in line with those of 3 Enoch; cf. chh. 18^{19,21}, 19⁴, 33⁵, 36^{1,2}, 47^{1,2}. The fiery river goes forth from the perspiration of the Hayyōḡ; cf. 3 En. 18²⁵, in our book usually "from under the Throne of Glory" as in 1 En. 14¹⁹.

Haḡ. 14 a. The traditions concerning the creation of the angels from the fiery river or through the Divine word and their immersion (and extinction) in the Nēhar di-Nur are presented in similar, although somewhat varying, manner in Haḡ. and in our book, chh. 27³, 40⁴, 47^{1,2}. The same scriptural support is used by both; cf. notes ad loca.

Ib. The two Thrones of the Holy One. The dictum (attributed to R. Yose the Galilean), acc. to which one Throne is for Judgement, the other for Mercy, reminds us of chh. 31 and 33 (the two Divine aspects, the Attributes of Justice and Mercy).

The second dictum (attributed to 'Aḡl'āzār bən 'Azaryā), acc. to which one Throne is placed beneath the other, as a sort of foot-stool

(or [attributed to R. 'Aqiba as his original opinion] the one being the Throne of Glory, the other the Throne of David, i.e. the Messiah, cf. TB. Sanh. 38 a, 67 b), raises the question, whether behind this there is not a covert allusion to the traditions of the throne of Metatron being placed below the Throne of Glory. In any case, the different explanations here given of the 'thrones' of Dan. 7⁹ show an intimate familiarity with the view of a second Throne by the side of the Throne of Glory.¹

Ḥag. 14 b. The well-known passage about the four who entered Paradise (repeated in the Hek. Zof., Bodl. MICH. 9) emphasizes the dangers of entering to behold the various heavenly mysteries, and may hence be said to be paralleled by the notions expressed in ch. 1³ of 3 Enoch. Closer parallels are, however, found in the later cognate works, e.g. in Hek. R., ch. 17 et al. It is to be noted, that R. Išma'el in 3 Enoch is not represented as being shown Paradise. The 'entering Paradise' refers to a certain part of the vision of the Mærkābā-mysteries. Thus Moses, acc. to the G^edullāḥ Mošæ, is shown Paradise after he has been shown the heavens and the Throne in the highest.

Ḥag. 15 a. The passage on Metatron, of which ch. 16 of the present book is simply another version, will be often referred to in the following.

Ib. "I have heard from behind the Pargod" and Ḥag. 16 a "the angels hearing from behind the Pargod". Cf. on chh. 45¹ and 18¹⁶ of our book.

Important for the question of the relation between the Talmud and 3 Enoch is also TB. Yomā, 67 b: תנא רבי רבי ישמעאל וזאזל שמכפר על מעשה עוון ועוואל compared with chh. 4 and 5 of our book. This presupposes at least the traditions embodied in 3 En. 5 ('Uzzā and 'Azzāel as fallen angels or evil agencies).

With regard to the special reasons adduced by Grätz for a post-Talmudic origin of the mystical group of writings in question—in which also our book, although unknown to that scholar, would be involved, and has been thus involved by later followers of Grätz—the following observations may be made:

With regard to point (1)—Metatron in the Talmud not identified with Enoch—this does not necessarily prove that the identification of Enoch and Metatron belongs to the post-Talmudic period. The aversion of the Rabbis,¹ especially those ultimately responsible for the fixing of the text of the Talmud, constitutes a sufficient reason why they should have eliminated, as much as possible, any trace of a glorification of Enoch, which might have obtained in the mystic sources from which they drew, with reserve, some scattered details of the Metatron-conception.

If, in fact, the sources from which the Talmudic fragments were derived already contained the tradition of the identity between Enoch and Metatron—and if this was suppressed by the Talmudic authorities—there should be some trace of the functions acquired by Metatron in fusion with Enoch. Such a trace can, indeed, be pointed to, viz. in TB. Ḥaḡ. 15 a, where it is said of Metatron, that he had been given permission to be seated in order to write down the merits of Israel. Metatron's function of Scribe here is most naturally explained from the assumption that he has already been identified with Enoch, "the scribe of righteousness" (vide 1 En. 15¹). In 3 Enoch Metatron's function of Scribe-Witness is connected exclusively with the Enoch-aspect of him, chh. 4², 48 c². It seems never to have been attached to the specific Metatron-aspect.

(2) The 'gross anthropomorphism', which is the main basis on which Grätz contends for the Islamitic origin of the group of mystical writings, is not specially characteristic of our book in contrast to the Talmudic literature.

The points (3) and (4) (vide above, p. 27) do not concern 3 Enoch and are, therefore, irrelevant here.

A difference between the three representations of Metatron in the Talmud (in TB. Ḥaḡ. 15 a, Sanh. 38 b, 'Ab. Zar. 3 b) and those of 3 Enoch is to be seen, further, in the fact, that Metatron is in the latter commonly called "the Prince of the Presence", but in the former not referred to by this epithet. In TB. Ber. 51 a, however, we find the tradition of Suriel (or Surya) as the Prince of the Presence, in special communion or relation with R. Iṣma'el, imparting to him teachings or revelations. Suriel (or Surya), in related mystical writings, is most often only another name for Metatron, used specially when denoting him as Knower of Secrets (as befits the Prince of the Presence to be). In Hek. R., Surya, as the Prince of the Presence, sometimes seems to be contemplated as different from Metatron—on the ground that Metatron in Hek. R. is sublimated almost into a part of the Divinity, whereas Surya, as the Prince of the Presence, retains Metatron's less exalted functions (cf. below, pp. 99–101). The parallel TB. Ber. 51a is important also because it shows that R. Iṣma'el already at the time of origin of that Haggādā must have been represented as enjoying a special personal communion with the Prince of the Presence as he does in 3 Enoch.

For Surya as a name of Metatron, cf. ch. 48 D¹, no. 84.

The language of the main, that is the oldest, part of 3 Enoch is most akin to that of the earlier Haggadic dicta of the Babylonian Talmud, or, in general, that of the dicta attributed to the Tannaitic teachers and the earlier Amorae.

An indication of time and place of the final composition of the present book is also to be seen in the representation of ch. 26¹², acc. to which the special accusers of Israel, next to Satan, are “Sammāel, the Prince of Rome, and Dubbiel, the Prince of Persia”. This, of course, suggests a Babylonian environment. Now the authorities cited in the mystical literature are the early Palestinian Tannas, R. Iṣma'el, R. 'Aqīḇa, R. Nəḥonyā bən haqQānā, also R. Yoḥānān bən Zakkai and R. 'Æli'æzær hagGāḏol, and others. The first origins of the mystical teachings of course go back to Palestine (e.g. 1 Enoch). And Palestine must have continued to be the home of the mystical speculations even under the earlier Tannas, until the reaction set in, which tried to oust the specific mystical teachings from orthodox Judaism. Thus, the development and elaboration of the traditions embodied in the Hebrew Book of Enoch would seem to have taken place in Babylonian circles. The above-mentioned explicit reference to Dubbiel, the Prince of Persia, in juxtaposition to Sammael, the Prince of Rome, by which the former is indicated as sharing the dominance of the earth as it were equally with the latter (cf. 3 En. 14²), points to a period when the Sassanides were in full power, and probably to a time of warfare with the Roman Empire (such as was carried on in Mesopotamia in the last quarter of the third century A.D.).

The fact, that the book, with the exception of the allusions in chh. 26¹², 44⁷ seqq. and 48 A—in a mild form—to oppressions by the “Nations of the World”, presents a pronouncedly irenical, almost universalistic attitude towards the nations in general (cf. esp. chh. 3¹, 30, etc.), indicates that the book has taken shape at a time when the Jewish circles in question were living in peace and comfort. The animosity against the "nations of the world" which has found expression in the apocalyptic fragment, ch. 48 A, seems to be due more to the traditional phraseology adopted from the apocalyptic patterns used, than to actual experience of a real persecution. Furthermore, there is a tendency noticeable in chh. 44⁷⁻¹⁰, 48 A towards assigning the real cause of the downfall of Israel to the wicked within the nation and to the dearth of righteous and 'pious' men, and towards focussing the reader's mind on this aspect.

This points to a place and time of composition (i.e. redaction) such as the Jewish colonies in Babylonia during the third and fourth centuries, when the Jews enjoyed a perfect tolerance from the Sassanian rulers.

In contrast to the general attitude of our book, we find in the later apocalyptic or mystical works from the time of the rising Moslem power a different outlook: 'Rome and Persia' are no longer regarded as the established world powers, but 'Išma'el' (= Islam) is looked upon as the power destined to prepare the way for the deliverance of Israel by engaging in prolonged and destructive warfare with the older empires, a warfare which will cause the ruin of all the Gentile nations (cf. 2 Ap. Išm., Revel. R. Šim'ōn bæn Yoḥai).

There are, however, further indications for an early date of origin. Thus the Qeḏuššā met with in 3 Enoch takes us back to the time when this had not yet received any of the amplifications attested in the Gemārā of the Babylonian Talmud. It is, moreover, not yet connected with the שמנה עשרי. It is presented in its most simple and primitive form, a form which in fact seems to have been established already at the time of 1 En. 39^{12, 13}, i.e. before the Christian era (cf. below, § 18 A. pp. 184 seq.).

A means of determining the terminus post quem of the composition of our book is the picture of the Messianic expectations given in ch. 45⁶, postulating a post-Hadrianic time. On this vide note ad loc. (p. 147), where the present writer urges that the passage belongs to a time of peace not too far removed, however, from the time of origin of the Messiah ben Joseph conception, probably some time in the third century A.D.

The conception of the pre-existence of the spirit (nēšāmā) and its 'creation' in the Guf as met with in sect. 7 (chh. 41-48 A) of our book may perhaps be taken as evidence for a time of origin of that section not much earlier than the beginning of the third century A.D. Vide below on "The conceptions of Spirit and Soul, etc." pp. 179 seq.

Of great importance for determining the time and position of 3 Enoch are, lastly, the affinities between our book and the earlier Enoch literature. These affinities—which are discussed at length below, sect. 7 A and B—show that 3 Enoch represents a direct continuation in development from the earlier Enoch literature with influences on the one hand from extraneous ideas (Gnosticism, etc.), on the other from Rabbinic traditions developed during the Tannaitic period.

The conceptions which form the central interest of the book seem to have been elaborated in a certain distinct circle¹ which had a greater propensity for mystical matters than their contemporaries, the scholars whose views determined the attitude of the Talmud (and among those scholars both Tannaim and Amoraim are represented). The men of this circle or tendency of thought apparently cherished with veneration the traditions of the earlier apocalyptic and angelological literature, especially the Enoch literature; naturally they concentrated upon the mystical experiences connected with the vision of the Throne and the Divine Chariot, and may have accepted the various extraneous conceptions or forms of expression (or of visualizing), with which they were brought in contact and which seemed to them in keeping with their own experiences and speculations. Thus they accepted, already at an early time, the idea of a celestial representative of the Godhead, a vice-regent, a second, lower θρόνος, in the form of Metatron. They were also particularly interested in the elaboration of systems of angelology, picturing the vast angelic hierarchy from the lowest of common angels up to the highest angelic figure, the ruler—by God's authority—over all the hosts under him.

These mystics behind 3 Enoch were not in opposition to the Rabbinic teachers. Apart from their special interest in mystical matters, the Ma'asē B'rešīṭ and the Ma'asē Mærkābā, and their occupation with the earlier mystical literature, they held the general views of the 'orthodox' Rabbis, and evidently themselves had the learning of the schools. They held the Tannaitic teachers (R. Išma'el) in high esteem and referred to them as authorities in the mystical doctrine. It is also evident that a great number of the Tannas and Amoras, at least during periods of their life, devoted themselves to penetrating the Mærkābā-mysteries: Yoḥanān ben Zakkai, Yehošua' ben H'ananya, R. 'Aqiba, 'Æl'azar ben 'Arāk, H'ananya ben H'akinai (TB. Hag. 14 b, 15 a, Tj. Hag. 77 b, Tos. Hag. 21¹⁻⁵, Gen. R. 5¹¹), also Šim'on bæn Zoma and Šim'on bæn 'Azzai, not to mention the ultimate apostate 'Æliša' bæn 'Aḥuya. This is admitted by G. F. Moore in his Judaism, vol. I, p. 411, nor can it possibly be denied.

No doubt the 3 Enoch circle regarded themselves as orthodox (if that word may be used) and in no way considered themselves as sectarian. There is no definite sign in the main part of the book that they even looked upon themselves as separated from others by a deeper insight into mystical matters or by the possession of a higher γνῶσις. One may probably best describe their attitude by stating simply that they were interested in and inclined towards mystical matters and experiences. From the point of view of the Rabbinic teachers, determining the attitude of the Talmud, the position of these circles and of their writings was, however, to be judged differently. The mystical interests of the recognized Rabbinical authorities could not be ignored nor could the Haggadic dicta revealing those interests be obliterated. But the 3 Enoch circle and its like would naturally be ignored, if not classed among the minim (or heretics), and the Enoch literature would be included among the 'extraneous writings' just as were the earlier apocalyptic writings, which were passed in silence.

That writings of this kind could exist and that there is no need of assuming the mere oral tradition of the mystical matters is quite clear. Now that Strack in his *Einleitung in Talmud und Midraš*⁵ (pp. 9-16) has demonstrated the existence of early writings even on Hēlāḳā, and, the more naturally, on Haggadic matters, there is not the slightest reason for keeping up the unfounded fiction that "there was nothing written on mystical subjects between the time of the so-called Pseud-epigrapha and the Gaonic times". No one at all familiar with the Talmudic and Midrašic writings could deduce the non-existence of such writings from the well-known injunction in M. Hag. 2¹ against the promulgation of mystical matters to more than 'three', 'two' or 'one'. One need only point to the fact that not only the Gēmārā but even the Tosəftā to the same passage speak quite freely on such subjects that are treated in 3 Enoch. If still deeper mystical matters are meant in that injunction (cf. G. F. Moore, Judaism, vol. I, p. 384, Tos. Hag. 2), then again the passage evidently cannot be used as a demonstration for the non-committing to writing of matters that 'are not so deep' (such as those of 3 Enoch and TB. Hag. 11 b seqq.). The

1 Tos. Hag. 2²:

ר' יוסי בר' יהודה אומ' ר' יהושע הירצה לפני רבן יוחנן בן זכאי
 ר' עקיבא הירצה לפני ר' יהושע חנניא בן חכניאי הירצה לפני
 ר' עקיבא

Tos. Hag. 2³: ארבע נכנסו לפרדס בו עזאי ובן זומא אחר ור' עקיבא truth is of course that M. Hag. 2 does not describe how the mystical matters were actually treated by all Jewish speculators upon them, but lays down a rule how they should henceforth be treated.¹

The additional chapter 48 D¹⁰ of our book contains the notice that the Palestinian Amoras R. 'Abbaḥu and R. Zera—who had received the secrets handed down from the time of Moses—committed the mystical teachings or traditions to a larger body, "the men of faith". "The men of faith" apparently is a term denoting the circle of mystics to which the writer belonged. If there were any historical reality behind this statement, it would seem to indicate the time of RR. 'Abbaḥu and Zera (second generation Amoras, end of third century A.D.) as the period when the tradition of literature in question gained special adherence among Babylonian Jews. The fragment in which this statement is found is however of a much later date than the main part of the book, and represents a development of the mystical teachings on somewhat different lines from those of the rest of the book (cf. note ad loc.).

The time of composition or redaction which would best fit in with the various data considered above seems to be the latter half of the third century.

We have, so far, been concerned with the main body of the book, comprising chh. 3-48 A, and its redaction.

To this main body have been joined, in different stages, the following:

(a) Ch. 48 B C: the Names of the Godhead, and the interpretation of one of these names, the 'Ālæf, with regard to Metatron. The oldest part of this mystical treatise is contained in the 'Ālæf-Enoch-Metatron piece, 48 c¹⁻⁹. This version of the Enoch-Metatron tradition which in substance (vide infra on Metatron, pp. 80ff.) agrees with the Enoch-Metatron piece, chh. 3-15, seems to have been regarded as specially connected with R. 'Aqiba (the rest of the book is presented in the name of R. 'Išma'el). It was included in the Alph. R. 'Aqiba at the end of letter 'Ālæf. Furthermore, in the D-editions of Sefær Heḳāloṣ (D 1, foll. 13 b, 14 a, D 2, fol. 10 b) a fragment of ch. 48 c, corresponding approximately to the version K, is introduced as a Tosæftā, beginning: "R. 'Aqiba said: I heard a voice going forth from under the Throne of Glory, speaking. And what did it say? Answer: I sold (corr. for 'made him strong', מכר for אבר) him, I took him, I appointed him, namely Enoch, the son of Jared, whose name is

Metatron, etc.”¹ The fragment is, however, quite independent of the Alph. R. ^{‘Aqīḇa}.

(b) The introductory chh. 1 and 2, supplying the frame of the book, in so far as they describe the occasion when R. Iṣma‘el ascended to behold the Mærkābā and was brought into contact with Metatron who imparted to him the revelations contained in the book. These chapters, probably, belong approximately to the same time and circle as the Hek. R. and the earlier (lost) versions of the Leg. Martyrs. The occasion of R. Iṣma‘el’s ascension to heaven is here, however, not intended to be understood as that of his last Mærkābā-vision, described in Hek. R. chh. 3–5 and in 1 and 2 Leg. Martyrs, i.e. immediately before his purported death as a martyr (in the Hadrianic persecution, A.D. 135). The object of his ascension is in ch. 1 defined by the expression “in order to behold the vision of the Mærkābā”. These two introductory chapters are responsible for the title Sefær Hekāloḥ given to the present book, or for its occasional inclusion in collections of Hekāloḥ works (quoted e.g. in YR. i, 55 b as Pirqe Hekāloḥ).

(c) The chh. 15 B, 22 B C represent the third stage, when the 3 Enoch is used, together with the Ši‘ur Qomā, as the central part of a larger collection called Ma‘asē Mærkābā. The mysteries of the Mærkābā are here treated in a more elaborated form. Further Metatron is conceived, primarily, as the revealer of secrets to Moses. To the same stage is, on this account, to be assigned the insertion or addition of ch. 48 D. Characteristic in the case of ch. 15 B is the importance given to the Šema‘; this reflects the later period when the Šema‘ was introduced as an essential part of the (celestial) Qeḏuššā; but even that period in all probability is pre-Islamitic.²

It will not be necessary to point out that the main part of 3 Enoch (chh. 3–48 A) is no homogeneous unity, or a work by a definite author in the modern sense of the words. It is even possible to discern earlier and later strata in the part in question. Thus to the earliest stratum must be assigned chh. 3–15 (the Enoch-Metatron piece³), whereas

1 The original part of this fragment strikes an early note; it is, at least, not later than the Enoch-Metatron fragment of 3 En. 3–15. Unfortunately the text of all ms. sources of the fragment is in a bad state. This fragment has traces of the Primordial Man conception of Metatron as the Ruler of the World and does not contain the Enoš-episode of 3 En. 5.

2 Cf. Louis Ginzberg, Geonica II, Geniza Studies, New York, 1909, pp. 48, 49, on the insertion of the Šema‘ into the Qeḏuššā—caused by a persecution of the Jews by the Christians, which ceased when the Christians were defeated by the Mohammedans. Resp. by a pupil of Yehūdai Ga‘on, ib. pp. 50 seqq., and resp. by Sar Šalom Ga‘on in the Siddur of ‘Amram Ga‘on, 11, cited ib.

3 This probably goes back to the second century, and in some parts even to the end of the first. Cf. below, pp. 79 and 188.

section 7, or chh. 41-48 A, possibly was composed at or not much before the time when the collection of chh. 3-48 A was made.

There is no difficulty with regard to the collection of the various fragments (forming the different sections of our book) into a book called 'Book of Enoch'. It must be assumed, on the contrary, that the different topics treated of in these fragments were from the very beginning considered as rightly belonging to the Enoch literature. They were the topics (or similar to the topics) dealt with in the archetype, viz. 1 Enoch. If any incongruity was felt, this was overcome by representing all the fragments as revelations given by Enoch-Metatron.

6¹⁻⁸. The Fall of the Angels. Their number given as two hundred. The number of the leaders is twenty ('chiefs of tens'), 6^{6, 7, 8}. The chief of the leaders is SEMJĀZĀ, 6^{8, 7}, cf. 69² (twenty-one leaders).

Among the names of the leaders are to be noticed: ASÆL, 6⁷; AZAZEL who acc. to one tradition seems to have been regarded as the chief leader (instead of SEMJĀZĀ), 10^{4, 8}, 54⁵, 55⁴, 81^{2, 3}, etc., 131².

Further: KOKABIEL, EZEQEEL (i.e. SHA-CHAQIEL, 6⁷ n.), BARAQIJAL, SAMSAPEEL (= SHAMSHIEL), BATARJAL (= BADARIEL), 69², 8³.

7¹, 81³, 10⁸, 64², 65^{6, 10} ('sorceries'), 69^{1, 4-12}. The fallen angels lead men astray by teaching them 'secrets', magic and sorceries, 'worthless mysteries' (16³).

3 Enoch

The 'Watchers', 'IRIN', are high angel-princes, 28.

The tradition of Fallen Angels is preserved in ch. 5⁹, in the representation of the evil agencies 'UZZĀ, 'AZZĀ and 'AZZI'EL. These are most probably contemplated as the leaders of the Fallen Angels. They are three as in 2 En. 18 A.

Cf. note on 3 En. 17³ end. These names recur among the names of the Rulers, 14⁴, and archangels, 17^{1, 3}.

1 It is important that in 3 Enoch Metatron, although obviously otherwise pictured in the manner of the Elect One, the Chosen One of 1 En., is altogether lacking Messianic character, as well as never identified with the "one that looked like a man" of Dan. 7¹³. This is most certainly not accidental, but intentional. It is the result of a strong negation of central ideas of the sects to which the circle behind 3 Enoch felt itself in opposition: those sects may have been Christian or Gnostic or something else; the fact remains that 3 Enoch rejects the idea of an enthroned Messiah as God's vice-regent and appointed ruler. Cf. below on the origin of the conception of Metatron, p. 146.

3 Enoch

Many of the features of the Elect One and the Son of Man in 1 En. are transferred to Metatron in 3 En. The differences are, however, greater than the resemblances.

The above parallels quite sufficiently show (1) the close dependence of the ideas of the later Enoch Literature, represented by 3 Enoch, upon those of the earlier, esp. of 1 Enoch,¹ but also (2) the considerable development of those earlier ideas, which has taken place in the time between 1 and 3 Enoch. Both dependence and development are perhaps nowhere so clearly discernible as in the case of the conceptions of Enoch. In 1 Enoch he is the saint-man of old who was worthy of receiving disclosures on future things and on celestial wonders, and this mostly in visions. He is the authority behind the Books of Secrets carrying his name: here is the central interest of the earlier Enoch Literature. There are, however, indications of an initial focussing of the interest on the final translation of Enoch, his elevation into a high celestial being, viz. in ch. 70 (Enoch "raised aloft on the chariots of the spirit to the Son of Man and to the Lord of Spirits from amongst those who dwell on the earth"). And, possibly, the following chapter 71, treating of Enoch's translation 'in spirit' into the heaven of heavens near the 'house' containing the Throne of Glory, was interpreted as referring to a definite elevation of Enoch. This is supported by the fact that the Enoch-Metatron pieces of our book show particular dependence upon these chapters in manner of expression and general terms of describing the elevation of Enoch. Vide above. The transformation of Enoch into a high celestial being is clearly enunciated in 2 Enoch.

1 Cf. George Foot Moore (in Judaism, etc. ii. 281): "At a much later time Enoch and what he saw in the heavens appear in Hebrew writings whose resemblance to features of our Book of Enoch suggests subterranean channels of communication, if not literary acquaintance". It would be interesting to know what those possible 'subterranean channels' exactly were. It is evident that 1 Enoch must have lain before the 3 Enoch circle much in the same form—with regard to composition—as it is preserved to us, i.e. there is no trace of separate existence of the different parts of 1 Enoch at the time of 3 Enoch.

(References to 2 En. acc. to Charles, Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, II.)

A. ANGELOLOGY.

2 Enoch

I. Angels near the Divine Throne and in the highest heaven.

VRETEL, archangel, Keeper of the Books, Registrar, Knower of Secrets, 22¹¹⁻²³.

SHEMUEL and RAZIEL (B) or RAGUEL (A), 33⁶, the guides and instructors of Enoch, virtually "Princes of Understanding and Wisdom".

(ORIOCH and MARIOCH, guardians of the Enoch writings, 33¹¹ B.

SATAN-SATANAIL, 18⁸, 29^{4, 5}, 31⁴⁻⁶.)

(b) Classes of angels functioning by the Throne:

(1) The highest order of archangels, 20, also called GLORIOUS ONES, 21 B, 22^{7, 10} A, and SERVANTS, 22 BA. To this class the individual angel-princes are reckoned: 21 BA, 22^{10, 11}, 29^{4, 5}.

(2) The highest order of Mærkābā-angels, viz. KERUBIM, SERAPHIM, SIX-WINGED ONES (i.e. ḤAYYŌṢ), explicitly defined as ministers of the Throne 20¹ A, 21¹ BA; OFANNIM (miswritten 'Ostanim') 20¹ B.

(3) Acc. to A: "INCORPOREAL POWERS", LORDSHIPS, PRINCIPALITIES, POWERS, THRONES, THE WATCHFULNESS OF MANY EYES: 20¹.

The last-named may be an allusion to the 'IRIN (Watchers), acc. to 18 BA originally belonging to the highest heaven. Cf. below II (b).

Notice especially the THRONES.

3 Enoch

3 En. contains 57 names of high angel-princes. See the Index, 'Angels'.

MIKAEL, 'archangel', 'great prince', 17^{1, 3}; Gabriel, ib. and 14⁴.

ENOCH-METATRON, the highest angel, 3-15, 48.

RADŪERĪ'EL, ch. 27, cf. note and Introd., Angelol.

PRINCE OF WISDOM and PRINCE OF UNDERSTANDING, instruct. of Enoch-Metatron, 10⁵.

Not in 3 En.

SATAN, esp. 26¹² (23¹⁶).

Cf. esp. the angelological system of A 1 (Introd.).

Cf. ch. 17: archangels include MIKAEL and GABRIEL, etc. In A 1 and A 2 more developed than in 2 En.

A 1: six classes of Mærkābā-angels: GALGALLIM, ḤAYYŌṢ, K^{ER}UBIM, 'OFANNIM and S^{ER}APHIM. Cf. Index.

Perhaps to be compared with the 'ER ELLIM, ṬAF-SARIM, 14¹; HOLY PRINCES, 3⁹², etc.

The 'IRIN and QADDISĪN above the Mærkābā-angels in the highest heaven, 28.

Metatron possibly the highest THRONE (Introd.).

2 Enoch

II. The remaining angelic orders, in chh. 3-19, represented as distributed among the six lower heavens.

(a) Angels of the sixth heaven.

(1) The lower order of archangels who are 'Rulers of the World', appointed over the stars and the government of the earth, and "Rulers over the lower orders of angels", having control especially over the chanting of the Celestial Songs by the angels, 19¹⁻³ BA.

(2) The angels of elemental forces, the angels ruling over seasons and years, etc., 19⁴ BA.

(3) SCRIBES, angels registering the deeds of all men, 19⁵ BA.

(4) The lower orders of Mærkābā-angels, seven of each class: seven PHOENIXES, seven KERUBIM, seven SIX-WINGED ONES (ḤAYYŌḶ). Chief function: celestial chant, 19⁶ BA, cf. 29³ B (all the troops of...).

(b) Angels of the fifth heaven:

The 'IRIN (Egoroi, B; Grigori, A), originally belonging to the seventh heaven, but after the fall of their brethren they have descended into the fifth heaven, or because of their silent and mournful attitude they are not accounted worthy of having their abode in the highest heaven. Their proper functions are: Service at the Divine Throne and chanting of the Celestial Songs, 18¹⁻⁹ A, 18¹ B.

(c) Angels of the fourth heaven:

(1) Angels attending the sun and the moon, numbered: 15,000 myriads, 1000, 400, 100, etc. Chh. 11^{4, 12}, 12¹, 14^{2, 3}, 15, 16⁷.

(2) Angels specially appointed for the chanting of the Celestial Songs, 'song-uttering angels', 17 BA.

(d) Angels of the third heaven:

(1) The angelic guardians of Paradise, ch. 8⁸ BA, cf. 30¹ A, 42⁴ B.

(2) The angelic guardians of the place of torment: the angels of punishment, ch. 10³ BA.

Cf. guardians of hell, 42¹ BA.

3 Enoch

A2 and A3 both speak of hosts of angels distributed among the diff. heavens, but the functions of these are not defined with the exception of those of the second heaven. Most of the following are located in the seventh heaven.

RULERS OF THE WORLD, 14⁴; PRINCES of the SONG-UTTERING ANGELS, 18^{4, 5}, 35³.

ELEMENTAL ANGELS, 14³, included among the RULERS OF THE WORLD.

33².

In 3 Enoch no lower order of Mærkābā-angels.

The 'IRIN have their place in the seventh heaven. Functions, see A1 concerning the Fallen Watchers, cf. chh. 4^{6, 5} and notes, ib., also Introd., section 13 E (a) 3, 4: 'Azza, 'Uzza and 'Azrael both for fallen and not fallen angels.

Angels attending the sun and moon in the second heaven, A2, ch. 17^{4, 5}, 96 and 88 (angels).

Angels specially appointed for the Q^e ḏuššā, chh. 35, 40; cf. Introduction, § 18 D.

Not in 3 En., cf. ch. 18²², 'AZBUGĀ.

Angels of destruction, 31², 33¹, 44²; appointed over the punishment of the wicked in hell.

2 Enoch

(e) Angels of the second heaven:

The fallen 'IRIN, kept as prisoners and awaiting the final judgement. SATANAIL-SATAN, acc. to A, their chief, 7 BA, 7³ A, 18 A, 31⁴⁻⁶ A.

Notice. Ch. 18 A, the fallen 'IRIN or, more probably, their leaders, are given as three in number.

(f) Angels of the first heaven:

(1) The "elder, the ruler of the stellar orders" (A plural: elders, rulers), the Prince(s) appointed over the stars and planets, with 200 assistant angels, 4 BA.

(2) The angelic guardians of the treasures of elemental forces, chh. 5, 6 BA, 40 BA.

Outside the above hierarchical system there are references to various classes of angels, to individual angels or angels in general without indication as to their place in the hierarchy.

A. General terms: ARMED HOSTS, 23 A; HEAVENLY TROOPS, 29 BA, 39 A; INCORPORAL TROOPS, 29; SPIRITUAL HOSTS, 29 A; FIERY ANGELS, 30 A, etc.

B. Definite classes of angels with definite functions: the GUIDES OF ENOCH, 1, 3 seqq., 21, 33, 67; SONG-UTTERING ANGELS, 31 A, 42 B; THE GUARDIANS OF THE GATES OF HELL, 42 BA; THE GIANTS, 18 A, etc., etc.

B. THE CONCEPTIONS OF ENOCH.

2 Enoch

I. Enoch is taken up from earth to the heavens by two angels sent by the Holy One.

(a) Acc. to the former half of 2 En. this ascension of Enoch seems to be merely temporary: he is to return to earth again, 1³, 2^{4,1}.

(b) Acc. to the latter half of the book Enoch's ascension implies a final departure

¹ It should be noted, however, that Enoch's ascension takes place at the end of his life ("when 365 years were fulfilled to me"), 1¹.

3 Enoch

The 'IRIN are not said to be fallen (28),

But 'UZZĀ, 'AZZĀ and 'AZZI'EL of 5⁹, the three evil agencies, are clearly allusions to the Fallen Watchers.

RAH^ATI'EL and KOKBI'EL with 72 and 365,000 myriads of assistant angels, 17^{6,7}.

Cf. 14³.

Also in 3 En. general terms: SERVANTS, TROOPS, ARMIES, etc. See Introd. Angelol. E (a) 1.

Definite classes of angels outside the hierarchical systems: ŠIN^ANIM, HAŠ-MALLIM, TROOPS of ANGER, ARMIES of VEHEMENCE, 'ELIM, ACCUSERS, etc. See Index, 'Angels'.

3 Enoch

6¹. Enoch fetched from on earth by 'ANAFI'EL sent by the Holy One. Enoch's elevation is final, and when he descends into terrestrial regions he does so as a Celestial Being, 1⁴.

2 Enoch

from earthly life. His return is for a short time only and then he has no longer terrestrial nature; chh. 21 onwards, esp. 33⁵⁻¹¹ BA, 36² BA, 38¹ A, 55^{1, 2} BA, 56² BA, 67² BA.

II. Enoch is conducted through the six lower heavens by the two angels. During his journey through these lower heavens Enoch is still only a 'mortal man' (7⁵ BA). This is acc. to the former half of the book, chh. 1-21.

III. When arrived in the outer regions of the seventh heaven Enoch is brought by GABRIEL before the Presence of the Holy One, 21^{3, 5} BA. There he is given in charge to MIKAEL, the chief of the archangels, 22⁶ seqq. BA.

IV. Enoch is transformed into a CELESTIAL BEING, in rank on a level with the ARCHANGELS and is made into an angel of the Presence:

(a) his earthly 'robe' (= nature) is changed into 'garments of God's Glory (Kābōd)' and he is anointed with the Lord's "holy oil", 22^{8, 9} BA;

(b) thereby he is made like "one of His Glorious Ones (= the highest order of archangels)", 22¹⁰ BA;

(c) he is to stand before the Lord's face for ever, i.e. as an angel of the Presence, 21³ BA, 22^{4, 6} BA.

The elevation of Enoch is a 'trial' of the highest angels; these, however, acquiesce in the will of the Lord, 22^{6, 7} BA.

V. As high archangel and prince of the Presence Enoch is in rank equal with GABRIEL and next under MIKAEL; he has his place at the left side of the Throne, 24¹ BA.

VI. Enoch is initiated in the Secrets:

(a) first by the archangel VRETIL, and

(b) after that, in the secrets not known even to the angels, by God Himself, 22¹¹⁻²³ BA, 24^{2, 3} BA. The latter secrets are in the first instance the Ma^asē B^erešīḥ, 24 seqq. BA, 64⁵ A.

Thus Enoch is specifically a 'Knower of Secrets' (Yodēa' Rāzīm).

3 Enoch

Enoch's ascension thro. the six lower heavens is not dwelt upon in 3 En. 4³, 6¹, 7.

Enoch is brought into the highest heaven and in the Presence of the Throne by 'ANAFT'EL and by God Himself, 6¹, 7.

Enoch transformed into a Celestial Being: his flesh is changed into fire, he is clad in garments of Glory, etc.

He is made into a ruler over the highest angels (Introd.).

Enoch as Metatron, the Prince of the Presence (10^{3, 4}, 48 c).

The highest angels protest against Enoch's elevation, ch. 6^{2, 3}.

Enoch in rank above all angels, 48 c^{8, 9} (cf. Introd. Met.).

Enoch initiated first by the Princes of Wisdom and Understanding (10⁵), then by the Holy One Himself, 11, 48 c⁴, esp. Secrets of Creation, ch. 11.

Enoch 'Knower of Secrets', 48 c⁸.

2 Enoch

VII. With Enoch's initiation in the Secrets his function as Scribe is closely connected. This function is much emphasized in the latter half of the book.

(a) Enoch writes down the secrets revealed to him in Books of his own, and the contents he reveals to men. (The books, 23⁶ BA, 33³ BA, 33^{5, 8-11} BA, 35², 36¹, 40^{2, 12}, 43¹, 47², 64⁵.)

Obedying a Divine command, Enoch reveals the books to his sons and to the men of his generation, in order that they may hand them over to the next generation and so on, 33⁵⁻¹¹ BA, 35², 36¹, 40-54 BA.

(b) As Scribe he knows and records all deeds of men, and Divine Judgements, decisions and decrees, 40¹³ A, 50¹ BA, 53^{2, 3} BA, 64⁵ A.

Notice esp. 50 A ("no one born on the earth can hide himself, nor can his deeds be concealed: I, i.e. Enoch, see all").

VIII. The works written down by Enoch in heaven and subsequently revealed to men are, acc. to the latter half of 2 En., identical with the Enoch Literature, of which the current Books of Enoch, hence also 2 En., formed part. This Enoch Literature was considered to be very rich: the 'Books of Enoch' are not less than 360 (acc. to B) or 366 (acc. to A) in number, 23⁶, 68² A.

(The latter half of 2 En. is probably intended to be interpreted as a conclusion of an imaginary collection of Enoch books.)

It is particularly incumbent upon each generation or each group of men to whom the books of Enoch have been handed down, that they in turn communicate them; this is to continue till "the end of time": 33^{8, 9} BA, 47² A, 48⁶ A, 54 BA.

The exclusive importance of the Enoch books is expressed in 47² A as follows:

"There have been many books from the beginning of Creation and shall be to the end of the world, but none shall make things known to you like my writings."

3 Enoch

Enoch Scribe-Witness-Testifier. This is not much emphasized, 4⁵, 48 c².

The 'Books' of Enoch not mentioned in 3 Enoch.

The only parallel to this is the add. ch. 48 D¹⁰; the chain of tradition.

3 En. ch. 11^{1, 2}: "all living beings' thoughts of heart were revealed to me". "Before a man did think in secret, I saw it."

There is no direct parallel to this in 3 Enoch. Cognate ideas are: Enoch-Metatron possesses all the secrets of the universe and reveals some of them to men worthy to receive them, as e.g. Moses (48 D) and R. Iṣma'el (3 seqq.); further, it is implied by 48 D¹⁰ that it is the duty of the "men of faith", who have received the secrets from earlier generations, in their turn to communicate them to those worthy of them.

C. THE CELESTIAL SONGS.

2 Enoch

I. The character of the songs.

There are various kinds of songs, "various singing", 17 A.

Terms denoting different kinds of 'songs': THE SONG OF TRIUMPH, 31² A; TRIUMPHANT SONGS, 42⁴ B.

Verbally cited are:

(1) "THE GIVER OF LIGHT COMES TO GIVE HIS BRIGHTNESS TO THE WHOLE WORLD": 15² A.¹

(2) "HOLY, HOLY, HOLY, LORD GOD OF SABAOOTH. THE HEAVEN AND EARTH ARE FULL OF THY GLORY", i.e. the Q^eđuššā, 21¹ A.

There is no reference to an interdependence or interrelation between the Celestial Chant and the Service performed by the congregation on earth.

II. The performers of the Celestial Songs.

(1) Angels specially appointed for the sole purpose of chanting the songs, "song-uttering angels", are perhaps referred to in 17 BA: "armed troops serving the Lord on cymbals and organs with incessant voice". Cf. also 23¹ A.

(2) The glorification of the Holy One is a duty incumbent upon the angels in general:

(a) The angels of the seventh heaven, 20⁴ A; the highest order of Mærkābā-angels utter the Q^eđuššā before the Throne, 21¹.

(b) The lower order of Mærkābā-angels sing and voice to each other as one, 19⁶ BA.

(c) The 'IRIN (Grigori) sing with one voice, 18⁹ A.

(d) The angels appointed over the sun "sing a song at the command of the Lord", 15^{1, 2} A.

(e) The angelic guardians of Paradise, 8² BA, 42⁴ B.

III. The time appointed for the chanting of the Celestial Songs.

(1) The performance of Celestial Songs is represented as continual and uninterrupted: "with incessant voice", 8⁸ BA, 17 BA; "never cease rejoicing", 42⁴ B.

1 Cf. the "ha-mmē'ir lā'āræš" in the Jewish Liturgy.

3 Enoch

Cf. here the Introduction, § 18.

Terms, see ib. A.

The songs consist of Scripture verses exclusively. Cf. however 46⁴.

Contrast in 3 En. a fixed time every day for the Q^eđuššā, 18⁷, 19⁶, 23³, 35⁵, 36¹, 38¹, 39¹.

2 Enoch

(2) A definite time in the day perhaps implied by 20³, 4 B.

IV. Manner and arrangement:

"with one voice", 18⁸, 19⁶;

"with the accompaniment of cymbals and organs, etc.", 17; introduced by the sounding of four trumpets, 18⁹ A.

The performers of the Celestial Songs are arranged in four orders, 18⁹ A.

V. The import of the Chanting of the Celestial Songs

Is an acknowledgment of God's sovereignty, a realization of and conforming to the Kingdom of Heaven. This is implied by 15¹ A, 21, 8⁸, 42⁴ and also 31² and symbolized by the expression "with one voice", 18⁸, 19⁶. Apparent in ch. 18¹.

D. THE DIVINE JUDGEMENT.

2 Enoch

I. Two different Judgements are referred to, of which one is preliminary, the other final.

(a) Preliminary Judgement:

(1) of the rebelling angels (Watchers), 7^{1, 3} BA, 18^{4, 6, 7} A;

(2) of man, by which he is assigned to Paradise or to the place of punishment, acc. to his deeds, 40¹² BA, 13 A, 41-42¹ A, 42^{3, 4} B, 9 BA, 10 BA.

The preliminary judgement of man is a daily judgement (decisions as to man's fate given after his death), 40¹³ A.

(b) Final Judgement, concerned with

(1) the whole world, 10 B, 18⁷ A, 65^{6, 7} BA;

(2) the individual, 40¹² A, 58^{4, 5} A, 6 B, 65⁶ A, 7 B;

(3) with the fallen Watchers, 7¹ A, 18^{6, 7} A.

II. The Court Proceedings are not described in detail, but only alluded to, 42¹³ A, 58⁴⁻⁶ BA, 65^{6, 7} BA.

3 Enoch

See Introd.: "The Divine Judgement".

Only one judgement is referred to, viz. the daily judgement. This is concerned

(1) with the whole world;

(2) with the nations of the earth;

(3) with the individual;

(4) with the angelic world.

The Court Proceedings are described. See Introd. ib.

2 Enoch

III. It is implied that the judgement is based partly upon records of man's deeds: the Divine decisions and decrees are also recorded.

Angelic Scribes and Recorders are:

(1) VRETEL, recording "all the doings of the Lord", 22¹¹ BA.

(2) ENOCH, 40², 12 A, 64⁵ A, 50¹ BA, 53² BA.

(3) Angels "over all souls of men, who write down all their works and their lives before the face of the Lord", 19⁵ BA.

IV. As 'accusers' of men are mentioned only the "souls of the beasts", 58⁶ BA.

V. In Judgement men are divided into two main classes, viz.:

(1) The RIGHTEOUS or JUST who are kept in Paradise in the third heaven until the final judgement, after which they are to be gathered together for the life in the new age, this world having perished; their dwelling-place will then be a new Paradise, "the Great Paradise", 42⁴ B, 65⁸⁻¹⁰ BA.

Cf. however 9 BA, 42³⁻⁵ B.

(2) The WICKED. As regards the place of punishment assigned for the wicked, the former and latter halves of the book are at variance. Acc. to the former the place of torture situated in the third heaven is "an eternal inheritance" for the wicked from the first judgement, the final judgement making no change in the fate of the wicked. Ch. 10 BA.

Acc. to the latter the wicked are punished in "hell" situated below the heavens, probably under the earth. Their punishment begins immediately after death, but they await the final decisions as to their punishment to be given at the final judgement, 40¹², 13 BA, 42¹, 2 B, 42¹, 12 A.

The non-righteous Israelites, however, were assigned a special position: they will be conducted to Paradise in the time to come, i.e. after the final judgement. Until that time they undergo punishment in hell, 42⁵ B, 41 A.

3 Enoch

The judgement is based on records of man's deeds and of all events in the whole universe. The Divine decrees are recorded. See ib.

Scribes and Keeper of the "Books":

RADQERI'EL, ch. 27²;

ENOCH, 4⁵, 48 C².

The "Scribes", 27², 33², 18²³⁻²⁵.

S'ERAFI'EL, ch. 26¹.

Angelic accusers, 14².

3 Enoch speaks of three classes of men, viz.:

(1) the Righteous. Their spirits have their abode in the Presence of the Throne of Glory, 43². In the time to come the righteous shall inherit the Garden of Eden, 23¹⁸;

(2) the perfectly wicked who are punished in Gehenna, 44³, 33⁵;

(3) the intermediate, the bēnōn(iyy)im, who have to go through a sort of Purgatory until they are cleansed from their sins. After being purified they are probably accounted as righteous, 44³, 5.

The bēnōn(iyy)im, acc. to 3 Enoch, are the large majority of men, not perfectly righteous but neither wholly wicked.

2 Enoch

VI. The executors of the judgement are angels specially appointed for this purpose. "Cruel, relentless. . . angels tormenting without pity" execute the punishment of the wicked, 10 BA.

Cf. "guardians of the keys of hell" in 42¹ BA, 3 B.

Similarly there are guardians of Paradise, 9⁸ BA, 42⁴ B (cf. 30¹ A).

VII. The instruments of punishment are: the "weapons of the angels" of punishment, 10³ BA; the fiery river, 10² A; "fire and flame and cold and ice and dungeons", 10² B.

3 Enoch

The executors of Divine decisions are the 'IRIN and QADDISHIN, 28⁹.

The executors of punishment are the angels of destruction, 31², 33¹, 44².

Instruments of punishment are: the Sword of God, ch. 32; "staves of fire", 44³; the fiery river, 33⁵, 47.

The parallels adduced above clearly show that 3 Enoch bases on the same traditions as 2 Enoch, at least to a considerable extent; secondly, that, on the whole, the development of these traditions is further advanced in 3 Enoch than in 2 Enoch; thirdly, that, apparently, the conceptions of 3 Enoch in most cases are direct continuations on the lines of development begun by 2 Enoch.

(1) Thus, in Angelology, the tendency towards systematization evident in 2 Enoch, as compared with 1 Enoch, has resulted, in 3 Enoch, in the very elaborate angelological systems, in this Introduction referred to as A 1, A 2 and A 3 (vide the section on Angelology, Introduction, § 14).

In these angelological systems the interest has been focussed in an ever-increasing degree on the angelic inhabitants of the highest heaven, the angels of the Mærkābā and the Throne, and hence 3 Enoch here presents elaborate accounts of this angelic world, which in comprehensiveness by far transcend those of 2 Enoch. The treatment of the angelic orders of the lower heavens is, on the other hand, poorer in 3 Enoch than in 2 Enoch; but this is explained by the fact that most of the particular orders of angels, in 2 Enoch assigned to various of the lower heavens, are, in our book, located in the seventh heaven, with the exception of the angels of the planetary and stellar orders of angels, who, in accordance with Rabbinic traditions, are all located in the second heaven.

(2) With regard to the conceptions of Enoch, 2 Enoch shows itself very clearly as belonging to a stage of development later than 1 Enoch, but earlier than our book; moreover, in this respect 2 Enoch may be said, speaking metaphorically, to be on the straight line connecting 1 Enoch with 3 Enoch.

Whereas in 1 Enoch the visions of Enoch are the essential feature in the Enoch-conception (vide above), in 2 Enoch, on the contrary, the idea of Enoch's transformation into a high Celestial Being plays an important part (see the above parallels, under B IV, V). This idea has, however, not yet advanced as far as in 3 Enoch. Thus, Enoch, as a high archangel, still is in rank below MIKĀEL, and has his place on the left hand of the Most High. It is evident that at the time of writing of 2 Enoch, the idea of Enoch as the ruler over all the angels and the vice-gerent of the Holy One, had never as yet been put forth. With this coheres that there is in 2 Enoch no trace of the identification of Enoch with Metatron, one of the central features of 3 Enoch, nor of Enoch as enthroned, although 2 Enoch knows of an angelic order called THRONES (ch. 20¹).

(3) Respecting the conceptions of Judgement and Fate of Souls and Spirits 2 Enoch is more in keeping with 1 Enoch and the earlier Apocalyptic Literature, whereas 3 Enoch on this point rather reflects the earlier Rabbinic teachings (especially those of Beṣ̄ Šammai).

As is evident from the parallels between 1 and 3 Enoch given above, 3 Enoch reveals familiarity with the ideas and expressions of 1 Enoch, i.e. 1 Enoch must have been well known to the circle from which 3 Enoch emanated. That this was the case also with at least parts of the writings embodied in the present 2 Enoch is postulated by the close parallels between 2 and 3 Enoch, some of which are as striking as to suggest a direct dependence of the latter upon the former. Special importance should perhaps be attached to the following features which appear in 2 and 3 Enoch exclusively:

(1) The leaders of the Fallen Angels or Seducers of mankind as three in number, 2 En. 18 A, 3 En. 5⁹.

(2) RĀḌĪERIEL-VREṬIL, the Keeper of the Books, the Heavenly Registrar, 2 En. 22¹¹-23, 3 En. 27 (vide note on 3 En. 27).

(3) Enoch instructed in the secrets, first by angels, and then, in the highest mysteries, by the Holy One Himself, 2 En. 22¹¹-24³, 3 En. 10⁵, 11.

There are, however, a few conceptions and passages of 2 Enoch which reflect a later development than our book. Still these are—in most cases—easily recognized as late additions. Such are:

(1) The conception of higher and lower orders of Mærkābā-angels, a conception which, by the way, is frequently met with in the Zohar,

2 En. 19⁶, 20¹, 21¹ (vide above on the Parallels between 2 Enoch and 3 Enoch, A I (b) 2 and A II (a) 4); cf. Zohar, i. 22 a, i. 41 b seqq., et frequ.

(2) The ten ranks of angels, 2 En. 20³ A.

(3) The eighth, ninth and tenth heaven, strangely enough carrying the Hebrew names of Kokābim (planets), Mazzāloḥ (constellations), and ‘Arāboḥ (in reality the name of the seventh heaven). This is however only found in a corrupt passage quite out of keeping with the context. It is easily observed that 2 Enoch knows only of seven heavens. Vide Charles's note on the passage in his edition of 2 Enoch, 1896, 2 En. 21⁶–22³ A.

(4) The advanced calendary computations, 13–16 A, cf. 31, 32 A.

Also on this point the addition-character of the passages showing later developments is unmistakable, and is, moreover, proved by a comparison of the two versions extant, A and B (as they are marked in Charles's edition in his Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, ii. 431–469). B here presents the more original text, whereas in A the passages in question are inserted which reflect late calendary computations.

Thus, ch. 14¹, where B reads simply, "according to the number of the days", A has "according to the number of the days 365 and the quarter of a day". That the latter half of the passage in A is a late gloss is obvious. Even more apparent is the addition-character of the largest part of ch. 16 of the version A. Whereas ch. 16 B simply speaks of the 12 gates of entrance and the 12 gates of exit of the moon, 16 A makes these gates to represent the 12 months of the solar year, further alludes to the leap-year, speaks of the "great circle of 532 years," etc. Nothing of this is found in B.

(5) Parts of the account of Creation contained in 30–33² acc. to A reveal influences from ranges of ideas outside the traditions reflected in 3 Enoch, vide in particular vss. 3, 8, 9, 13–18 of ch. 30, further 31⁴ (Satan-Satanail), 33^{1, 2}. It is highly significant that these passages also are only found in A. What is found in B is altogether compatible with the conceptions of the earlier Enoch Literature.

It is interesting to note that it is mainly on the grounds of the conceptions found in the additional sections or passages referred to under (4) and (5) above, that Mrs Maunders in The Observatory, August 1918, argues for a late origin of 2 Enoch, maintaining that it reflects the traditions of the Bogomils. The arguments brought forward by Mrs Maunders obviously carry weight only for the passages on which they are based, and cannot be applied to 2 Enoch in its original form, not even to the present form of version B. The observations of Mrs Maunders may be valuable for the textual history of 2 Enoch.

Mrs Maunders's suppositions as to the late origin of 2 Enoch as a whole are obviously refuted simply by the fact of the relations obtaining between 2 Enoch and 3 Enoch; for neither can 3 Enoch be dependent upon a writing of Slavonic origin, nor can such a writing be conceived of as dependent upon the Hebrew 3 Enoch.

Before arriving at a final conclusion as to the relation between 2 and 3 Enoch the following considerations may be made, viz.:

(1) The entirely Jewish character of a considerable part of the present 2 Enoch;

(2) the strikingly close parallels, not only in general and detailed conceptions, but also in terms and expressions, between this Jewish stratum and 3 Enoch, as shown above;

(3) the impossibility of conceiving any direct dependence of 3 Enoch upon a non-Jewish writing, to the extent obtaining here;

(4) the unmistakably earlier stage of development in 2 Enoch—as compared with 3 Enoch—of otherwise identical conceptions and ideas common to 2 and 3 Enoch (as has been shown above).

On these considerations it may be urged that there was originally a Jewish writing, belonging to the Enoch Literature and embodied in the present 2 Enoch, and that this Jewish Book of Enoch was well known to the circle from which 3 Enoch has emanated.

Further, from this assumption follows, as a corollary, that the Jewish writing in question must have originated at a fairly early date. In fact, the general types of ideas met with in this oldest and essential stratum of the present 2 Enoch, fit in perfectly with the date assigned to it by Charles, i.e. some time in the first century A.D.¹ This would also fit in very well with assigning some date in the third century for the redaction of 3 Enoch; the interval would allow for the developments reflected in 3 Enoch and for the assimilation which has taken place in 3 Enoch, on the one hand with the conceptions of Metatron and on the other with certain Rabbinic ideas (cf. above).

That 2 Enoch has been extant in Greek is evident. The traces of a Greek text underlying the present 2 Enoch are numerous: Phoenixes, Chalkadri, Arkhas, the Greek names of the planets, etc. Vide Charles's Introduction to the edition of 1896.

The Youthful Child, Rāb̄ya Ṭālya, occurs in ML. 229² (Oxf. I. lix), 264⁴ (Oxf. IV. i) with the name Arspan and the epithet "son of the Splendours" (= the Glorious Ones): בְּרַ זִיּוּיא. In GR. 243²³⁻²⁷ (also ML. 248⁹) Hib̄il bar Adam (the Abel of OT.) is called thus. A particular rôle is played by the Rāb̄ya Ṭālya in the latter part of the ninth book of GR. pp. 235-238. On this vide Lidzbarski's introduction, ib. pp. 234, 235. The First Life (or its 'sons') creates through his word "the only (unique; μονογενής: Lidzbarski) son, the great, righteous Unique One, who went forth from the great, righteous Unique One". The First Life clothes him in "garments of splendour", puts "diadems of light" upon him. He is questioned by the messenger 'Adākas-Malala or 'Adākas-Ziyya: "What is Thy Name?" and answers: "I am the Youthful Child, the righteous, great Unique One". Then he is brought by that messenger to the "S̄kina within the S̄kina" and he beholds the "Splendour which is above all splendour, the Light above all Light, on the right of whom there are 1000 times 1000 shining ones and on his left 10,000 times 10,000 shining ones". When he

3 En. 48^{c1}. "I made him strong (אִיבְרִיתִי, perhaps בְּרִאֲתִי, 'I created him', was originally meant to be conveyed), I took him, I appointed him, namely Metatron, my servant who is one (unique) among all the children of heaven."

(c) 'Enoš.

In the Mandaic literature 'Enoš ('Anoš) is given a prominent place. The name itself is derived from the OT. 'Ænoš; mostly he is mentioned in juxtaposition with Hiḇil (= Abel) and Šipil (= Seth), all three being 'Upras with special functions, differently represented in different contexts. On the significance of 'Enoš one may in the first place refer to Reitzenstein, D. Mand. B. d. Herrn d. Grösse und Das iran. Erlös. Myst. pp. 115-134.¹ 'Enoš is the last Messenger and Revealer of Truth to the world, the Guide, and Saviour of those who follow him. It will be unnecessary here to repeat the whole of the "Enoš-episode" in the Apocalypse of GR. analyzed by Reitzenstein and Schæder (GR. 30⁴⁸):² "Enoš-Upra comes into the world...heals the sick, opens the eyes of the blind, makes the lepers clean...vivifies the dead; he wins adherents among tants of) the world and he is equal to all of them in faith, righteousness, and perfection of deeds."

48c⁸. "I (God) appointed Metatron over the angelic rulers of the world to reveal to them the secrets of my words and to teach the decree of my righteous judgement."

To illustrate the manner and import of the rejection of 'Ænoš in 3 Enoch, it may be allowed to repeat here the relevant fragment, ch. 5:

"From the day when the Holy One expelled the First Adam from the Garden of Eden Š^škinā was dwelling upon a Kerub under the Tree of Life...and the first man and his generation were sitting outside the gate of the Garden to behold the image of the appearance of the splendour of Š^škinā... And everyone who made use of the splendour of Š^škinā... he neither became ill nor (מֵהַיִּמִּין מִן) the Jews",... "Enoš-‘Upra ascends (on high) and sits with (joins) the Mešunne-Kušta" (= Die zur Seligkeit entrückten Mandäer: Lidzbarski). Cf. later Mf. 242 (also GR. 338³⁰, 339 seq.). In the present connection attention must be called to GR. 47³⁵ seq. (52⁴⁹ seq.)—an insertion acc. to Lidzbarski:

ענוש עותרא אתיא מן קודאס טופאניא מיא
לואתה דנו וסורבאתה

"Enoš-‘Upra comes before the Water Floods to Noah and his tribe" (cf. GR. 263¹⁸⁻²⁹).

This should be put by the side of the traditions in GR., eleventh book (vide Lidzbarski, GR. pp. 250, 251). The Unique One sends the three ‘Upras, Hibil, Šipil and ‘Anoš into the world to give assistance to the spirits of the faithful. The Planets (being the Enemies of the Spiritual World) try to overpower them, and plan the destruction of the whole generation, first through the sword (against Hibil), then through Fire (against Šipil)¹ and lastly through a Deluge (against ‘Anoš). (Cf. how in 3 En. the removal of Enoch is connected as well with the idolatry of ‘Enoš as with the Deluge.) ‘Enoš is represented as fearing the attempts by the Planets but is addressed by Mandā dĤayye as follows (GR. XI. 266¹³ seq. Pet.):

ענוש ווטא... לא תידהול מן בישיא דאלמא האוין

suffered he any pain; no demons got power over him nor were able to injure him... until the time of the generation of ‘Ænoš who was the head of all idol worshippers of the world. And what did the generation of ‘Ænoš do? They went from one end of the world to the other, and each one brought silver, gold, precious stones and pearls in heaps like unto mountains and hills making idols out of them throughout all the world... And they brought down the sun, the moon, planets and constellations, and placed them before the idols on their right hand and on their left to attend them even as they attend the Holy One, blessed be He... What power was in them that they were able to bring them down... (answer:) ‘Uzzā, ‘Azzā and ‘Azzi’el... taught them sorceries whereby they brought them down and made use of them. In that time the ministering angels brought charges (against them) before the Holy One... saying... ‘Master of the World! What hast thou to do with the children of men?’ As it is written (Ps. 85): ‘mā ’ænōš ki ḥizkē’annu’ (what is man, ‘Enoš, that thou art mindful of him?). Mā ’Ādām is not written here, but mā ’ænōš, for he (i.e. ‘Ænoš) is the head of the idol worshippers."

(Cf. Lam. R. Proēm 24, dependent on 3 En., Gen. R. 5⁵, 10⁸, 12⁵, 23⁹.)

In 3 En. 'Enoš is on the side of the 'planets', against the right faith.

At the same time the features in Mand. belong-speak with Reitzenstein, are in 3 Enoch found in Enoch-Metatron:

The first section of the twelfth book of GR. calls 'Enoš, inter alia: בר שזבאחא דבולא the son of the leaves (scil. of writings) of all knowledge (or: γνῶσις). (GR. 268¹¹, 270¹⁰ [272³, 24, 273¹].)

Cf. the beginning of the ninth book of GR.:

האזין הו ראו וסידרא דקארקאלתא
דסובא כוכביא דגלילון ואפרישלון מאנדא
דהייא דארקא תיביל ועהאבלון להיביל

"This is the secret and the book of the overthrow of the seven planets which (secret and book) Mandā dHayye revealed and taught on the earth Tebel; and he gave them to Hibil, Šipil and 'Anoš and Hibil, Šipil and 'Anoš gave them to those who love their name" (GR. 223¹⁷ [222¹⁰]). The book contains polemics against the false religions which are said to have emanated from the seven planets. For 'Enoš (together with Hibil and Šipil) as (1) the prototype for the Faithful; (2) the leader, guide of the Spirits of the Faithful; (3) the Messenger, the Word, sent by the Life to wake up, teach and guide the believers, it is not necessary to give references. Vide, however, first and eleventh sections of fifteenth book of GR., further GR. 286¹⁹, 52³, 30², 48⁶. The spirits have to give account for their life before 'Anoš-'Uḥra: GR. 405³³ (377⁶). 'Enoš, as messenger, wins followers,

(6) 3 En. 8². "In that hour the Holy One added in me...splendour unto splendour (speaking of Metatron)."

One may here recall the Jewish tradition of a book of Adam, transmitted to (or recovered by) Enoch and after him to Noah (starting from the Pseudepigraphical writings, esp. elaborated in T^efillap' Adām hā-Rišōn [OM. ii. 401, S. Raziēl, beg.]) as a possible parallel to the book given to Hibil, Šipil and 'Anoš. Cf. also Metatron as "the Knower and Revealer of Secrets", 3 En. 48 c⁷, ⁹.

Cf. above and 3 En. 48 d¹⁰ with note.

3 Enoch looks upon the functions of 'Enoš quite differently. So far from seeing in him the leader of the Faithful he is really the instigator of the false religions. The party of 'Enoš is denounced as that of idol-worshippers, who make use of the sun, moon, planets and constellations (i.e. the 'Seven' and 'Twelve').

adherents, appears as it were as the head of the 'ligta' (party, circle of believers):

GR. xv. i. 296¹ (299¹²) the Great Life says to 'Enoš:

אזאל לגוט ליגטתא מן תיביל
כוי ליגטתא דלגאטנין אנין

"Go, collect a party from Tebel, like the party that we have collected."

Cf. in this connection also GR. II. i. 44³ (46²⁰⁻²⁴ Pet.):

אנא שליחא קאדמאיהא אמארהנא
ומאפרישנא לכולהון בניא דאדאס דהון

ולא תישמון לשותא דמאללאכיא דהוסארהא
דסאטין ומאסטין מן בנאת אנאשא

ומראהבילון בדאהבא וכאספא ווארגבא

ומינונא וקיניאנא ונילמא דזיפא ודמאואתא...

"I, the First Messenger, (I) speak and teach all the children of 'Adam who were, who are and who shall be born in that generation: Do not listen to the words (šupā: speech) of the angels of defection who deviate and cause (some, many) of the children of men to err and cause them to covet gold and silver, money, possession and property and images of fraud and simulacres."

GR. xiv. 294¹⁴ (298⁸ f. Pet.):

כול נישמאתא דאודא דמאואתא לקודאמאן
לאסאלקא ובוואתאן לאכאשרא ולאמא דתיניאנא לאניהוונא

"The spirits that have worshipped (or sworn fealty to) idols (images), none of them shall ascend to our presence, they are not worthy (to be) with us and they will not behold the world of the Second One."

Acc. to 3 En. the 'party' that 'Enoš 'collects' is that of idol-worshippers. In Life of Enoch Enoch is represented as collecting a party of believers in God, among the then inhabitants of the world.

3 En. 5⁷⁻⁹: the idol-worshippers bring silver, gold, precious stones and pearls, and make of them images (idols) in the whole world.

So the generation of 'Enoš of 3 En. 5 are no worthy to dwell with the Šekina.

The conclusions that may be drawn from the adduced parallels between Mandaitic literature (shortened: Mand.) and 3 En. may be summed up as follows:

(1) Mand. and 3 En. are rooted in a specific world of ideas and expressions common to them both. That common world is one of characteristic mystical ideas and aspirations.

(2) Although both Mand. and 3 En. move in and are influenced by the larger world of syncretistic thoughts, 3 En. in its mystical elements (and these are, after all, the constitutive elements of 3 En.) is more closely bound up with Mand. than with any other mystical religious formation outside Judaism. ✓

(3) The question whether there is anywhere a direct dependence of 3 En. upon Mand. or vice versa must be answered in the negative. ✓

(4) An immediate relation between the circles behind Mand. and 3 En. respectively can, however, be traced, viz. in the rejection by the latter of one of the fundamental tenets of the former. This rejection must have occurred some time between 1 En. and 3 En., since it entailed the dropping by the 3 En. circle of certain terms and conceptions playing a prominent part in 1 En. (on this vide above, p. 47 and below, p. 146) as a consequence of their having been associated with the rejected doctrine.

(5) The doctrine thus rejected is the 'Ænoš-mysticism (vide above). This is done very strongly; not merely in the form of a contradiction, but in the form of a contrast: 'Ænoš is the very instigator of fraud and idolatry in this world, the cause of the destruction of mankind. —

(6) The general mystical thought-world as well as the central idea of that mysticism was, however, already deeply ingrained in the 3 En. circle. Hence some of the fundamental features of 'Ænoš are in 3 En. attaching to Enoch-Metatron. It may seem as if there had then been only an opposition between names, or perhaps, that there were here two opposing mystical systems: the 'Ænoš-mysticism versus the Enoch-mysticism.

This would, however, not correspond to the actual position of Mand. and 3 En. What is rejected by 3 En. is, after all, not merely the name 'Ænoš, but even the Primordial-Man ideas. It may be urged that, in 3 En., the real centre of the mysticism from which it has sprung, has been obscured, or at least been left to be tacitly understood or felt. It can be said, that one does not grasp what the whole description of the elevation of Enoch-Metatron or that of the angelical spheres is about, until he has read them against the background of Mand. Then the whole mystery will reveal itself: Man as the bearer of the Divine Spark within himself, his being here in this world of lowly state, a mere 'youth' and 'child' by the side of the Great Powers and Principalities of the Celestial World, and yet, in his highest aspirations, by force of his being such a bearer of the Divine, reaching above all powers to the Presence of the Divine Glory. With this the soteriological mystery: the Man, the One, who as the Essence of all Human Spirits, and the First, the Beginning of all human life, in Himself brings about Man's attainment of his Spiritual Home; the connection of this with the Wisdom-mystery, the man-celestial being possessing the Secrets and Mysteries and revealing them. In a very simple way one of the Mand. counterparts to the elevation of Enoch-Metatron gives, none the less, the very interpretation of the meaning of that elevation, viz. the finishing passage of the book of Dinanukt given above (p. 76), with its ending words: "With this ascension with which I have ascended, all truthful, faithful and goodly Našoreans shall ascend and attain."

✓ (7) In the later cabbalistic literature, as is shown below (pp. 121-125), the central idea of the Enoch-Metatron conception in its mystical signification is brought out quite distinctly. It may be surmised that it cannot have suddenly emerged then from nothing and nowhere, but must have been known all the time.

(8) The vantage-point from which the rejection of the 'Ænoš-mysticism, which must have been quite as much, if not more, a rejection of the specific circles by which it was most emphasized (i.e. probably the earlier Mandæans), was, no doubt, the consciousness within the 3 En. circle of standing firmly rooted in the Jewish faith, on the Torā and breathing the air of the Rabbinic teachings.

(9) The said rejection, lastly, presupposes a time of origin for the Enoch-Metatron fragments of 3 En., when the opposition between the Enoch-mysticism and the ^Ænoš-mysticism could have been actual, since the rejection was made in Palestinian circles (witness Lam. R. and Gen. R. referred to above, p. 70, presupposing 3 En. 4, 5 as Palestinian) and the 'Enoš-mysticism had finished playing any more important rôle there already at the beginning of the 2nd century A.D. This is the terminus ante quem of the origin of the Enoch-Metatron ideas of 3 En. Hence it follows, further, that the Metatron ideas (and fragments) belonging to the time before the inclusion of these ideas (and fragments) in the Enoch-literature, should in all probability be assigned to some time in the 1st century A.D. Such early fragments are contained in 3 En. 9-13.

§ 8. THE CONCEPTIONS OF METATRON IN 3 ENOCH

WITH regard to the conceptions of Metatron, his position and functions as presented by 3 Enoch, it is first to be remembered that this book in its present shape—with the exception of chh. 48 BCD—purports to be a revelation or communication of secrets by Metatron, "the Prince of the Presence", to the Tannaitic teacher, R. Išma'el bæn ^Æliša. This is in chh. 5-40 conveyed merely through the regular inceptive sentence of each chapter: "R. Išma'el said: Metatron, the angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me". In chh. 41-48 A the relation between R. Išma'el and Metatron takes the form of explorer of the celestial regions and their splendours and guide and informer concerning their secrets. Similarly chh. 3 and 4 represent R. Išma'el as asking and Metatron as answering.

The framework of the book thus represents Metatron as the angel who has access to the Divine Presence, the 'Face' of the Godhead (and in this sense the appellation "Sar ha-ṣPānim" or "Prince of the Presence" is understood here), hence possesses knowledge of the Divine secrets and decrees. In this capacity he is used by God as the guide (41-48 A) and instructor of R. Išma'el. This general view is corroborated by the introductory chh. 1 and 2. According to these Metatron, defined as the Prince of the Presence and the "Servant (Æbæd) of the Holy One", is sent by the Most High to conduct R. Išma'el into the Seventh Hekāl (Hall or Palace), to the Mærkābāh and the camps of Šēkina, and to protect him from the fury of the other angels of this the highest region of the heavens. He is consequently contemplated as essentially an angel-prince of the Seventh Hall, the inmost and holiest part of the Celestial World, the centre and true abode of the Divine Manifestation (the "Holy of Holies" as it is later, appropriately, called).

Apart from the framework and introduction the book, relatively to Metatron, falls naturally into two divisions, one having the character or 'history' of Metatron for its central theme, the other having scarcely any connection with the conceptions of Metatron at all. The former division comprises chh. 3-16 and 48 (B) C (D), the latter the rest of the book, chh. 17-48 A.

(1) Chh. 3-16 and (2) ch. 48 C (BD) contain two expositions of the same theme, the latter in a shorter, the former in a fuller form, otherwise in the main exhibiting identical traits.

Metatron is the translated Enoch. The characteristic feature of both of these two expositions is, that they identify the high angel-prince Metatron with Enoch, the son of Yāred, who was translated to the heavens in accordance with the ancient tradition basing upon Gen. 5²⁴. This identification being the aim, the chapters in question are worked out as a history of Enoch's transformation into an angel and of his further promotion into a superior angel-prince, called by the name Metatron, and not only by this name but by others of a distinguishing character.

Metatron, being Enoch, is called Na'ar, i.e. Youth. Metatron is Enoch (Targum P. to Gen. 5²⁴). Proof of this is, that Metatron is still called the 'Youth', נער, in the high heavens (4¹⁰): for he is young in comparison with the other angel-princes, existing from the 'Beginning'.

Enoch removed from earth qua Perfect Righteous or qua Witness. The occasion of Enoch's translation to heaven was the removal of the Šēkinā from on earth on account of the sins of contemporary humanity, Enoch being removed together with the Šēkinā in his character of only perfect saint of his time: so chh. 5, 6³, 48 C¹. In another vein it is stated, that the reason or object of Enoch's translation was the function prescribed for him of being a witness—in the world to come—to the sinfulness of his generation and the justice of the Holy One in eventually destroying the men of that generation through the Deluge: so chh. 4, 48 C². Thus Enoch is defined as Scribe-Witness in agreement with Book of Jubilees 4²¹ seqq. and Targ. P. to Gen. 5²⁴.

But the characterization of the translated Enoch is not restricted to describing him as a celestial Scribe-Witness. The various honours and offices conferred upon him are in chh. 7 seqq. set forth in successive stages, progressing towards a climax (in chh. 12 and 48 c⁷, ⁸). Thus he is made:

The attendant of God's Throne, the Throne of Glory, 7, 48 c⁴.

The Prince and steward set over the treasures of heaven—containing the celestial and cosmic forces or agencies and the Divine Secrets—hence endowed with knowledge of all the mysteries of Creation, of Past, Present and Future, chh. 8, 10⁵, ⁶, 11, 48 c³, ⁴, ⁷.

The angelic ruler over and Judge of all the hosts of angels and angel-princes. Before being appointed to this high office he had to be transformed from earthly-human into celestial-angelic nature: his body was changed from flesh into fire (11, 48 c⁶), was given wings (9³), numerous eyes (9⁴), cosmic size (9², 48 c⁵) and was clothed with light and splendour (9⁵), 'garments of Glory' (12¹, ², 48 c⁷).

In particular he was assigned rulership over the 70 (sometimes 72) Princes of Kingdoms, the representatives in heaven of the nations on earth and the rulers of the destinies of their respective nations, chh. 10³, 14¹, ², 16¹, ².

As ruler and judge over the angelic hosts and the princes of kingdoms, he is also the representative and vice-regent of the Holy One, the intermediary between the Most High and the angelic world, 10⁴, ⁵, 48 c⁸, ⁹. To fill this position he is given the authority as well as the insignia of his dignity by the Holy One Himself. The Holy One makes him sit on a Throne similar to His own, gives him a Curtain similar to the Curtain spread over the Throne of Glory, 10¹, 48 c⁵. The Throne of the man-angel is placed at the door of the Seventh Hall (the innermost of the Divine Hekāloḥ or Palaces), 10², 48 c⁸. After this the heavenly herald is sent out into the heavens to announce him as "Metatron, the 'Æbæd' (Servant) of the Holy One", His representative and vice-regent, 10³.

The rulership over the angels and princes (4⁸, 10³, 14, 16¹², 48 c⁴, ⁸) has a wider import acc. to 48 c than acc. to chh. 3 seqq. According to the latter it implies a celestial rule only, a dominion over the heavenly kingdoms of angels. According to the former, on the other hand, Metatron as ruler over the princes of kingdoms also wields governing power—through them—over the nations, kingdoms and rulers on earth; in this respect Metatron occupies the office and fulfils the functions of the 'Prince of the World', ch. 48 c⁹.

A peculiarity of ch. 48 c is also the tradition—closely connected with the last-named Prince of the World conception—which represents Metatron as executor of the Divine decrees on earth, especially with regard to the different nations and their rulers, ch. 48 c¹⁰. Cf. Hebrew Rev. Moses, referred to in note ad loc.

Further in ch. 48 c—in contrast to chh. 3 seqq.—to Metatron is assigned the function of supervising and attending the angels and כְּלִים of the Mærkābā: the Hayyōḇ, 'Ofannim, K'erubim, S'erafim, Hašmallim, etc., vs. 4, contrast ch. 7. Thus Metatron here combines the functions in chh. 19–22, 25–26 distributed among the different princes of the respective classes of Mærkābā-angels.

After having been installed as ruler over the angels, Metatron was given a new distinctive name: "the Lesser YHṬH" (or "the little YHṬH", רַ' הַקָּטָן), "after the name of his Master", chh. 12⁵, 48 c⁷, D¹ no. 102, cf. no. 14. Ex. 23²¹ is referred to: "for my name is in him"; Metatron is hereby indirectly identified with the angel of YHṬH of Ex. 23^{20–23}. Cf. the passage in Sanh. 38 b, referred to below. Acc. to 48 (7 in the K-version) Metatron corresponds to the Divine Name אֲדֹנִי (with י), the numerical value of which is 71.

The name, "the Lesser YHṬH", is in chh. 12 and 48 c⁷ used as indicative of Metatron's character of representative, vicarius, of the Godhead; it expresses a sublimation of his vice-regency into a second manifestation of the Deity in the name YHṬH. The special features that accompany and symbolize Metatron's elevation into a lesser manifestation of the "Divine Name" are, besides his being enthroned, the conferment upon him of (part of) the Divine Glory, הָדָר, הָוֶד, זֵיו, כְּבוֹד, "honour, majesty and splendour" (ch. 48 c⁷), "a garment of glory, robe of honour", but especially a "crown of kingship" (10^{1–4}) on which the mystical 'letters', representing cosmic and celestial agencies, are engraved—after the pattern of the Crown of the Holy One, the כֶּתֶר נִירָא—and lastly knowledge of all the secrets of Creation and of 'Torā', otherwise in possession of the Most High alone, chh. 13, 48 c⁷, D⁵.

Note. The expression "Lesser Yahwe", "Little Yahwe" evidently reflects Gnostic ideas. It is highly significant that the very term "The Little YAO" occurs in Pistis Sophia (ed. Horner, pp. 6 seq., ed. Mead, p. 10, ed. Schmidt, pp. 7 seq.). Cf. below, pp. 189 seqq.

Being named like his Master, Metatron is also said to have seventy names "corresponding to the seventy nations of the world", ch. 3. This expression on one side connotes his rulership over the 70 princes of kingdoms, but it is evidently also intended as symbolical of Metatron's character of representative or manifestation of the Deity: the 70 names of Metatron are "taken from the names of the Holy One" (ch. 48 c⁹, D^{1, 5}), they are a reflection of the Divine 70

(or 72) Names, the שמות המפורשות, 48 B, D⁵. (Cf. ch. 29: the 70 princes of kingdoms also have 70 names each.)

Ch. 48 D¹, although asserting, in accordance with chh. 3, 48 C⁹, that Metatron has 70 names, gives an enumeration of his names, which in fact contains not less than 105. See note ad locum.

The special characteristic names or appellations of Metatron, recorded in chh. 3-16, 48 C are: (1) the Lesser YHWH, already mentioned; (2) Na'ar, i.e. Youth or Child, already referred to; (3) Elect One, ch. 6³; (4) One, Unique, 48 C¹, cf. D⁹ interpreted from Enoch being the one and only righteous in his generation, selected as the Holy One's tribute for all his labour with the antediluvian world; (5) Æbæd, Servant, chh. 10³, 48 D¹ no. 17, cf. 1⁴; (6) The Prince of the Presence, שר הפנים or "the angel and prince of the Presence" (48 C¹, cf. D⁶ and throughout the framework of the book: ch. 1⁴ and the inceptive sentences of each of chh. 3, 5-48 A, etc.); (7) The Knower of Secrets, Yōdē^a Rāzīm, ch. 48 C⁸. Cf. further ch. 48 D⁶.

Lastly mention must be made of a possible vestige of the conception of Metatron as a primordial being occurring in ch. 48 C¹: "I made him (Metatron) strong (or Mighty) in the time of the first Adam". One might read in this statement an allusion to Metatron as connected with or being the Primordial Man, the 'Ādām Qadmōn. In favour of this interpretation is the peculiarity that although the identity of Metatron with Enoch is maintained throughout the rest of the chapter, this first statement is referred to Metatron only, Enoch being brought into view only with vs. 2. It is possible, and probable, that this was the earlier sense in which the ibbartū or iddartū was referred to Metatron.

The reason why an earlier Primordial Man function of Metatron has been obliterated was probably, as has already been discussed above (pp. 77, 78), the opposition from the 3 En. circle against the 'Ænošmysticism.

The additional pieces, ch. 48 C^{11, 12}, D, give some further details of the conception of Metatron which are not contained in the rest of the book.

(1) Ch. 48 C¹². Metatron is the teacher of the souls of those who died in their childhood, a tradition preserved also in TB. '4boḏā Zārā, 3 b. For the differences between the two versions see note ad locum. In both passages Is. 28⁹ is used as scriptural support.

(2) Ch. 48 D, besides the treatise on Metatron's names and an enumeration of them—which might be regarded as a mere development or elaboration of the features contained already in the main

Enoch-Metatron pieces—represents Metatron as having in his capacity of Prince of Wisdom and steward of the treasures (of Wisdom, etc.) committed the 'secret' to Moses—against the protests of the angels. From Moses onwards 'the secrets' (i.e. the secret lore, the mysteries of Torā, in the first instance the mystical letters and the Names) were transmitted orally from man to man down to R. Abbahu and R. Zeera (two noted Palestinian Amoras, flourishing end of second century), who in turn committed them to the 'men of faith', an expression which not improbably signifies the circle of mystics or initiates to which the writer belonged.

Thus Metatron is represented as the intermediary through whom the secret doctrine was brought down to man. And as such he defends the rights of men to obtain these secrets against the angels in general who do not desire that the terrestrials should know the 'mysteries'.

All the features of the Metatron-conception thus far mentioned tend towards assigning to Metatron a unique position in the heavenly hierarchy. And such is, indeed, the exclusive import of the shorter Enoch-Metatron piece, ch. 48 c¹⁻¹⁰. In the larger section, however, we meet with some passages of a distinctly opposite tendency: they emphasize Metatron's character of an angel-prince among other angel-princes, occupying though he does a high position in the angelic hierarchy yet not the highest one; and above all do they deny that Metatron was in any way to be regarded as a part of the Deity, a second manifestation of the Godhead.

This tendency is definitely expressed first in 10³; in the proclamation of Metatron's rulership over all the princes of kingdoms and all other 'children of heaven' a qualification is added, excluding from his jurisdiction "the eight great princes, the honoured and revered ones who are called YHWH by the name of their King".

From a comparison with Hekāloṣ Rabbāṣi, ch. 22, it may be shown that there was a distinct tradition as to the existence of a certain group of angel-princes who were higher even than the 'Prince of the Presence' (here not identical with Metatron); the 'eight great princes' are mentioned also in Mass. Hekāloṣ, iv. They were apparently conceived of as angels of the Throne ("standing before the Throne of Glory"). Acc. to Hekāloṣ Rabbāṣi they were also the guardians of the Seventh Hall, hence evidently regarded as the sole angelic inhabitants of this innermost recess of the manifested Deity. Linking with the early representation of Metatron as "seated at the door of the Seventh Hall" (chh. 48 c⁸, 10², cf. 16¹) the interpolators here at work were able to picture Metatron as the judge and ruler over all the angelic hosts outside the Seventh Hall, but with no authority over the angels of the Seventh Hall or of the Throne, which latter angels could easily—on that basis—be regarded as higher than Metatron. By this means the possibility of Metatron being claimed as a lesser Deity was, in the interpolator's intention, guarded against.

It should be noticed, that the tradition used by the interpolator for the purpose of lessening Metatron's importance, originally in no wise had this import. On the contrary, as appears from the Hekālōḥ Rabbāḥi, it was bound up with the assigning of a position to Metatron that was even higher than in 3 Enoch: the leader of the said 'eight great princes', 'ANAFIEL, here occupies the position and fills the office which in 3 Enoch as a whole are accorded to Metatron, the name Metatron being reserved for the second Divine manifestation.

Although this reference to a group of angel-princes in rank above Metatron, which is found in ch. 10³, clearly excludes the unique and supreme position of Metatron and the universality of his rulership over the heavenly household, as emphasized especially in chh. 7-15 (Metatron an angel-prince of the Throne, ch. 7; called the Lesser $\Upsilon\eta\upsilon\eta$, 12⁵, etc.), it does not formally contradict the rest of the chapter. The locating of Metatron's throne to the door of the Seventh Hall makes it possible to conceive of angel-princes who, having their abode within the Seventh Hall, nearer the Throne, would naturally be regarded as above Metatron's jurisdiction. The idea of "eight great Princes in the Seventh Hall" may be of Gnostic origin. The Seventh Hall really seems to play the part (in such connections as the present) of the $\text{'O}\gamma\delta\omicron\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$ of Gnostic systems. Metatron, seated in the Seventh Hall, facing all the lower angelic world, somewhat recalls the picture given by Epiphanius in Adv. Hæres. 31, 4 of the Demiurg in the $\text{'O}\gamma\delta\omicron\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$: ... $\text{Παντοκράτορα καὶ Δημιουργὸν καλοῦσι—αὐτοῦ ὄντος ἐν τῇ 'O}\gamma\delta\omicron\acute{\alpha}\delta\iota$, καὶ ἑπτὰ οὐρανοὺς μετ' αὐτὸν πεποιηκότας (Bousset, Hauptprobleme der Gnosis, p. 17, note 2). The $\text{'O}\gamma\delta\omicron\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$, as the 'region of the eighth', was by the speculations easily changed into the 'region of the eight'. This is, however, a mere conjecture.

The second instance of a tradition bent on lessening Metatron's importance is ch. 16. This chapter, which indeed purports to be a continuation of the 'history of Enoch-Metatron' in so far as it gives account of a supposed celestial incident in the court of Metatron at the time of the apostate $\text{'E}liša$ b. $\text{'A}buyā$, is preserved in another version in TB. Hag. 15 a.

The aim of this chapter is apparently to convey, that although Metatron may for a certain period have occupied the unique position in the Divine Presence which the traditions embodied in chh. 3-15 and 48 c ascribe to him, yet this position is now no longer his. He has at a certain, definite point of time been deprived of his privilege of being seated on a throne and is now 'standing on his feet', i.e. on an equal footing with the other angel-princes. The tendency is here clearly to counteract the influence or consequences of the Metatron-traditions which went towards recognizing in Metatron a vice-regent in heaven, an intermediary ruler over the angelic hosts, an idea which to the writer's mind came dangerously near the recognizing of two Supreme Powers. In endeavouring to neutralize the 'extravagance' of the Metatron-traditions, he does not attack them as it were from without, but while seemingly accepting the fact of Metatron's vice-kingship in heaven as asserted by them, he maintains that Metatron's elevation was only temporary. He is also anxious to make clear that Metatron's kingship is merely a derived one, conferred upon him 'by His King'; he twice repeats the phrase: "by authority of the Holy One, blessed be He". Hence, when this Kingship of Metatron gives occasion to misapprehension on the part of mortals ('Aher) as to the Unity of the Godhead, it can be and is at once taken from him, and he is moreover punished, the punishment being executed on God's command by an angel who is above Metatron, viz. none other than the famous '^ANAFIEL, the leader—acc. to Hek. R. conferred with Mass. Hek.—of the 'eight great Princes'.

This attack on Metatron as an enthroned vice-regent of the Most High has, it would seem, emanated from early opponents to the Metatron-speculations of the mystics, probably at a time when the name and function of Metatron had entered to a certain degree even into popular belief and could no longer be flatly negated. The original content of this attack was evidently the dethronization of Metatron; this has then been amplified, and hence it is that there are at least two versions preserved: one contained in Hag. 15 a, the other in the chapter now under discussion. For the differences between the two versions see note on ch. 16 beg. In this chapter it is remoulded to harmonize—as far as possible—with the ideas which prevail in the Enoch-Metatron pieces. Thus, apart from what has been pointed out above, the reference to '^Anafiel as the executor of the punishment on Metatron seems to have been made with conscious allusion to ch. 6¹.

The angel who acc. to ch. 6¹ was first sent to fetch Enoch from on earth, in order that he might be translated into Metatron, was well suited to be the superior angel who carried out Metatron's degradation. And it was thereby emphasized that just as '^Anafiel had been superior to Enoch at the time of his elevation he was also superior to Metatron at least from his degradation onwards. Hence Metatron, not being even the highest of the angels, could not be contemplated as occupying a position of a higher than angelic character.

In view of the subtle way in which the writer of ch. 16 veils his opposition against the excessive and dangerous developments (as he regards them) of the Metatron-conception by the use of terms and notions recognized by or congenial to the Metatron-tradition, it is not impossible to assume that the qualifying expression ch. 10^{3b}, referred to above, is an insertion made by the same hand who is responsible for ch. 16. There seems in fact to be a natural connection between 10^{3b} and 16, in so far as the former contains the logical presupposition for the statements of the latter, esp. in vs. 5. When it is said, ch. 16⁵, that 'A^ana^afiel YH^uH was commissioned by the Most High to punish Metatron, it implies that this angel at least was higher than Metatron and had his abode nearer the Divine Presence, i.e. not all the angel-princes were subject to Metatron; this is exactly what is maintained by 10^{3b}. Moreover, it is probable, as was shown above, that 10^{3b} is linked with an early tradition of seven or eight high angel-princes of the Throne, of the Presence or of the Seventh Hall, the chief of which was just 'A^ana^afiel. Thus ch. 10^{3b} is in absolute agreement with ch. 16, contains identical ideas, reveals the same tendency as and forms the necessary preparation for ch. 16.

The tradition as to the high position of 'A^ana^afiel was, as has already been pointed out, known to and accepted by the Metatron-tradition, ch. 6¹. But the idea of this tradition was evidently that Metatron at his elevation was exalted above all the high angel-princes, or even, as stated above, that the conception of 'A^ana^afiel as the highest of the Princes of the Seventh Hall belongs to a stage when Metatron was already sublimated into a Second Divine Manifestation. Contrast also ch. 18¹⁸ of our book and Hek. R. xv. 5 ('A^ana^afiel not always regarded as the highest of the angel-princes).

The strongest evidence in favour of regarding chh. 10^{3b} and 16 as later additions made with the definite object of neutralizing the extravagances of the speculations on Metatron (as has been throughout assumed in the foregoing) is the fact, that none of the qualifications set to Metatron's absolute supremacy (as compared with that of the Most High) in the Celestial Court by chh. 10^{3b} and 16 appears in the parallel Enoch-Metatron piece, ch. 48 c¹⁻¹⁰, although this represents, on the whole, the same tradition as chh. 3-16.

(3) Chh. 17-48 A in relation to the conceptions of Metatron. Turning from the sections devoted to the Enoch-Metatron conceptions as subject-matter, to the remaining parts of the present book, it is to be noticed that in chh. 17-40, apart from the stereotyped inceptive sentences of each chapter—the so-called framework to which reference has already been made—there is not a single mention of the name 'Metatron'. None of the three angelological systems (chh. 17; 18; 19-22, 25-28) accords any place to Metatron. Likewise in the sections treating of the Judgement and the Q̣eḏuššā respectively as well as in the chapters dealing with Celestial Topography—apart from chh. 41-48 A—no rôle or function is assigned to Metatron.

On the other hand some of the various functions which in the Enoch-Metatron sections are associated with Metatron are actually found in the angelological sections and the other parts, but they are there connected with different angelic bearers or Divine or angelic agencies.

Thus, for instance, the duties commonly associated with the heavenly Scribe (Witness, Knower of Secrets) are according to ch. 18 discharged by the two angel-princes Sof̣eriel Ṃeḥayyā and Sof̣eriel Ṃēmīḇ, who are the highest angelic figures in this hierarchical system. A similar office is in the greater angelological system, chh. 19, etc., that occupied by Raḍueriel (ch. 27) on the one hand and by the 'Irin and Qaddišin on the other (ch. 28). Raḍueriel, the 'Irin and Qaddišin together form the top of the angelological hierarchy of A 3. The smaller function of the so-called 'scribes' in ch. 27² does not come into account here. Cf. further the 'scribes' referred to in ch. 33².

The function of Defender or Advocate is assigned to various angelic agencies. Ch. 18: Zakzakiel, Šoqeḏ Ḥozi, Sof̣eriel Ṃeḥayyā. Chh. 19 seqq.: Ṣerāfim (26¹²). Chh. 30 seqq.: the Prince of the world (30), the Divine Attribute of Mercy (31), the angels of Mercy (33), etc.

The office of Celestial Judge, whether in general or over the angels only, is in all the rest of the book occupied by the Holy One Himself—although He may be represented as assisted by or taking counsel with certain of the highest angels, e.g. the 'Irin and Qaddišin (28), the angelic Bēḇ Dīn, etc.

The 'Prince of the World' is explicitly mentioned once in the section on the Judgement, and again in the Q̣eḏuššā section. Being the leader of the princes of kingdoms—as Metatron in the Enoch-Metatron pieces—he pleads the cause of the world before the heavenly tribunal (ch. 30). He has authority over the heavenly bodies, bidding them to be silent and quiet at the time of the Q̣eḏuššā (ch. 38). In neither of these cases is he identified with Metatron, although the similarity with Metatron as he is represented in ch. 48 c⁹ is apparent: he is there the leader of the princes of kingdoms through whom he wields governing power over the nations and acts as ruler of the affairs of the world.

Whereas Metatron in the Enoch-Metatron pieces is represented as the attendant of the Throne of Glory and the Prince Supervisor of the Mærkābā-angels, these functions are in the other parts of 3 Enoch distributed among different angelic beings. According to the larger angelological system (A 3) each of the classes of Mærkābā-angels has its own prince: Hayyiel, Rikbiel, Kerubiel, Seräfiel, etc.

In chh. 41-48 A Metatron is, as has already been mentioned, the guide of R. Išma'el through the celestial regions. The fact that Metatron is in these chapters pictured as being able to point out and instruct R. Išma'el about the Cosmic Letters on the Throne of Glory and the recordings of past and future events on the Curtain (Pargoð) of the Divine Presence, indicates that he is here thought of as possessing knowledge of the highest Divine Secrets and as having access to the Divine Presence. A possible indication that he was understood also to have immediate authority over the planets and constellations is perhaps to be seen in the incident narrated in ch. 46^{2b}. (There is, however, in the same chapter mentioned a special leader of the 'stars': Rahatiel, vs. 3; cf. chh. 14⁴, 17⁶.) Lastly when Metatron, in ch. 44⁹, is represented as bidding R. Išma'el take and read the 'books' (i.e. the records of the doings of the wicked), this is perhaps a hint of Metatron's function of Scribe or 'Keeper of the Books'.

As a whole the section comprising chh. 41-48 A is, from the point of view of the conceptions of Metatron, more closely connected with the Enoch-Metatron pieces and the framework than are the other parts of the book.

It is important to note, that the only function of Metatron that is not in chh. 17-48 A transferred to other angelic bearers is that of enthroned representative of the Holy One, which points to this function as constitutive for Metatron.

In order to obtain an understanding of the mystical speculations connected with Metatron and of the origin and stages of development of these speculations it will be necessary to examine the conceptions of Metatron and Enoch-Metatron met with in other writings both earlier and later. Of the greatest importance here is, as a matter of course, the specifically mystical literature. But it will be well also to sketch briefly the fragments of Metatron-traditions preserved in the earlier 'Rabbinic' literature: Talmud, Miḏraś and Targum.

Whereas the representations of Metatron in the mystical writings have received very little attention from scholars—in spite of the fact that these writings are the real home of the Metatron ideas—the comparatively few Talmud, Miḏraś or Targum passages referring to this angelic figure are well known, yet differently interpreted.

§ 9. THE REFERENCES TO METATRON FOUND IN TALMUD, MIḌRAŠ AND TARGUM

(a) In the Talmud.

TB. Sanh. 38 b (in a controversy between Rab 'Idi and a heretic, 'min'). Metatron is identified with the angel of YHWH mentioned in Ex. 23²⁰ seqq. and is said to bear the Divine Name, YHWH.¹ Bearing the Divine Name, Metatron is meant by the 'YHWH' in God's command to Moses acc. to Ex. 24¹: "Come up unto YHWH". The passage in the following, however, reveals the tendency of lessening as far as possible the importance of these 'facts' concerning Metatron. The idea that Metatron should be worshipped is refuted.² Even the view assigning to Metatron the function of intermediary between the Holy One and Israel is rejected: although acc. to Ex. 23²¹ the angel of YHWH (here = Metatron) was invested with the power of refusing forgiveness of sins—"he will not pardon your transgressions"—yet this power assigned to him by the Holy One never became actual, for, says R. 'Idi, "we did not accept him as intermediary leader, פרוווקא".³ On the contrary, Moses prayed to the Most High that He Himself would lead them (basing upon Ex. 33¹⁵: "If Thy Presence go not with us, carry us not up hence").

TB. Hag. 15 a. Metatron is the heavenly Scribe "who was permitted to be seated while writing down the merits of Israel". This dictum in itself shows the same tendency as TB. Sanh. 38 b of trying to lessen Metatron's importance. It seeks to explain Metatron's character of enthroned angel-prince as occasioned merely by his duties as Celestial

1 Basing on Ex. 23²¹ "for my name is in him" as in 3 En. 12⁵, 48 c⁷, D¹ no. 102.

2 The argument is: When it is said, Ex. 23²¹ אַל תִּמְרֵנִי בֹ, this is to be understood as if it were written בֹ, תִמְרֵנִי בֹ, i.e. "do not exchange me for him".

3 The [Persian] word parānqa is the equivalent of sēliḥā. In Mandaitic it is used in the sense of 'SAVIOUR, liberator, DELIVERER'. Cf. Nöldeke, Mand. Gram. p. 418, n. 1. Occurs frequently, especially in Qolasta and Ginzā Left (in the latter mostly as the guide of the spirit leaving earthly life).

Scribe.¹ Starting from this assumption the Gemara goes further and tries to divest Metatron altogether of the distinction of being enthroned, making use of an earlier attack on Metatron's authority: 'Æliša' b. 'Abūyā, having ascended to heaven, when beholding Metatron, was led to the belief, that this angel-prince was a second Divine Power (שְׁמַח' ו' ב' רְשׁוּיֹת ה'). For being the cause of this misconception on the side of 'Æliša', Metatron was subsequently punished with 60 lashes of fire (for he ought to 'have stood up' to prevent the false appearance). Cf. ch. 16 of our book.

TB. 'Ab. Zār. 3 b. Metatron shares with the Holy One the function of instructing the (school-) children, תִּינוּקוֹת שֶׁל בֵּית רַבִּי, i.e. those prematurely dead. As scriptural support is used Is. 28⁹: "Whom will he teach knowledge? and whom will he make to understand tradition? them that are weaned from the milk and drawn from the breasts". Cf. ch. 48 c¹² of the present book.

The Holy One, blessed be He, occupies Himself with this work in the fourth quarter of the day; during the rest of the day, when the Holy One is sitting in judgement, etc., Metatron takes His place as instructor, scil. in Torā, written and oral.

The mystical traditions presupposed by the aforementioned Talmud passages, especially TB. Sanh. 38 b and 'Ab. Zār. 3 b, suggest a somewhat later stage of development than that of 3 Enoch. What shows a later time for the material used by the Talmud passages or for the traditions indirectly referred to is the trait assigned to Metatron of intermediary between the Holy One and Moses or between the Holy One and Israel, and connected with this, of Celestial Advocate of Israel. Metatron is here beginning to take over the specific functions of Mikael, the Prince of Israel. On the whole the traditions at the back of the Talmud passages are most akin to those of the Ma'asē Mærkābā collections. They are also actually paralleled in the additional chh. 15 B and 48 D of our book, which belong to the stage of Ma'asē Mærkābā collections.

(Cf. Pisqon, etc. in TB. Sanh., 'En Ĵa' qoḇ, 39 b.)

(b) Midrašic references.

As the more important among the Midrašic references the following may be noted:

Acc. to Sifre it was Metatron who showed Moses the Holy Land.

With the exception of the reference to Moses the ideas and mode of expression of the Sifre-passage (on Deut. 32⁴⁹, par. Ha'azinu, 59c) are paralleled in the section 41-48 A of 3 Enoch. In both cases Metatron is represented as pointing out the wonders of heaven or future events or (as in the Sifre) the Holy Land, 'with his fingers'. The expression used in *Sifre*¹ is almost literally the same as in 3 En. chh. 41-48 A, esp. 44⁴, 45², 46².

Lamentations R., Intr. 24: When the Holy One, after having removed His Šekinā from the temple on account of Israel's sins (cf. chh. 48 c¹, 5¹⁰⁻¹³)—thereby making way for the destruction of the temple—was weeping for the sake of Šekinā having no longer any abode on earth, and over the calamity that had befallen its former abode—the temple—then Metatron came, "fell on his face and said before Him: 'Lord of the Universe! I will weep, but Thou shalt not weep'. He answered him: 'If thou dost not let me weep, I will at once enter the place which thou hast not permission (רשות) to enter, and will weep (there)'"'. The place that Metatron has not permission to enter is, acc. to the same passage, indicated by the words of Jer. 13¹⁷: "But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places (במסתרים)", i.e. the word Mistārim in this scripture passage is taken to refer to a definite celestial region.

Metatron is here firstly presented as the angel of the Divine Presence who does not, however, partake of the Divine existence beyond the manifestation of the Deity (on the Throne).²

1 The dictum occurring in Sifre is attributed to R. 'Aḥi'az̄ar (ben Hyrkanos) beg. of second century A.D., as usual followed by a controversial dictum attributed to R. J'hošu^a. The right reading of the passage is evidently as follows:

באצבעו היה מוטטרון מראה למשה (והראהו) את כל ארץ ישראל

Cf. the British Museum ms. Add. 16406, fol. 375 d, occurring in exactly identical form in the parallel, Yalqut, Pentateuch no. 949 (ad locum): b'æšb'æ šæl Mošæ hāyā Metatron mar'æ l'æ-Mošæ, etc. The usual reading of the printed edd. of Sifre has a somewhat strained construction, which leads Friedmann in his edition to omit the word mar'æ, regarding it as an explanatory gloss of 'metatron'. Friedmann hence takes 'metatron' as an appellative: "With his finger He was a metatron to Moses", and points to the parallel passage in Pesiqṭa Zut. iii: "The finger of the Holy One was the metatron of Moses", etc. A similar reading of the Sifre-passage, using 'metatron' as a sort of appellative, is recorded in Nachmanides' comm. on 3 Exod. x. 12¹² and in Kaṭor yā-Ferah, ch. 10 (Metatron = one who shows the way). This variant which is attested only in late sources is probably evolved out of a substitution of the unusual 'metator' for the well-known 'metatron', in Gen. R. 5⁴ (see below). Bacher, Die Agada der Tannaiten, i. p. 154, also interprets the Sifre-passage thus: "Nach J(osua?) war Gottes Finger der Metator, Grenzabstecker, der Moses das ganze Land zeigte und ihm angab, wie weit das Gebiet der einzelnen Stämme geht". (In the text Bacher reads 'metatron', hence takes this to be = metator.)

2 This conception of a special place of the Godhead called, after Jer. 13¹⁷, Mistārim, is mentioned in the well-known passage TB. Hag. 5 b: "māqōm yæš lō l'EQB'H uMistārim š'mō". Cf. Gen. R. 82¹³. The secret place to which no ange

Further, the words uttered to the Most High by Metatron: "I will weep, but Thou shalt not weep" "depict Metatron, not alone as pleader for Israel, but as taking upon himself the sorrow for Israel's sins".¹ He is the Seneḡor (συνήγορος), Advocate, but also מצטערם בצערתם, as in later cabbalistic writings, cf. YR. i. 54 A (from 'Asæraḅ Ma'omāroḅ).

Tanhumā, Ṭā' aḅhannān 6. When Moses is informed that the time has come that he must die, he asks successively the mountains, the rivers, the sea, etc. and various powers of heaven and earth to intercede for him with the Holy One that he may be allowed to live. But they all refuse. He also entreats Metatron² to intercede for him. Metatron answers: "It were of no avail. For I have heard the words behind the Curtain (Pargoḏ): 'Thy prayer will not be answered'".

In the same paraša we find Metatron again referred to in connection with Moses' death. When the Most High is sorrowing after the decease of Moses and asks: "Who will henceforth intercede for Israel when they sin?" Metatron falls on his face before Him, saying: "Lord of the Universe! In his life Moses was thine; after his death he is also thine".

A parallel to the latter passage is found in a MS. of Midraš Mišle on Proverbs 14³⁴. Cf. JE. x. 231, Harv. Th. R. xv. p. 83, n. 65. In the printed editions Mikael takes the place of Metatron.

In Num. R. xii. 15 Metatron is represented as officiating in the Celestial Sanctuary, and this Sanctuary as being especially connected with his name, as 'the Tabernacle of Metatron'.

"At the time when the Holy One, blessed be He, commanded Israel to erect the Tabernacle His words implied a command also to the ministering angels that they should erect a Tabernacle on high (Rāmax l'-mal'akē ha-ššāreḅ šæyya'asu 'af hem miškān). This is the Tabernacle of the Youth (miškan ha-nNa'ar) whose name is Metatron, and in it he offers the spirits of the righteous to atone for Israel in the days of their exile."

It is here to be noticed, that Metatron is explicitly called Na'ar, nor any being, not even Metatron, is admitted, is in the mystical literature usually identified with the '955 heavens' (cf. ch. 48 A¹) and then signifies the inscrutable abode of the Godhead, which is beyond or above every manifestation of Him, even as seated on the Throne of Glory or Throne of Judgement. (This is later developed into the conception of the 'olām hā-'ašilūḅ, cf. Mass. Aš., ch. v.) Metatron, as the Prince of the Presence, or the vice-regent of the Holy One, or even as the second Manifestation of the Deity, is naturally represented as excluded from the 'Mistarim'. When regarded as an aspect of the Divinity Metatron is represented as being able to ascend through 900 of the 955 heavens, but not higher.

Youth (3 En. chh. 3, 4, etc.), that the Tabernacle of the Na'ar is referred to as something well known, and that Metatron is represented as having in his charge, under his authority and care, the spirits of the righteous. As a whole this passage represents a later phase in the development of the Metatron-conception. The Tabernacle of Metatron is referred to in the additional ch. 15 B¹ of 3 Enoch.

Gen. R. v. 2. According to one reading Metatron is here used as an appellative. With reference to the Divine Word (or Voice) saying, Gen. 1⁹: "let the waters under the heavens be gathered together unto one place!" it is said: "There are some who interpret (explain) in accordance with (the view of) Bæn 'Azzai and Bæn Zomā: the Voice of the Holy One was made into a Metatron over the waters, in accordance with Ps. 29³: 'The voice of the Lord is upon the waters'". The passage is by the commentators ad locum interpreted as meaning: "The Voice of the Lord went before the waters, conducting or directing them to the Okeanos (the place of the lower waters)".

There are many variant readings of the 'metatron' in this passage, as may be seen from the critical apparatus of Theodor's edition of Genesis Rabba. Besides mitatron there are the מטטור and מיטטור, of old being recognized as the Latin 'metator' and the basis for the interpretation of 'metatron' as 'forerunner', 'leader', 'one who shows the way' (evidently also the basis for the interpretation by the commentators ad loc.). Other readings are מסטירין (Brit. Mus. MS. Add. 16506, fol. 6 d) or מסטורין (Vatican MS. acc. to Theodor), i.e. 'a secret', 'a mystery' (cf. Gen. R. i, Ex. R. xviii, Lev. R. xxxii, Num. R. xx); מטרון, a form sometimes met with as an equivalent for or 'name' of Metatron; מטרטין, etc.

The existence of so many variants shows that the original word must have been unknown to the copyists, i.e. its meaning not understood by them. Thus they tried to substitute, each of them, another similar-looking word. Now the most unusual word among the various readings here is evidently מטטור, which also gives the best sense. Hence it may safely be assumed that 'METATOR' was the original word.

The substitution of Metatron for Metator is easily accounted for by the similarity of the characters of both words on one hand, and the speculations of the cabbalists on Metatron's functions at the Creation on the other. But this substitution has since, from the time of Nachmanides and Eleazar of Worms onwards, been used as the starting-point for various interpretations of Metatron from Metator (i.e. when the meaning of the Latin word had again been brought into light). See Nachmanides, Commentary on the Pentateuch, Ex. 12¹².

(c) References in the Palestinian Targum.

To Deut. 34⁶. Four angels, called 'Masters of Wisdom', took care of Moses' soul at his death: Miṭaṭron, 'Uriel, Yofiel and Yeḥippayāh'.¹ This idea is met with in the legends on Moses' death and also in the traditions of his angelic teachers at the time when he received the Torā and its secrets. The Targum passage in all probability is dependent on this literature which, as has already been shown, belongs to the period of Ma'asē Mærkābā collections. 'Masters of Wisdom', 'Princes of Wisdom' and 'Princes of the Torā' are interchangeable terms. Metatron at this stage has taken over the functions of 'Prince of Wisdom, Prince of Torā' originally attributed to Yeḥippayāh, Gaḥṣur and Zaḡnezaḡiel and the latter are represented as companions or servants of Metatron or as names of Metatron. Cf. Hek. R. xxx, Ma'yan Hoḳmā, Miḏraš Pēṭiraḅ Mošæ, Deut. R. xi and 3 Enoch, the additional ch. 48 D¹⁻².

To Gen. 5²⁴. Metatron is the translated Enoch who was taken up to heaven on account of his having led a perfect life, serving the Holy One 'in truth'. He is called the Great Scribe.

This is evidently dependent upon the Enoch-Metatron traditions, possibly directly upon 3 Enoch, since it combines, as does the Enoch-Metatron piece, chh. 3-15, the functions of Scribe-Witness and only perfect Saint with reference to the translated Enoch. (3 En. chh. 4, 6, 48 C².)

§ 10. THE CONCEPTIONS OF METATRON IN RELATED MYSTICAL AND APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE

A. IN 1 AP. IŠM., THE HEKALOḶ WORKS AND 1 AND 2 LEG. MARTYRS.

THE earliest among related mystical writings coming under consideration here is the apocalyptic fragment preserved in Siddur 'Amrām Gā'on, 3 b, 12 b-13 a; BH. vi. 19-30, v. 167-169, Yihus ha-ššaddiqim by Gærson bæn 'Ašer Scarmela, Mantua 1561.¹ This fragment may for the sake of convenience be referred to as 1 Ap. Išm. (i.e. the first Apocalypse of R. Išma'el).

At the end of 1 Ap. Išm. Metatron is represented as the head of all the heavenly household who are engaged in the incantation of the ¹ Cf. M. Bittenwieser on 'Apocalyptic Literature, Neo-Hebraic', in JE. and Gaster in RAS.'s Journal, 1893, pp. 609 seqq.

Qe'duššā. He is possibly also thought of as in some way or other being connected with the coming salvation and the Messianic Kingdom.

R. Išma'el, it is narrated, after having beheld all the sufferings stored up for Israel, is shown also the coming salvation and consolation which are symbolized by David with a crown on his head, taking his seat on a throne prepared for him "in the Great Temple in Rāqīa'" with all the kings of the house of David in front of him and all the kings of Israel behind him. Being seated on his throne David begins uttering songs and hymns of praise. At the moment when David utters the שִׁירֹת וְתִשְׁבָּחוֹת then also Metatron "and all his heavenly household" open their mouths and say, "Holy, Holy, Holy", and the Ḥayyōḇ respond, "Blessed be the Glory of ַיְהוָה from His place", i.e. the simple form of the Qe'duššā attested also in 3 Enoch.

The name 'Metatron' does not occur elsewhere in 1 Ap. Išm. The angelic being from whom R. Išma'el receives the disclosures as to future events is called the "Prince of the Presence". He is addressed by R. Išma'el as "the Glory of Splendours" (cf. the epithet given to Metatron in chh. 13, 15, 16 et al., "the Glory of all heavens"). In the second part of 1 Ap. Išm. the angel is named Haḏarniel and carries the same names and functions. It is possible, but by no means certain, that this angel is understood as identical with the 'Metatron' mentioned at the end of the fragment.

1 Ap. Ism. is very closely related to 3 En. chh. 41-48 and evidently belongs to the same stage as our book. The only difference is that Metatron here seems to be in the process of being dissociated from the "Prince of the Presence" as he is in the Hek. R.

There is also a hint of his being regarded as the celestial שריה ציבור as in later writings. (Cf. Sode Rāzā in YR. i. 58 b below, p. 120.)

In Hekāloḥ Rabbāḥi, ch. 26₈, towards the end of a doxology to the Holy One, we find the following, somewhat obscure, passage:

אין לא בעליונים ולא בתחתונים לא בראשונים
ולא באחרנים שיכול לידע את מעשיך ולחקר
את כל נפלאותיך כמה שאין יכול לדמותם אלף
בית א ב ב ג ד ה ו ז ח ט י כ ל מ נ ס ע פ צ ק ר ש ת
שמו על שמנה שמות מרניאל שמו. גיורתאל
שמו. גיורתאל שמו. גיורתאל שמו. יהואל שמו.
מינאל שמו. סגנסיאל שמו. מתוך אהבה
שאוהבין אותו במדום והיו קורין אותו
במחנות קדושים מטטרון עבד יי ארך אפים ורב
חסד.

As 'Metatron' here stands in the context, it would most naturally be taken as a Divine Name, on analogy with the Zoh^{ariel} YHWH 'Elohe Israel of foregoing chapters in the Hekāloṣ Rabbāḥi, and this so much the more easily, as the letters preceding the 'Metatron' in the first instance are the letters of the Divine Name. But against assuming 'Metatron' here to be intended as a Divine Name there is the epithet given to him in the second place: 'Æbæd YHWH, the Servant of YHWH. This, which moreover is a traditional and well-established epithet of Metatron as a separate angelic being, cannot very well be considered part of a Divine Name.

Two possible solutions of the problem presented by the text of this passage in its present form may be suggested:

(a) The word אלה (except) may have been dropped by a copyist before the אלה, the characters of both words being similar. This emendation would give the meaning: "No one... is able to know Thy works or to search Thy wonderful doings... except... Metatron who is called by eight names, etc."

(b) Another possibility is that the 'Æbæd YHWH after "Metatron" in the second instance is a later insertion, especially in view of the immediately following Divine Attributes, "Longsuffering and Abundant in Goodness" (Ex. 34⁶), which, it would seem, could hardly have been attached to a "Servant of YHWH", not even to Metatron as a separate angelic being.

One may venture to assume that the solution (a) is the more plausible one. In favour of interpreting Metatron here as the name of a high angelic being, not as a Divine Name, is the parallel in wording of the second part of the passage with ch. 12 of our book: "By reason of the love with which the Holy One loved me more than all the children of heaven, etc.", cf. here: "By reason of the love with which they love him on high they call him in the camps of the holy ones: Metatron, the Servant of YHWH, the Longsuffering and Abundant in Goodness".¹

It is noticeable that the conception of Metatron in Hek. R. is markedly sublimated as compared with 3 Enoch. He possesses the Divine Names, 'Alaḥ and Beḥ, and the Divine Letters, אה, כב, etc. The

מטטרו is here already regarded as the central part of the name 'Metatron' מטטרו and as one of the symbols of the fact that he has 'the Divine Name' within him (in accordance with Ex. 23²¹).¹

Metatron is further, in this passage, represented as alone of all celestials possessing knowledge of all God's works and His wonders, especially the 'Secrets of Creation'—in perfect agreement with 3 En. 11 and 48 c⁷.

He is said to have several names. Of these are important, firstly Saḡn^esaḡiel, the occurrence of which here shows clearly how firmly this name was associated with that of Metatron in different sources, and secondly Y^ehoel. The mention of Y^ehoel (which is the equivalent to the variant forms 'Yaoel', 'Yaol', 'Yoel', 'Yahoel' occurring in other writings) as an essential name of Metatron corroborates the identity between 'Metatron' and Yaoel of The Apocalypse of Abraham emphasized by G. H. Box in his edition of this work.² The peculiar endowment shared by both Yaoel and Metatron is the possession of the Divine Ineffable Name, and, bound up with this, the function or position of God's "vice-regent, second only to God himself".³

Metatron in relation to "the Prince of the Presence" acc. to the Hekāloḥ Rabbāḥi. Metatron and "the Prince of the Presence" are viewed as two essentially distinct angelic figures. Moreover, whereas Metatron is contemplated as a being of extraordinarily high position, the Prince of the Presence, having been severed from Metatron, is in process of degradation.

The Prince of the Presence, named as Suryā or Suriel, is the angel-prince who gives R. Iśma⁴el disclosures as to the reasons for the Divine decree concerning the ten martyrs-to-be and informs him of the retribution reserved for the future (Hek. R. 6). This part of the Hekāloḥ Rabbāḥi is very closely related to 1 Leg. Martyrs.

The name "Suryā, the Prince of the Presence" further occurs in a context describing the various constituent parts of the Mærkābā. As a sort of highest figure of the Mærkābā apart from the Throne of Glory is mentioned: "Suryā, the Prince of the Presence, the Servant of Ṭuṭṛ^ekiel יְהוּחַ". When compared with ch. 22 on '*A*na^lfiel' and ch. 26 on Metatron, this passage (ch. 13¹) confirms the general impression given by Hek. R. that 'the Prince of the Presence' is only a secondary angel-prince, surpassed not only by Metatron, but by '*A*na^lfiel' and the seven (or fifteen) angel-princes under him. The "Servant of Ṭuṭṛ^ekiel יְהוּחַ" is equivalent to the "Servant of Metatron as a representative of the Godhead". Metatron, on the other hand, is the "Servant of יְהוּחַ", κατ' ἐξοχήν. Between Metatron and the Prince of the Presence is '*A*na^lfiel', who is called simply 'Servant'.

1 Metatron as being inherent in the Divine Name 'Ālæf is the notion that forms the starting-point for the whole exposition of the Enoch-Metatron piece, ch. 48 c¹ seqq. When pronouncing the Divine Name 'Ālæf (see the enumeration of the Divine Names in 48 b) the mystic was to concentrate his mind on 'Metatron' or rather on the inter-relations between the Holy One and Metatron, which inter-relations were summed up in the words "'ibbartiy, l^eqahtiy, p^eqaatiy". The same is suggested by the presentation of 'Ālæf as a name of Metatron here.

2 G. H. Box, The Apocalypse of Abraham (TED.), p. xxv.

3 G. H. Box, op. cit., ib. If Metatron were to be regarded here as itself a Divine Name, this would have to be considered as an anticipation of the later explicit identification of Metatron with the Šekinā.

Also in ch. 14⁴ the subservience of the Prince of the Presence to Ṭuṭrusiel is emphasized. Acc. to this passage, the man who wishes to immerse himself in the mystical Mærkābā-state is to call upon (conjure) the Prince of the Presence, by the power of the names of Ṭuṭrusii יְהוּחַ, according to the usual form of the magical invocations: a subordinate angel can be conjured by reciting the name or names of an angel in authority above him.

In ch. 17 again there are preserved some features of the earlier conception of the Prince of the Presence as being associated with Metatron (here suggested by the name Ṭuṭrusii יְהוּחַ) and having several names.

In ch. 22, the Prince of the Presence is expressly declared to be subordinate to '*A*na^lfiel'. To the Prince of the Presence, it is said here, only the angels outside the "presence of the Throne" prostrate themselves, but before '*A*na^lfiel' "all on high and below fall upon their faces, paying him homage". Cf. above, p. 86 f. '*A*na^lfiel' here fills the function of a delegate.

Acc. to Hek. R. 6₁, 'the Angel of the Presence' is represented as the attendant of the Throne, the Mærkābā-angels and the by-work of the Mærkābā. This is the function assigned to Metatron in 3 En. 48 c⁴, but whereas in 3 En. 48 c⁴ Metatron is the Attendant-Supervisor of the Mærkābā-angels, the 'Angel of the Presence' acc. to Hek. R. 6₁ is the Attendant-Servant. (Cf. however Hek. R. 2₃.)

Thus, in Hekāloṣ Rabbāḥi, there are mentioned THREE celestial beings who fulfil the functions and occupy the positions that in 3 Enoch are combined and attached to Metatron. The three celestial beings are:

(1) The Angel or Prince of the Presence who is the guide, protector and informant of the Mærkābā-seer, the attendant of the Throne and the Mærkābā, etc.

(2) '*A*na^lfiel' who is the Prince of the Princes and also to some extent the Prince of the World, primarily from the cosmic aspect.

(3) Metatron who is the bearer of the Divine Name(s), the sole angelic being in possession of the last secrets of the Godhead, the representative of the Godhead whose manifestation on the Throne is referred to by names that allude to the name 'Metatron': Ṭuṭrusiel, Ṭuṭr^ēkiel, 'Anṭuros. This third celestial figure of the Hekāloḥ Rabbāḥi is on a higher stage of sublimation, it would seem, than is Metatron in 3 Enoch. He is perhaps here at the beginning of the process in which he will eventually be identified with the Š^ēkinā.

Massækæḥ Hekāloḥ. In Mass. Hek. there is no mention of Metatron, nor indeed of any individual named angel-prince with the exception of the four princes appointed over the four camps of song-uttering angels: Mikael, Gabriel, 'Uriel and Rafael, ch. vi. 1. Cf. 3 En. 18⁴, 37¹, 1 En. 40¹⁻³. As the Massækæḥ Hekāloḥ presents a developed Mærkābā-picture on the basis of that of Hekāloḥ Rabbāḥi this absence of any reference to individual angel-princes—with the said exception—is simply an accident, due to the character of the subject-matter of this writing.

The Legend of the Ten Martyrs. There seem to have been several works describing the mystical experiences of R. Išma'el, and hence closely related to 3 Enoch. One of these is the aforementioned 1 Ap. Išm. Another work of the same kind seems to have treated of R. Išma'el's last experiences during his earthly life. This work is now lost, but it has been used and embodied in the various quite late collections of popular legends of the Ten Martyrs who were put to death in the Hadrianic persecution, R. Išma'el being one of the supposed ten martyrs (הַרְוֵי מַלְכוּת). The two versions coming into consideration here may, for our present purpose, be referred to as 1 Leg. Martyrs (found in BH. v. 167-169) and 2 Leg. Martyrs (BH. vi. 19-36).¹

1 Leg. Martyrs, cf. Hek. R. 4 and 5. The Prince of the Presence, named as Suriel and Saḡn^ēsāḡiel, is here also the guide and informer of R. Išma'el. 'Suriel' is regarded as the characteristic name of the 'Prince of the Presence' in agreement with Hek. R. and TB. Berākoḥ, 51 a, which latter probably also belongs to one of the above-named works on R. Išma'el. The Prince of the Presence is essentially the guide of the Mærkābā-seer.

2 Leg. Martyrs. This version seems to be dependent upon the conceptions of 3 Enoch, especially in its later additional parts. Metatron is here expressly identified with 'the Prince of the Presence'. The following features may be recorded:

Metatron is the 'Ābād, the Servant of the Holy One (3 En. 10³, 48 c¹, d¹ no. 17).

Metatron hears the Divine decree "from behind the Pargoð" in the form of a loud utterance by the Baḥ Qol.

The conception of Metatron as having a sanctuary and altar of his own on high is here beginning to emerge. R. Iṣma'el beholds the Celestial Altar and asks Metatron about it. "The spirits of the righteous we offer upon it before the Holy One", is the answer, at which R. Iṣma'el exclaims: "Now I have learnt a thing the like of which I never heard before". Since the Celestial Altar was an old idea, the exclamation can only refer to the relation of Metatron and his subservient angels to the celestial altar and sanctuary. Cf. 3 En. 15 B¹.

Metatron is made the exponent of the central thesis of the mystical doctrine: everything below has its corresponding counterpart above, as it is formulated here: כל מה שיש למטה יש למעלה.

Metatron is associated with Gabriel, Gabriel being his assistant and representative.

Metatron seems here to be connected with R. Iṣma'el in a more intimate manner than in 3 Enoch or in related works purporting to be the revelations committed to R. Iṣma'el by Metatron. Metatron, acc. to 2 Leg. Martyrs, was present at the birth of R. Iṣma'el, and the Holy One is said to praise R. Iṣma'el before Metatron every day with the words: "I have a Servant ('Ābād) on earth as thou art my 'Ābād on high. His splendour corresponds to thy splendour and his appearance corresponds to thy appearance". This may be an expression of the cabbalistic speculations which make R. Iṣma'el one among the human carriers, embodiments, of the celestial essence (the Divine Spark) represented by Metatron, which human carriers are usually enumerated as (the spirit of) the first 'Ādām, Enoch, the three Patriarchs, Joseph and R. Iṣma'el (cf. below, pp. 122, 123).

B. THE CONCEPTIONS OF METATRON IN THE HEKĀLOP ZOṬĒRĀPI AND IN THE ŠI'UR QOMĀ.

The conceptions of Metatron met with in the works discussed in the preceding section show a development from the standpoint of 3 Enoch towards a sublimation of Metatron and a concentration of the highest functions around this name with a consequent tendency of dissociating the less important ones from him and transferring them to angelic figures such as 'the Prince of the Presence' and 'Anafiel', etc. This stage might perhaps, after the main sources, be called the Hekāloḥ-stage.

Between this stage and the subsequent more subtle speculations on the Metatron ideas are to be placed the representations of the Ši'ur Qomā and the Hekāloḥ Zoṭ'ērāḇi.

(a) Ši'ur Qomā, or Sefær ha-qQomā.

The Ši'ur Qomā as preserved in MSS. and in S. Raziel consists of several fragments which for critical purposes must be indicated here. As preserved in S. Raziel (ed. Warsaw, 1913) they are:

(i) Fol. 30 b: a doxology, beginning "Bārūk 'attā YHWH 'ælōhēnū u'Elōhē 'abōḇēnū, etc."

(ii) Ib.: the shortest and, probably, earliest of the Ši'ur-expositions, represented as a 'testimony' by Metatron to R. Iśma'el as to the measures (šī'urim) of the manifestation of the Throne.

(iii) Ib.: the piece "'ām'ērū: kōl ha-yyōdē' rāz zæ mubṭāḥ lō, etc."

(iv) Fol. 30 b c: a new doxology to the Most High as King.

(v) Fol. 30 c: a glorification to the Holy One beginning "lāk YHWH ha-gG'ēdullā u'e-ha-gG'ēbūrā". This fragment is missing in some of the MSS., e.g. Bodl. OPP. 467.

(vi) Fol. 30 d, 31 a: a longer version of the Ši'ur-exposition, probably, as (ii), belonging to the earliest strata of the Ši'ur Qomā. R. Iśma'el is here represented as beholding with his own eyes the manifestation of "the King of Kings" and, while beholding the Divine manifestation on the Throne, being told by Metatron the measures and names of the various parts of the Throne-manifestation.

(vii) Fol. 31 a: a supplement to the preceding, purporting to be given by a disciple of R. Iśma'el, R. Nāpān, on the authority of R. Iśma'el.

(viii) and (ix) Ib.: pronouncements by R. 'Aqīḇa to R. Iśma'el and by RR. 'Aqīḇa and Iśma'el in unison of the great value and importance of the secret embodied in the Ši'ur Qomā.

(x) Supplementary, additional expositions of the Throne-Mær-kābā-picture, fol. 31 a b.

(xi) Fol. 31 b middle to 31 c: continuation of the preceding, but grouped round the conceptions of Metatron.

(xii) Hymns and doxologies of various kinds.

Summary of the conceptions of Metatron in the Ši'ur Qomā.

α. In (ii) and (vi).

1. Metatron is the Prince who reveals the secrets to R. Iśma'el and R. 'Aqīḇa (ii) and (vi).

2. The Angel, The Prince of the Presence (vi) and the Great Prince, שרא רבא (ii).

3. The Witness ('Ed), the Great Prince of Testimony: Sārā Rabbā di-Sāh^oḏūḇā, the Testifier of the Divine Majesty and Kingship.

4. He has several other names beside Metatron; some of these are formations by analogy from 'Metatron', quasi on nominal stems of the type 'fi'lōn' or 'fe'al'ōn', among them the Ru^oḥ Pisqoniḇ, Pisqōn, 'Iṭmōn, Siḡrōn of TB. Sanh. 44 b.

β. In (x) and (xi).

5. Metatron is the 'Prince of the Likeness of 'Āḏām', i.e. the 'Āḏām Qaḏmon, the Archetypal man in the Divine Image (the Godhead being named אדם).

6. The Celestial Choirmaster (cf. Jaoel in Ap. Abr. chh. 10, 12), at the head of all the heavenly beings who chant the Q^eḏuššā.

7. Is seated on a throne beneath the Throne of Glory.

8. Is called the Great Prince over all the Princes and over all the ministering angels (xi).

9. Is the Celestial High Priest of the Heavenly Tabernacle, called after him Miškan ha-Na'ar (the Tabernacle of the Youth = Metatron).

10. Recites the Divine Name in its universal aspect (in 70 tongues), hence is

11. The Prince of the World and the Representative of 'the King of the World'.

12. As (a) heavenly Choirmaster, (b) celestial High Priest and also as (c) Prince of the World Metatron is called Youth, נער, which here equals Servant-Representative of the King of Kings of Kings (mælēk malke hamm^elākīm).

13. He is connected with Moses in accordance with the later traditional identification of the Angel in Ex. 23²⁰⁻²² with Metatron.

14. Metatron represents the 'first letter, 'Ālāf' through which heaven and earth were created, i.e. the fundamental creative essence (the '1') (xi).

(b) Hekāloḇ Zoṭ^erāḇi.

The Hekāloḇ Zoṭ^erāḇi seems never to have been printed. The earliest MS. source the present writer has been able to find is the Bodleian MS. MICH. 9, foll. 66 a-70 b (copied A.D. 1042), following immediately on the Hekāloḇ Rabbāḇi and preceding fragments of the Ši'ur Qomā (xi) and (xii).

The Hekāloḇ Zoṭ^erāḇi (abbreviated Hek. Zoṭ.) contains several fragments, mostly attributed to R. Išma'el. Metatron here figures quite prominently.

Fol. 68 b, 69 a. R. Išma'el narrates how his teacher R. Neḥonyā bæn ha-qQānā for the first time brought him into touch with the "secret of the Torā" and with the experience of the Mærkābā-state. R. Neḥonyā used the power of the 'Great Seal' which contains the name of "Metatron YHÜH the God of Israel, and which is the same, Metatron YHÜH, the God of heaven and earth, the God of the sea and the dry land". This expression seemingly implies that Metatron here is a Divine Name, but probably this is not the case; the right interpretation will rather be, that Metatron who of old is said to carry the Divine name YHÜH has with this name also acquired that of 'ʿ^ʔlohim' and the epithets mostly associated with it: ('^ʔlōhē) Israel, '^ʔlōhē šamayim ūā-ʿ^ʔaræš, etc. The use of the specific epithets here may furthermore indicate that Metatron is the representative of the Holy One both in relation to Israel and in relation to the cosmos: Prince of the World.

Fol. 69 b. Metatron is clearly conceived of as an angelic or celestial being. The Talmide Hākām (i.e. the initiated among them) when watching and praying on nights are to recite the name of and invoke Š^ʔqaḏ Ḥozi (cf. ch. 18²⁰ of our book); at the same time it is said that Š^ʔqaḏ Ḥozi in reality is merely one of the various names of Metatron who besides Š^ʔqaḏ Ḥozi is called Margaziel, 'Uzzyāh, Gannunyāh, Sasn^ʔgaryāh, Suryāh, Zarzariel, Pišqōn, 'Iṭmōn, Siḡrōn, Sangadyāh, Z^ʔhaḡṭaryāh, Z^ʔhōbd^ʔyāh, Z^ʔboḏiel. Some of these names are those always associated with Metatron, others are in other contexts given as Divine Names and some are names of 'the Prince of the Presence' (Suryā, Margaziel, Z^ʔhaḡṭaryāh, acc. to Hekāloḡ Rabbāḡi, xvii. 1, 4, 5). The passage shows close affinity with the conceptions prevalent in the Hekāloḡ Rabbāḡi.

Fol. 70 a. With the Divine manifestation, indicated by the name Z^ʔboḏiel, is associated "Margaziel, that is Metatron in whom are the letters of the Divine Name; and because of the love with which they love him on high the Princes of the Host on high (cf. ch. 17 of our book: the Princes of the Host = the seven archangels) call him Ziṭ-y^ʔhi-el (= the Divine Glory; cf. Hek. R. xxvi. 8), the Servant—'Ābād—of YHÜH, the God of Israel—blessed be He, YHÜH the Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering and abundant in goodness" (Ex. 34⁶). The latter part of the passage is an almost literal parallel to Hek. R. xxvi. 8 b, vide above.

Fol. 70 b. The Holy One joins fellowship with man, even with a proselyte, provided he be clean from idolatry, bloodshed and ע"ג. "And sometimes I make Metatron, My Servant ('Æbæd), join fellowship with him, and with the disciple in the Torā (I cause him to join fellowship) frequently." This passage is important. It shows Metatron as the vicarius of the Deity even as regards the Divine Presence with man, the Divine Immanence. The Divine Immanence is a pronounced idea in Hek. R., where it is said, e.g. ch. xxvi. 4: "Thou, O God, dwellest in the heart of man".

Fol. 67 b. Metatron is specially connected with the Divine Name אֱלֹהִים אֲשֶׁר אֱלֹהִים. He occupies a Throne of Glory. The 'thrones' of Dan. 7⁹ are explained as referring to the Divine Throne and the throne of Metatron.

Whereas in Hek. R. some of the Metatron functions, i.e. the less important ones, are transferred to the Prince of the Presence and to 'A nafiel, in Hek. Zot. the angel-prince who is said to share the lesser functions of Metatron is Sandalfon.¹ In particular the cosmic aspect of Metatron is here carried by Sandalfon (συναδελφός): he is the 'Alfā or simplest creative agency; cf. above on Ši'ur Qomā, point 14.

C. THE CONCEPTIONS OF METATRON IN THE WRITINGS ASSOCIATING METATRON PARTICULARLY WITH MOSES.

The next stage in the development of the Metatron speculations is indicated by the appearance of a strong emphasis on the relation between Metatron and Moses. This relation between Metatron and Moses, which apart from TB. Sanh. 38 b and Midraš passages is merely hinted at in the later additional part of Ši'ur Qomā (point 13 above), is nowhere found in the literature hitherto under consideration. Likewise, in 3 Enoch, it does not occur in the main part of the book, but only in the later, additional, pieces, e.g. 48 D, 15 B. With the appearance of the speculations on Metatron's particular relation to Moses, this idea or nexus of ideas has never subsided, but can be attested all through the history of mystical and cabbalistic literature up to the present-day H'asid writings.

The works dealing with the subject in question are firstly the various versions of what may be called Ascensions of Moses and Revelations of Moses.

1. Ascension of Moses: G^edullaḅ Mošæ or Midraš K^eḥappu^aḥ ba-^ese ha-yya'ar, ed. Salonica, 1727; see also Wertheimer, Bātē Midrašōḅ, iv; Gaster, RAS.'s Journal, 1893, pp. 572 seqq. Here

¹ Perhaps to be connected with the current conception of two Divine Sons. On this vide H. Leisegang, Der Bruder des Erlösers (in ΑΠΕΛΑΟΣ, i. pp. 24-33).

Metatron announces himself to Moses as "Enoch, the son of Jared". He is the guide of Moses during his ascent through the heavens, and instructs Moses about the wonders of the various reḳi'im. When proceeding from the seventh heaven to visit Paradise and Gehenna, Moses is given over into the charge of Gabriel who here, as in 2 Leg. Martyrs, is represented as the assistant of Metatron: he can be entrusted with works or duties of Metatron which are, as it were, of a less exacting or responsible nature.

2. Revelation of Moses. There are two recensions: one where Moses himself is introduced as the speaker, the other where he is spoken of in the third person.¹

Of the former recensions only fragments are preserved, and these in a very corrupt textual condition. Metatron is the judge of all the troops of angels on high. Further he is the executor of the Divine decrees. He is associated with Mikael, Gabriel and Yeḥfiyāh, the Prince of the Torā.

The latter recension, in a context giving the narrative preserved also in the additional chapter, 3 En. 48 D⁴, states that the Torā was given to Moses after his having forgotten it, by the two princes, Yeḥfiyāh and Metatron. Yeḥfiyāh is the instructor of Moses in the 'exoteric' Torā, Metatron again is the revealer of the esoteric doctrines embodied in it: "the Secrets of the Torā", "the Names hidden in it" as the expression runs (the 'Names' are the Divine Names which constitute the essential secret of the Torā).

3. A fragment of another Ascension of Moses is found in the additional ch. 15 B of our book. Here Metatron is the Intermediary between the Holy One and Moses and the Supreme Advocate of Moses and Israel. Metatron commits to Moses "the letters of the oath through which a breaking of the covenant is made impossible". The letters in question are the mystical, cosmic, 'essential' letters which constitute the elements of the Divine Names, of the Torā, of the Abstract Qualities sustaining the world, and of the whole visible and invisible universe. (The 'oath' here seems to denote a sort of magical formula, almost an amulet, which would safeguard Moses against any transgression of the Torā, against "bringing guiltiness upon himself".)

Secondly, to this stage should be assigned the so-called Sword of Moses, Harbā dē Mošæ.²

In the Sword of Moses we meet with most of the angelic and

² Ed. by M. Gaster, London, 1896.

Divine names found in the Hekālōḥ Rabbāḥi and Zoṭṛāḥi. Page ii: "Yofiel Mitatron who is called . . . the Glory on high". (Yofiel is the third name of Metatron, 3 En. 48 D¹.) Page iv: Metatron is one of the high angelic or celestial beings who help man in his quest for the highest. In the same context are found the names: Miqṭaṭron, Yehoel, 'Aṇafiel.

As the other writings belonging to this stage, the Sword of Moses reflects the traditions of 3 Enoch, and is probably partly dependent on this book. Thus Metatron is the Prince of the Presence, the Youth, Na'ar, Servant ('Æbæd), before the King of the World. He is the mightiest of all the heavenly household; He is ever standing ministering before the King of the World and THE Š^eKINĀ IS WITH HIM IN EVERY PLACE.

Metatron, the Prince of the Presence, it is further stated, comes down to earth and reveals the secrets of above and below to the initiate who invokes him. The attempt to meet the Prince of the Presence is preceded by ascetic practices, fasts, ablutions, etc.

Metatron has fourteen names and a number of Kinnuyim for each of these fourteen names. The fourteen names in question are first of all the much-repeated (1) Rū^aḥ Piṣqōnīḥ, (2) 'Iṭmōn, (3) Piṣqōn, (4) Siḡrōn, which are found in TB. Sanh. 44 a; further (5) MŠY, (6) MIQON, (7) 'Aṣṭam, (8) Saḡṭam, (9) Y^eḥōiēl, (10) Yofiel, (11) Sasniel Yāh, (12) Qangiel Yāh, (13) Z^ebōdiel and (14) S^eneḡron.

In terms reminding of 3 En. 13 and 41 it is asserted: "By these fourteen all secrets and mysteries and all signs and seals were made, and also the foundations of heaven and earth; four of them are written on the heads of the Ḥayyōḥ, four of them on each of the four sides of the Throne, four of them on the four crowns upon the heads of the 'Ofannim, and two of them are graven on the Crown of the Supreme King, the High and Lifted up".

Thus Metatron is, in the Sword of Moses, emphasized as the Knower, Guardian and Revealer of the Secrets, as the Prince of the World with cosmic power, as the Prince of the Presence, the Prince of the Throne and of the Mærkābā-angels and, lastly, as the bearer of the Š^ekinā.

D. METATRON IN ALPHABET OF R. 'AQIBĀ, REVELATIONS OF R. SIMEON BEN YOḤAI, 2 AP. IŠM., ETC.

In the Alphabet of R. 'Aqibā, rec. A, there is no consistent or uniform representation of Metatron, as would be expected also, seeing that this work is merely a collection of scattered fragments from different sources and times.

Letter 'Ālæf. Metatron is the elevated Enoch, the son of Yāreḏ. He is the Prince or head of the Mærkābā-angels, and, by implication, of all the angelic beings; his function of principal Witness and Testifier is alluded to.

Letter Kaf. Metatron is the Prince of the Presence, the 'Ēbæḏ, and brings the congregation of Israel before the Holy One.

Letter Šāḏe. "Because Moses humbled himself and said: 'I am of uncircumcised lips' (Ex. 6¹²) he was worthy of becoming a messenger between the Divine Majesty (G'ḥurā) and Israel, as it is written (Deut. 5⁵): 'I (Moses) stood between the Lord and you', whereas not even Metatron is able to stand between the Divine Majesty and men of flesh and blood." Metatron, although evidently known as an angel of exceptional position, is here explicitly declared not to be a mediator between man and God, not even a messenger. This is of course in glaring contrast to the representations of the preceding writings.

The impression given by Alphabet of R. 'Aqiba, so far as the conceptions of Metatron are concerned, is that this compilation as a whole is not interested in the specifically mystical implications or import of the Metatron figure, but is familiar with the general expressions and terms of the mystical literature, and uses the conceptions current there for its own purpose, which is of a more homiletical and haggadic character. Already from a comparison of the passages just quoted the impossibility is apparent of regarding the Enoch-Metatron piece, 3 En. 48 c, as originating from Alphabet of R. 'Aqiba or even as having from the beginning formed part of it. Cf. note on 3 En. 48 b beg., c beg.

Revelations of R. Simeon ben Yoḥai (Pæræq R. Šim'ōn bæn Yoḥai, vide "Sources and Literature", 3 b). Metatron is the Prince of the Presence, has knowledge of the Divine decrees and the reasons behind them and reveals them to the seer. This is further elaborated in T'fillaḅ R. Šim'ōn bæn Yoḥai.

Similarly in 2 Ap. Išm. ('Aggāḏaḅ R. Išma'el, see "Sources and Literature", 3 b) Metatron, as the Prince of the Presence, is the informer of R. Išma'el as to future events: the coming Messianic salvation will be prepared by the wars between the Islamitic and Roman powers. These two apocalypses, which must date from the end of the seventh or the beginning of the eighth century, are remodellings upon the pattern of the earlier apocalypses, especially 1 Ap. Išm.

Angelological fragment. In Bodl. MS. OPP. 649, fol. 102 a, col. b, there appear a few quotations from 'Massækæp Hekāloḅ' which however have nothing to do with the Massækaḇ Hekāloḇ known to us. The fragment enumerates various high angel-princes as performers of different parts of the heavenly liturgy, or as singing the various songs with different intents. The quotations are interesting in so far as they show the angelic names in the earlier literature regarded as names of Metatron here being conferred on separate angel-princes forming the companions or associates of Metatron.

Metatron is here the chief of the angel-princes who utter the Šema'. With him are " 'Immiel, Yōfiel, 'Af' appiel, Sōḏyāh, Surṭaq, 'Arael, Piṣqōn, 'Iṭmōn, Siḡrōn, Paṣṭam and Paṣpassim".

The fragment reflects the conceptions of 3 En. 15 B as regards the chanting of the Celestial Šema' and Metatron's function as Supervisor of the performance of the Celestial Songs. This is also closely connected with the Moses-Metatron traditions.

In the various versions of Midraṣ Peṭiraḇ Mošæ Metatron, called Zaḡn'zaḡiel (cf. 3 En. 48 D¹ no. 105,² and note, 18¹¹ note) and the 'Prince of the World', is the teacher of Moses during his lifetime and, accompanied by Mikael and Gabriel, takes care of Moses' spirit (n'šāmā) at his death. Cf. P. Targum to Deut. 34⁶, Deut. R. xi. These writings of course build upon the earlier Moses-Metatron literature referred to under C above.

Acc. to The Chronicles of Jerahmeel (ed. Gaster), 54⁸, Metatron is able, on God's commission, to throw down the Egyptian wizards Joḥanai and Mamre from heaven whither they had been able to ascend through their knowledge of witchcraft, whereas Mikael and Gabriel were unable to do anything against them. Here Metatron is clearly conceived of as mightier than the old archangels and princes, Mikael and Gabriel.

In the Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur, ed. by J. A. Montgomery, no. 25 (CBS. 16,009, p. 207), the following passage occurs: "Blessed art thou, YHWH, on account of the name of... Yofi'el thy name, Yeḥi'el they call thee, Šasangi'el YHWH and so... names... [Ar]masa Miṭaṭron Yah" [... דיבריה שום בשום. יפואל שמך יחאל קרי לך שסנגיאל יהוה וכן יה... שמהת.]

[Ar] Apart from the comparison that prompts itself between the names here associated with Metatron and ch. 48 D^{1,2} of our book (Targ. Y to Deut. 37²) the importance of the inscription cited consists in its apparent identification of Metatron with Hermes (Armasa); vide the interesting and convincing interpretation by Professor Montgomery, op. cit. pp. 99 and 208.

It may be noted, by the way, that the name שַׁמְנַיִל here is only another of the many different forms (and corruptions) of Saḡn^esāḡiel (1 En. 18¹¹, 48 D^{1,2}, and notes ad loc.).

As will have been seen there are, after the Hekāloḡ-stage, very few new developments of the Metatron ideas (at least so far as can be seen from the writings preserved): in fact only the speculations on Metatron's connection with Moses, the revelations given to him, and with the Celestial Š^ema' are actual additions. This barrenness in new ideas continues for a considerable time. The mystical writings contain reiterated references to Metatron, but these simply reflect the earlier traditions.

The speculations on Metatron however received a new impetus with the rise of the cabbala (in its narrower sense). Now the earlier conceptions (esp. of 3 Enoch) were taken up and given a deep significance. In many cases it would seem that representations in the cabbalistic literature go back to very early (Gnostic) ideas, perhaps preserved in earlier writings now lost; in other cases again the late (mediaeval) origin is apparent. To illustrate the cabbalistic use of the Metatron figure it may be apposite here to give a short methodical survey of characteristic references found in this kind of literature.

§ 11. SURVEY OF THE CONCEPTIONS OF METATRON IN LATER MYSTICAL LITERATURE

A. Metatron the enthroned vice-regent of the Holy One.

The technical term is 'mišnæ la-mMælæk': Tiqqune Zohar, 77 b.

He is enthroned. "Because of the great love of His Master Metatron has authority to be seated on a Throne like the Throne of Glory": Šēmoḡ šel Mēṭātron, MICH. 256, fol. 29 a; Midraš Ruḡ, 85 b.

Liqquṭim Nəḥmādim, 26 a, declares expressly:

מַטְטְרוֹן כְּסֹא שֶׁה גְּלָגְלִים וּפְרוּחוֹת עוֹמְדִים תַּחַת כְּסֹא וְהוּא מוֹלֵךְ
עַל כָּל מַתַּחַת יַד הַמֶּלֶךְ

"The Holy One made him the ruler over his celestial and terrestrial household": 'Qabbālā' in Add. 27142, fol. 149. He is endowed with all the 'Middoḡ' of the Holy One: ib.

"Little less than God" (i.e., probably, Ps. 8⁵ refers to him: "Thou hast made him a little lower than ^Ælohim"): Yalquṭ Hādāš, Mal'ākim, 51 (no. 29).

He represents the Godhead to the 'outside' celestial and terrestrial world: Pardes Rimmonim (ed. Cracow, 1591), fol. 93 d.

The epithets 'Na'ar' and 'Z^eqān Bēḡō' are especially used to denote Metatron as the vice-regent: Zohar, i. 149 b, i. 181 b, iii. 190 b. Cf. below, pp. 117 seq.

As δεύτερος θρόνος Metatron is surrounded by the 70 (72) Princes; cf. below (Ma'aræḳæḅ hā-'^{AE}lohuḅ, 118 b). In the same capacity he is the Attendant of the Throne of Glory: "In the end of time Metatron will make the Throne of Glory complete as a Throne of Judgement. Now it is carried only by three Hayyoḅ, but then it will rest on all the four Hayyoḅ, the Divine Kingdom will be complete", says Šemoḅ šæl Mētāṭron, MICH. 256, 30 a.

B. Metatron God's representative and ruler in the celestial world.

(a) Over all the angels, and through all the celestial regions.

"He is the chieftain of all angels and princes" is a commonplace expression: Zohar, i. 149 a b, 223 b; Yalq. Hād., Mal'ākim, 59, 72; Midraš Ruḅ, 85 b.

An important idea is here: "Metatron gives maintenance to all the angels": Zohar, i. 229 a b, YR. i. 56 a, 60 a, ii. 40 b. This spiritual maintenance is allegorically expressed by the terms מטר (rain) and מן (manna). "All the angels receive their spiritual maintenance, yea, their very existence, from Metatron (כולם שואבים ממנו). He is to the angelic world what the heart is to the body." Pardes Rimmonim, Gate xvi, ed. Cracow, 1591, fol. 92 b.

"Metatron admonishes the angels to bathe and purify themselves in the N^ehar di-Nur every third day": Šemoḅ šæl Mētāṭron, 40 b.

Metatron has access to the 955 heavens, the inscrutable abode of the Godhead: YRL. Met. no. 33. Acc. to other traditions, however, only 900 of these are accessible to Metatron, the remaining being reserved for the Deity alone.

(b) Special classes of angels under Metatron's authority.

(1) In particular the 70 (72) princes of kingdoms. These are called the נערים (Youths, Servants). They stand in the same relation to the Na'ar (Youth, Metatron) as the Na'ar to the Holy One: Tiq-qūnim, 112 a. They are the angelic rulers over the world, hence figure prominently especially in contexts stressing Metatron's function of Prince of the World: Zohar, i. 149 a b. Cf. below. But they also represent the different aspects of the Divine Manifestation and its activities, and in this connection they are identified with the 70 (72) Divine Names: Ma'aræḳæḅ hā-'^{AE}lohuḅ, 118 b (comm.). These aspects are united in Metatron, the ruler of the 70 (72) angels and possessor of the 70 (72) names, which are called Divine Powers (כחות אלדיות): ib. 119 a b. Cf. M^egallæ 'Amuqoḅ, i. 46 b.

Metatron is appointed:

(2) Over the "12 angels of God": Zohar, i. 149 a b.

(3) Over the Mærkābā-angels: Zohar, i. 21 a, 22 a, 223 b, iii. 227 a.

(4) Over Mikāel and Gabriel: Yalq. Ḥād., Mal. no. 27.

(5) Over the "four Presences": Zohar, iii. 227 a, and over the four camps of Šekinā: YR. i. 21 a.

(6) Over the angels of judgement: YR. i. 52 a (Ṭub hā-'Aræš).

(7) Over the angels of the world of Yeširā: Mass. 'Aš. viii.

(c) Metatron is the guardian of the inmost region of the Šekinā, the Holy of Holies, against the Qelifōḥ: 'Asārā Ma'amārōḥ', 122 b.

(d) Metatron is the guardian of the celestial treasures and the Halls. He is especially appointed over the 'secrets'.

"Metatron is set over the Halls and all their splendours": Zohar, iii. 171 b.

"All the keys are committed to him": Zohar, i. 37 b, 55 b, 181 b, 223 b, iii. 171 b. The possession of the keys is symbolical of Metatron's possession of all the Divine secrets.

Metatron commits the secrets to man (Zohar, i. 37 b) and to the spirits in heaven (Zohar, iii. 171 b).

The 'Secrets' include the 'Mysteries of the Torā' and hence Metatron is called the 'Prince of the Torā'. He gave the (terrestrial) Torā to Moses, was Moses' teacher: Šiyyuni on Ex. 3²; YR. ii. 10 b; S. Yeširā, RABAD's Introduction (ed. Warsaw, fol. 9 a).

Metatron teaches the Torā and its mysteries in heaven, and is the president of the heavenly Academy, בֵּי מַתִּיבְתָּא: Zohar, iii. 197 b; YR. i. 31 b; Sefær ha-qQomā, opp. 658, fol. 102 b. He "pounds H^{al}akop in the heavenly Academy": Ṭiqqūnē ha-zZohar, ṭiqqūn no. 56.

He is the Prince not only of the Torā but also of the whole classical Talmudic, Miḏrašic and Cabbalistic Literature: Add. 15299, fol. 49 b, i.e. from him emanates, in the last instance, all knowledge of the mysteries of the Universe.

(e) Metatron is the guardian of the spirits and souls in heaven, both before and after their earthly life.

He is "appointed to give life to those who are to dwell in the dust (i.e. the spirits who are about to enter the life on earth)": Zohar, i. 181 b. He "assigns a 'star' for the newborn to enlighten his nešāmā (spirit) during his life on earth": Ṭub hā-'Aræš, yr. i. 46 a.

After death he "conducts the spirits and souls back to their places":

Zohar, i. 181 b. He introduces the n^ošāmā (spirit) on high, saying to it: 'Enter, Enter!': Zohar Hādāš, 26 a.

Metatron is the chieftain of the angels GABRIEL (for the righteous, or for Israel) and SAMMĀEL (for the wicked or those outside Israel), who fetch the spirits from on earth by authority of Metatron, their leader: Tub hā-'Aræš, yr. i. 54 a. He is actually called "the Angel of Death": YR. i. 57 a.

(Metatron has here taken over functions of old associated with the name of MIKĀEL.)

C. Metatron God's representative ruler over the world (Prince of the World); celestial judge of the world; executor of the Divine decrees; the representative of the Holy One to the individual; the protector, intercessor, intermediary and advocate.

1. In his capacity of ruler of the world Metatron is usually associated with the 70 (72) princes of kingdoms, representing the different nations of the world.

"Metatron, the Prince of the World, is the ruler over the princes of the nations. Metatron, not the Holy One, is the ruler of the nations, but Israel has the Holy One himself for its ruler": Yalq. Hādāš, Mal'ākim, 57.

"Metatron is the m^emunæ over all the nations, and he understands their language": Hæseð l^e-'Abrahām, 'Ayin Mišpāt, Nahar, no. 25.

He gives maintenance to the world through the 70 (72) princes: Zohar, i. 229 a b.

He is the כלל of the World (the comprehensive unity): Zohar, i. 45 a b.

"All the ten S^efroḥ clothe themselves in Metatron in order to work through him in the world. The Malkuḥ (the tenth S^efirā, representing the Unity of the Universe) rests in Metatron": Pardes Rimmonim, Gate xvi. ch. 4.

2. "Metatron is the judge of the world": S. Talpiyyoḥ, 113 d; Ra'ya M^ehæmnā, par. Pinḥās (Zohar, iii. 219 b seqq.).

As judge he is the "head of the Celestial Bēp Dīn", "for he gives judgements and decisions in respect of all": Zohar, iii. 186 a (judgement is taken in the wide sense of general government as well as forensic judgement).

He unites in himself the two attributes of Justice and Mercy: he is the head of the two groups of angels, the angels of Justice under 'AZZA and the angels of Mercy under 'UZZIEL: Ma'arækæḥ hā-'Elohuḥ fol. 117 b (comm.).

"Metatron is called 'sar ha-pPānim' for he has two pānim (faces): Justice and Mercy": YR. i. 57 a.

He is of course the judge also of man after his death and functions at the Last Judgement: Šemoṣ šal Mēṭāṭron, MICH. 256, fol. 30 a.

He is the guardian of the strict fulfilment of the statutes of the Torā, "he has been entrusted with the 613 keys" (613 the number of the statutes of the Law): Zohar; i. 223 b.

Note. Outside the 'Celestial Bēp Din', i.e. when not contemplated in his function of judge, Metatron is always associated with the attribute of Mercy, cf. below.

3. Metatron is the representative of the Holy One to individual men.

"It was Metatron who showed himself to Moses and to the prophets, for עִילַת הָעִילוֹת did not show Himself to any man": Ma'raēkēḥ hā-^{AE}lohūḥ, YR. i. 21 a.

"When the Holy One chose a prophet and destined him to partake of the Šekinā, it was Metatron who bestowed upon the prophet of the light of Šekinā": Šemoṣ šal Mēṭāṭron, fol. 29 a. "When the Dibbur (the Divine Word) came to the prophet it was Metatron who spoke to him through the Baḥ Qol": ib.

Metatron receives man's prayers, see below.

4. Metatron protects man against evil: against פִּגְעַת רָע and the Qelīfoḥ: YR. i. 60 b.

Metatron is the 'Shield of man'; if only he remembers Metatron, when in danger, one will be delivered and rescued: Šemoṣ šal Mēṭāṭron, foll. 29 a, 30 a.

5. Metatron is the Intercessor, Intermediary and Advocate.

He is called S^{NE}ĒGRON (from συνήγορος) to denote him as an Advocate: YR. i. 60 b.

He is the S^{ne}ēgor for Israel; and when Satan tries to accuse Israel on high, Metatron makes him confused so that he is unable to bring forth his accusation: Šemoṣ šal Mēṭāṭron, fol. 33 b. He records the merits of Israel and seals the records: ib. fol. 29 a.

"When the wrath of the Holy One is kindled against His children, then Metatron prays for them and transforms the Middaḥ ha-dDin into Middaḥ ha-Raḥ^amim (causes the Divine decrees to be determined by the attribute of Mercy instead of by the attribute of Justice)": ib. fol. 40 b.

Metatron is appointed to receive man's prayers: Yalq. Ḥādāš, Mal'ākim, 9; Šemoṣ šal Mēṭāṭron, foll. 33 b, 34 a.

"The way of the prayer is from man's heart to the Hašmal, from the Hašmal to Metatron, by Metatron it is brought behind the Pargod before the Throne of Glory": Megallae ^{'A}muqoḥ, 'Ofan 196.

In this aspect Metatron is frequently associated with SANDALFON and ^{'A}KAPRIEL: YR. i. 59 b, 60 a, Meg. ^{'A}m. ii. 66 b.

"^{'A}KAPRIEL receives the Morning Prayer (the שחרית), Metatron the Afternoon Prayer (the מנחה) and SANDALFON the Evening Prayer (the ערבית)": Megallae ^{'A}muqoḥ, i. 28 b.

"Metatron is called siḡron when shutting the doors through which the prayers are admitted into the celestial abodes, piḥon when opening them": Ṭiqqūnē ha-zohar, ṭiqqūn no. 56.

Like SANDALFON, Metatron binds crowns for His Master of man's prayers: Zohar, i. 37 b; Meg. ^{'A}m. ii. 66 b (cf. TB. Hēgīgā, 13 b).

Acc. to some, men should pray not to עילת העילות (the unmanifested Deity) but to Metatron, for Metatron is appointed over this world: Add. 27142, fol. 109 a b.¹

"Israel prays to the Holy One and to Metatron", states S. Hešæq, MICH. 256, fol. 33 b (comm.).

D. Metatron receives special names and appellations indicating his high position. He is called by the Divine Names, YHWH, ^{'E}LOHIM, šADDAY, etc.; is called Na'ar and 'Ullēmā (Youth, Child), Zāqēn, Zeqān Bēḥō or Sābā d-Bēḥā (Steward, the Eldest Servant of His house); the Prince of the World; the Prince of the Presence; is identified with the 'Angel of YHWH', with ^{'E}HOEL, etc., and has 'numerous names'.

1. The expression "whose name is like the name of His Master"—with reference to Metatron—seems to have been associated with the conception of Metatron from its very origin. Metatron was called the 'Lesser YHWH' to denote him as vice-regent and 'second Throne'. When Metatron was identified with the angel of YHWH and with ^{'E}HOEL, or as a cause of this, the appellation in question found its scriptural support in Ex. 23²¹: "for my name is in him".

And, very much later, even a series of gematrical supports were invented, of which the most well known is that which points to the equal numerical value of מטטרון and שדי. (The theory propounded lately by Moore in Harv. Theol. Rev. loc. cit. infra, viz. that the expression was derived from the original identity of Mikāel and Metatron, Metatron being merely an appellative used of Mikāel, is inadmissible, since the expression is not used with regard to Mikāel, whereas it is inseparably bound up with the name of Metatron. The connection between Υ^{HOEL} of Ap. Abr. and Metatron on this point, contended by Box—cf. below—is, on the other hand, confirmed by earlier as well as later mystical literature.)

איך נמצא בדעתך להתמלל לעלת העלות יתע' ואחר שיש שר מורשה על עניני העולם אליו נתפלל.

(a) Metatron is very frequently called יהוה קטן, the Lesser $\Upsilon\text{H}\Upsilon\text{H}$: Ma'arækaþ hā-^{'Æ}lohuþ, 119 b ("for he possesses the Divine Letters, which are Divine Powers, כחות אלהיות by which he performs everything"). This is said to be Metatron's real name.

Udduy Yāfæ, 134 a, 'Qabbala' in Add. 27142, fol. 109 a b.

(b) He is also called simply $\Upsilon\text{H}\Upsilon\text{H}$ and also ^{'Æ}lohim, Šadday, etc.

"In his rulership over the world he bears the Divine Name Šadday, but when ascending on high, he bears the name of his Master, $\Upsilon\text{H}\Upsilon\text{H}$ ": Zohar, i. 149 a b.

"He is called Yāh and Šadday": S. Hešæq, Add. 27120, foll. 4 b, 5 b.

"Metatron is called $\Upsilon\text{H}\Upsilon\text{H}$ and ^{'Æ}LOHIM, ^{'Æ}HYÆ ^{'A}ŠÆR ^{'Æ}HYÆ, ^{'A}ĎONĀY and has many other names": Ma'arækaþ hā-^{'Æ}lohuþ, foll. 118 b, 119 b.

"The 72 Divine Names are also names of Metatron": ib. 118 b.

2. The appellation Na'ar occurs almost as frequently as the name Metatron itself. Cf. Zohar, i. 37 b, 223 b, ii. 66 b, 94 b, iii. 171 b; Zohar Hādās, 69 b. In later cabbalistical literature it is exactly synonymous with Metatron; hence it does not, as a rule, denote any special function or office of Metatron. Various functions of Metatron are, in various contexts, linked with the epithet of Na'ar.

"He is called Na'ar because he performs the service of a 'na'ar' (παῖς) before the Šekinā": Pardes Rimmonim, 161 b.

"He is called Na'ar, for he is the Prince of the World who said נער היתי וגם זקנתי ('I have been a na'ar—youth—and now I am old', Ps. 37²⁵):" Zohar, i. 181 b (contested by the Tosaphists; cf. note on 3 En. 3).

The Aramaic equivalent is ullēmā: Zohar, i. 223 b (used especially to denote Metatron as the manifestation of the Šekinā).

The quotation from Ps. 37²⁵ is made the basis for the connection of the appellation Na'ar with that of Zāqēn. The Zāqēn is most often used in the sense of Steward, the Eldest Servant of his house, alluding to Gen. 24²: "Metatron rules over all that the Holy One has".

"Metatron... is the zēqān bēḇō (the eldest of his house) acc. to the word 'I have been a na'ar and now I am a zāqēn', viz. the one 'who rules over all that He has', for all colours are seen in him": Zohar, i. 181 b. Cf. Yalq. Hādāš, Mal'ākīm, 98; YR. i. 60 a.

The appellation 'Ābēd' also occurs frequently. This is connected with the zēqān bēpō. As Eliezer, the zēqān bēpō of Abraham, was the servant ('ābēd'), so Metatron, the zēqān bēpō of the Holy One, is called 'ābēd'. He is also identified with the 'ābēd YHWH' of Isaiah. YRL. Met. 2; Yalq. Hādāš, Mal'ākīm, 39 = 59; YR. i. 59 b, 60 a b.

3. Metatron is frequently termed 'the Prince of the World' which naturally denotes his rulership over the terrestrial world (see above under C), but sometimes is interpreted differently. Hæsēd lē-'Abrahām, Mišpāt 25; 'Ēmæq ha-mMælæk', yr. i. 57 b; Ma'arækæp hā-'ælohup, 89 b.

"Metatron is the Prince of the world of Yēširā": Meḡ. 'Am. 'Ofan 118; 'Asārā Ma'amārōp', yr. i. 54 a; YR. i. 60 a ('kapriel the Prince of Beri'a, Metatron the Prince of Yēširā, and Sandalfon the Prince of 'Asiyyā').

"Metatron is the Prince over the rulers of Yēširā": Meḡ. 'Am. i. 66 a.

"Metatron is the Prince of the World, for he is appointed over the performance of the Songs on earth to collect them and bring them before the Holy One": Hæsēd lē-'Abrahām, 'Ayin בל.

Prince of the World, "for he functioned at the Creation" (Ma'ar. hā-'El. 89 b and frequ.; cf. TB. Hullin, 60 a), or was the cosmical protogonon or the 'Ādām Qādmōn' (Hæsēd lē-'Abrahām, Mišpāt 25).

4. As in earlier literature Metatron is called the 'Prince of the Presence', שר הפנים. This is usually taken in the sense of "the Prince who has access to the Divine Presence or who represents the Divine Presence to man". Playing upon the word pānim (face) a cabbalistic passage explains the epithet as follows: "He is called the Prince of the Pānim for he has two Pānim, Judgement and Mercy" (YR. i. 57 a, cf. above p. 115).

The Aramaic equivalent is מנא דאנפין which shows that the פנים was understood as 'face(s)': Midraš Ruḥ, 85 b. But even in Aramaic contexts the form שר הפנים is the usual: Zohar Hādāš, 26 a et al.

"My presence shall go with them (Ex. 33¹⁴) refers to Metatron": Baḥya, Comm. on the Pentateuch, Ex. 23²¹. The Prince of the Presence represents the Divine Presence.

There is no 'class of angels of the presence' mentioned in cabbalistic literature (cf. Book of Jubilees, 2², 18, 15²⁷, 31¹⁴). But the function of 'Prince of the Presence' is sometimes distributed among the three angels ^AKAPRIEL, Metatron and SANDALFON: M^eg. ^A*m.* i. 10 c.

"Metatron is the Prince of the Presence on the side of טוב (Good) and SAMMĀEL the Prince of the Presence on the side of רע (Evil)": YR. i. 58 a.

5. Metatron is identified with the "angel of YHWH". It was Metatron who showed himself to Moses in the burning bush: M^eg. ^A*m.* 'Ōfan 277; cf. Šiyyuni on Ex. 3².

The "angel of YHWH" of Num. 22²² seqq. (who appeared unto Balaam) refers to Metatron: Zohar, iii. 186 a.

The "Redeeming Angel" of Gen. 48¹⁶ is Metatron: Zohar, i. 232 a. Ṭiqqūnē ha-zohar, 112 a.

Naturally Metatron is identified with the angel of the Lord in Ex. 23²⁰⁻²². In this connection he is also usually identified with Y^EHOEL. "Metatron is called Y^EHOEL, and he was meant by the YHWH in Ex. 24¹, 'Come up unto YHWH' עלה אל יהוה, for the letters of אל יהוה are those of יהוהאל (Y^EHOEL)": Add. 15299, fol. 45 b. Cf. Beriḇ M^enuḥā, 4 c d and YR. ii. 64 b.

6. Metatron has numerous names. He has 70 names: Šiyyuni on Gen. 11⁵, YR. i. 60 b. He is bearer of the 70 (72) Divine Names: Ma'arækaḇ hā-'ælohūḇ, 118 b.

He has 60 myriads of names, each name signifying a specific function of his: Ṭiqqūnē ha-zohar, ṭiqqūn 56.

Šemoḇ šæl Mēṭatron, MICH. 256, foll. 29 a-44 a, enumerates and comments upon 77 names of Metatron. These are found also in S. Hešæq.

E. Metatron is the translated Enoch. The influence of the Hebrew Book of Enoch on this point is very marked. From Zohar onwards the conceptions of the elevation of Enoch into Metatron are made the basis for highly mystical speculations on the pilgrimage of the souls, the descent of the spirit to the terrestrial world and its ascent again to its celestial home. Cf. below under H.

The Enoch-Metatron ideas are connected with Gen. 5²⁴, "he was not for God took him", and Enoch's elevation into Metatron-Na'ar is based on Proverbs 22⁶ הַנֶּחֱדָר לִנְעָר, which is interpreted "Enoch was made into the Na'ar, i.e. Metatron": Zohar, i. 37 b, 223 b; Midrāš Ruḇ, 85 b. In Zohar, i. 223 b, the dependence upon 3 Enoch is indicated by a reference to "those (well-known) Bāraiḇās".

The sequence 'Enoch Metatron' or, sometimes, 'Metatron Enoch' is very frequent. Cf. e.g. Zohar iii. 189 a b; M^eg. ^A*m.* i. 46 d, 47 b.

Metatron retains the functions of Scribe, Witness, Testifier associated with him on the ground of his identity with Enoch. Scribe: Ṭiqqūnē ha-zZohar, ṭiqqūn 56. Witness, Testifier (of men's deeds): YR. i. 57 a, 58 a.

F. Metatron is connected with the Divine Service in heaven. He has a Tabernacle of his own. Mikāel's function of Celestial High Priest is sometimes transferred to Metatron. He is further represented as the Šeliḥ Šibbur, the Celestial Choirmaster and the supervisor of the performance of the celestial 'Songs'.

"There are two celestial Tabernacles. One is concealed in the highest and is to be revealed only in connection with the manifestation of the world to come. The other is the Tabernacle that was existent ideally before the Creation, but was not established until the moment when the Tabernacle on earth was completed. This tabernacle is the 'tabernacle of Metatron Na'ar'. In the Tabernacle of Metatron Mikāel is the High Priest": Zohar, ii. 143 a, 159 a.

Zohar, ii. 159 a, explicitly denies that Metatron performs the service of High Priest in the Tabernacle of Metatron. The passage instead intimates that Metatron represents the Deity in the second Tabernacle. It quotes, however, a tradition acc. to which the Holy One showed Moses the celestial Tabernacle and Metatron performing the service in it.

Metatron has two immediately subordinate angels, viz. 'UZZIEL and 'AZZA. Of these 'UZZIEL is the celestial High Priest: YH., Mal.

"Metatron צהצחיה is the High Priest in heaven": Šēmoḥ šal Metatron, MICH. 256, fol. 29 a.

"Metatron is the priest officiating at the Celestial Altar": Zohar Hādāš, Midraš ha-nNə'elām, 25 d.

"Metatron is the Šeliḥ Šibbur on high": YR. i. 58 b.

"Metatron is the Hazzān on high": YR. ib.

"Metatron is appointed over all the 'Songs' that are sung on earth to collect them and bring them before the Divine Presence": Həsəəd lē-'Abrahām, 'Ayin Kol.

"Metatron utters the 'Blessed' בשכמל'": YR. i. 60 b.

G. Metatron has cosmical significance. He is the Cosmical Protogonon, the first of God's Creation. He is the creative power in the Divine Word, the first emanation, etc. He is the 'Ādām Qādmōn.

"Metatron was the beginning of God's Creation": Yalq. Hādāš, Mal'ākīm, 59.

"ברא שית means ברא שית, 'He created six', viz. the six letters of the word Metatron"; "Metatron is the first of God's creation": Tiqqūnim, 116 b.

This is also expressed thus: "Metatron is the first letter, the 'ĀLÆF": S. Raziel, 27 b.

Metatron carries the whole world: Šēm. šæl Met. foll. 33 b, 40 b.

Metatron is the creative power in the Divine Word (y^{ehi} 'ōr, etc.): Liqquṭim Nəhmādīm, 25 b.

He is the Yēsōd 'Ōlām (the pillar of the world): cf. below.

The beginning of God's creation was Metatron who was the prototype of Man made by the Holy One in His image: Ma'arækæḇ hā-'^{elohu}ḥ (Ḥayyāt), 169 b.

The same is said in YR. i. 23 a, but is here connected with the idea of Metatron as the Spiritual Essence in the Righteous (cf. below). "God created man in his own image" (Gen. 1²⁷) means: "God created man in the image of Metatron". So long as he is worthy he carries the image of Metatron (within himself), but when not worthy the image of Metatron is exchanged by the image of Sammāel: "In the image of '^{elohim} (read: in the image of Sammāel) created he him".

H. Metatron is the Šekinā or the Presence of Šekinā in the world and in man. He is the First Spirit-Man, who at the same time is the vehicle of the Deity, and is present in the Righteous, and, in the last instance, in all men. He is the eternal, Spiritual-Divine Essence in man. In his identity with Enoch he symbolizes the pilgrimage of the spirit from its home in the Presence of the Deity through the different spheres of the Universe down to the terrestrial world and back again to its source. Here lies the real centre of gravity of the cabbalistic speculations on Metatron.

1. We often find the expression "Šekinā, that is Metatron", when an examination of the contexts shows that what is really meant is that the Šekinā is contained in Metatron, or manifested by Metatron. Metatron is the λόγος of Šekinā, to speak in Neo-Platonic terms. He is the connecting link between the Šekinā and the individual angels and spirits, and hence is represented as having his higher and lower spheres of existence or activity. This is expressed by the statement, that there are 'two Metatrons'. The one is 'Metatron the Great', the other 'Metatron the Created'. The former is the Šekinā or 'the body of Šekinā', the other the angel-prince and celestial ruler. The former is distinguished from the latter by the insertion of the letter Yod: מיטטרין (Pardes Rimmonim, 93 d), to signify him as the bearer of the Šekinā (represented by the letter Yoḏ, the Nēquddā Pēšūtā)—this distinction is however not observed.

"To the Great Metatron refers the Ši'ur Qomā for he is the 'Ādām 'Ēlyōn, i.e. the self-expression of the Deity in the First Spirit-Man": YR. i. 21 a. Another tradition has: "The Ši'ur Qomā refers to the Created Metatron = 'Ādām hā'Ēlyōn": YR. i. 59 b (Hākām hā Rāzīm).

It was this Metatron who showed himself to Moses and the prophets for the עִלְתִּית הָעִלְוִיִּת did not show Himself to any man: Mēg. 'Am. 'Ofan 277, YR. i. 21 a, 57 b.

"He is the Glory of the Holy One": YR. i. 58 b.

"Man was created in the image of Metatron": Yalq. Hād., Mal'akim,

"Šekinā is hidden in Metatron": Pardes Rimmonim, xvi. 4.

"Šekinā is clothed in Metatron": YR. i. 59 a.

"The ten descents of the Šekinā were in Metatron": YR. i. 58 a.

"Šekinā rests in Metatron" or "on the hands of Metatron": Šemōḥ šel Mēṭāṭron, ṢAḤṢAḤYAH, fol. 29 a.

"Metatron is the body of Šekinā." At the same time he is the manifestation of the First or Highest Spirit, the First Spirit-Man. This Spirit is the "celestial baḥ zuḡ of the Righteous", i.e. is present in all the righteous, as the vehicle of the Deity in them: Zohar, ii. 94 b.

"Metatron was the first emanation of the Holy Spirit, he was the first Spirit (Nēšāmā). From Metatron emanated all the individual spirits and all the angels": Liqquṭim Nəḥmādīm, Add. 17807, fol. 25 b.

In another metaphor: "Metatron is the Na'ar or 'Ullēmā (son of) the 'Immā (here = Šekinā)": Zohar, i. 223 b.

2. (a) Metatron as the First Spirit from which all individual spirits have emanated is present in all the individual spirits and in all men as long as they keep in vital contact with their Divine-Spiritual source. The technical term for Man in vital connection with his Divine-Spiritual source is Šaddiq, Righteous.

Metatron hence is represented as present in all the righteous: in Enoch, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Elijah, Iśma'el b. 'Ēliśa'. He was the Spirit (Nēšāmā) of the first Adam, but left him when he sinned: YR. i. 52 a ('Asārā Ma'amārōḥ), Hæsaed l-'Abrahām, Mišpaṭ 25; YR. i. 57 a ('Ēmaḡ ha-m.Mælēk). Metatron was in Joseph: Mēg. 'Am. i. 66 b, 45 a; 'Asārā Ma'amārōḥ, 122 b. He was in Noah: Mēg. 'Am. i. 5 b. The outstanding saints, 'prophets', 'righteous' were the Avatars of Metatron.

(b) Metatron as the Spiritual essence in man is expressed by the terms of "the madrēgā of Metatron", "וִיהָרָא עֲלֵאָה" (the Celestial Light, the Divine Spark), "the middle column = 'Ammūdā d' 'Ēmṣā-

‘īpā’, the “Spirit of the First Adam,” etc.¹ (Cf. how in Pistis Sophia both the Great Yao and the Little Yao carry the epithets “he of the middle”, “the good, he of the middle”, “the great captain (ἡγούμενος) of the middle” (ed. Horner, pp. 6, 97, 187, ed. Schmidt, pp. 7, 8, 126, 241,² ed. Mead, pp. 10, 163, 300 f.).)

Metatron represents the pilgrimage of the spirit, its descent and ascent. Metatron’s identity with Enoch symbolizes the descent of the spirit into earthly life, into the existence as a terrestrial man, and the ascent of the terrestrial man into a celestial being. It will not be out of the way to compare here Pistis Sophia (ed. Horner, p. 180, ed. Schmidt, p. 232): “ἰαω, ἰαω, ἰαω: This is its interpretation: iota, the Universe came out, alpha, they will turn them, ὦ, will become the completion of all the completions.”³ Cf. also below (c) and the equation the Divine in κόσμος = the spiritual in man (vide Reitzenstein, Mand. B. des Herrn der Grösse, p. 5, and Iran. Erlös. Myst. passim.).

The ‘Ammūdā dē-’²ḥmšā-īpā’ represents both good and evil; the direction downwards (the descent of the spirit) represents evil, the direction upwards represents good: Mēg. ‘Am. ii. 59 b.

Metatron is the ladder in Jacob’s vision, on which ladder the angels were descending and ascending: Mēg. ‘Am. i. 45 a; ib. ‘Ōfan 196. He is the Ṣaddiq, the Righteous, as the Pillar of the world, the Foundation of the Universe, acc. to Proverbs 10²⁵: Add. 27142, fol. 109, S. Talpiyyoḥ, 11 d. In this Ṣaddiq the ‘Ammūdā dē-’²ḥmšā-īpā’ is connected with the Šekinā: Ṭiqqūnim, 119 b, i.e. he represents the ascent of the spirit to its home, the Presence of the Šekinā.

“The expression ‘Enoch-Metatron’ symbolizes the unification of Terrestrial and Celestial Man”: Zohar, iii. 189 a b.

Proverbs 22⁶, “ḥ-nōḥ lā-nNā’ār ‘āl pī dārḥō” is interpreted: “Enoch was made into the Nā’ar Metatron by the Holy One who took him from on earth and made him a ruler on high for ever”. He is the exponent in heaven of man’s pilgrimage. He is both ‘old and 1 Thus Metatron as the Primal Man (πρῶτος ἀνθρώπος, אדם קדמון) is eo ipso the spiritual being, revealed in different righteous men through the ages. For this idea, cf. Clem. Hom. 3²⁰, Recogn. i. 52, ii. 22 (the prophet who goes through the world in various forms). The carriers of the prophet are: Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses (Hom. 17⁴, cf. 18¹⁸, 2⁵²) and are called the seven columns or pillars (Bousset, HG. pp. 172 ff.). Cf. Epiphanius, Hær. 36³, 53² on the Ebionites and Elxaites (pointed out by Bousset), and the Mandaitic conception of the ‘one-born’, ‘unique’ or ‘beloved Son’ as present in all the Messengers (vide esp. GR. iv). Cf. also the following note.

2 Pistis Sophia (ed. Mead, p. 10): “So the power of the little Yao, who is in the midst, and the soul of the prophet Elias, they were bound into the body of John the Baptist”; cf. ib. preceding and sequel and The Second Book of Jeû” (ed. Schmidt) p. 320.

3 F. C. Burkitt renders: “I—Everything has gone forth. A—They will return therewith. O—There will be the End of all ends.” (JThS. xxvi (1925), p. 391.)

young' (acc. to Ps. 37²⁵): he is a living record of the spirit's journey from its earliest beginnings to its last phases: Midraš Ruḥ, 85 b.

(c) The spirit's descent and ascent are also brought into connection with the mystical language of Ezek. 1¹⁴. The descent is the 'running' (רצוּא), the ascent is the 'returning' (שׁוּב). The very turning-point (from the descent into the ascent) is assigned to the life on this earth, symbolized by the earthly life of Enoch. Metatron as descending is called NURIEL. The turning-point from the descent into the ascent is an occurrence in the will (רְעִיָּא) of the earthly man, the turning of man's will from the evil inclination to the good inclination (from the yēṣ̄ær hā-rā' to the yēṣ̄ær hā-ṭṭōb). This is metaphorically expressed by the statement, that there is one Enoch 'from the side of evil' (the son of Cain, Gen. 4¹⁷) and one Enoch 'from the side of good' (the descendant of 'Ænoš, Gen. 5⁶⁻²⁴). The turning from evil into good starts the process through which man regains his N^esāmā, his spiritual nature, and ascends from one celestial grade (dargā) to the other, until he reaches the highest spiritual grade, that of the 'Ādām hā-Ālyōn, the First Man of Pure Spirit, Metatron, who is next to the Deity. This process is considered to be symbolized by the translation of Enoch "whose flesh (terrestrial nature) was transformed into fire (spiritual nature)": Tiqqūnim, 116 b. Cf. Joh. 3¹³: οὐδεὶς ἀναβέβηκεν εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν εἰ μὴ ὁ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καταβάς, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου. The triad Nuriel-Enoch-Metatron thus brought in connection with the time-process (pre-existence, present life, future), and with the Πρωτάνθρωπος ideas may be considered in the light of the Parsistic and Gnostic (Mandaïtic) ideas of the threefold original man, who is also pure man, the original righteous man (in Mandaïtic taken over as Hibil, Šipil and 'Enoš) acc. to Reitzenstein, Das iranische Erlösungsmysterium, pp. 242-244 (cf. Bousset, Hauptprobleme der Gnosis, pp. 205, 206). The cabbalistic representations are, in fact, much clearer in their conception of the First Spirit-Man and his parabolical journey than the various Gnostic representations dwelt upon by Bousset and Reitzenstein.

Metatron is the "Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil" (Gen. 2⁹): Kanfe Yōnā, yr. i. 59 b.

Metatron is called 'Good and Evil'; "from the appearance of his loins even upward" (Ezek. 1²⁷) he is good, and "downward" (ib.) he is evil: Meḡ. Am. ii. 59 b.

Metatron represents the side of Good and Pure: YR. i. 58 a.

Such seemingly contradictory statements are intelligible when they are understood as allusions to Metatron as symbolical of the spirit's paraboli cal course: the direction downwards being termed evil, the direction upwards good.

(d) As in other connections (see above), Metatron also as symbolical of the spirit's pilgrimage or of the Spiritual Essence of the Righteous, is associated with Sandalfon, a sort of copy of Metatron. Thus it is sometimes stated that SANDALFON is the translated Elijah: YR. i. 57 a. "Two earthly men were made into angels: Enoch who became Metatron and Elijah who became SANDALFON": M^{eg}. 'Am. i. 27 d, 66 a b, ii. 3 d; 'Emæq ha-mMælæk, 176 d (cf. above, p. 106, note 1).

It is sometimes hinted that the highest goal of the spirit or its greatest victory can only be attained or won through the realization of the 'turning' during earthly life. The angels proper do not attain the height of the Righteous, they are lower than Metatron, because they have not penetrated into "the darkest recesses of the Universe, those which are furthest from the Divine Abode", viz. this earthly life. "When Moses was shown Metatron-Enoch, he desired to go down on earth, i.e. to enter earthly life, in order to be able to rise to the height of Metatron-Enoch": S. Talpiyyoḥ, 166 a.

§ 12. ORIGIN OF THE WORD 'METATRON'

THE actual significance or derivation of the word Metatron seems to have been forgotten quite soon after Metatron as a distinct celestial figure had clearly emerged. Hence we find, from the middle of the ninth century onwards—and up to the present time—a great many different attempts made at the explanation of the word. The various explanations or derivations may be classified as follows:

- (1) Metatron derived from נטר (or מטרא).
- (2) Metatron derived from the Latin metator.
- (3) Metatron derived from Mipra.
- (4) Metatron derived from μεταρῦπαννος; metatorion; μέτρον; mediator; mater; מטרוניתא; שדי.
- (5) Metatron derived from μετά and θρόνος.

(1) Metatron derived from נטר.

Metatron already at an early time was explained from נטר in the sense of 'guard', 'protect', etc., either directly from this root or by the medium of מטרא, מטרת.

The earliest instance of this derivation is found in the so-called Šimmušā Rabbā. This instance seems never to have been pointed out before.

"In the sixth Hall is Enoch who was clothed with splendour of light... and made into Metatron who... represents the guardianship of all the souls that ascend from on earth: מטרת לכל נפשתא דסלקן. מארעא לרום רקיעא." The Šimmušā Rabbā thus uses the word מטרת to explain the form Metatron. (The Šimmušā Rabbā, in its present form, dates from about the middle of the ninth century.¹)

Baḥya, Commentary on the Pentateuch (Pesaro, 1507, fol. 98 b c), commenting on Ex. 33²⁰ also gives נטר as a possible derivation of Metatron. He explicitly connects Metatron, as derived from נטר, with the Targumic rendering מטרת for the Hebrew משמרת of Gen. 26⁵.

Isa. Horowitz, Šenē Luḥoḇ ha-bBeriḇ, Amsterdam, 1649, fol. 230 c: Metatron is the same as שומר (guardian), pointing to the Targumic rendering of משמרת by מטרתא.

Musaf hā-‘Āruk ('Āruk-edition, Amsterdam, 1655, fol. 102 d) gives the same explanation.

Similarly, in the Cracow edition of the Alphabet of R. ‘Aqiba (1579) in the Enoch-Metatron fragment inserted at the end of letter ‘ALÆF, there is an explanatory gloss (bracketed) after the word Metatron, which reads as follows: מטטרון [ר"ל שומר תרנום של משמרת מטרת ועל כן נקרא שמו מטטרון].

This gloss also translates Metatron by Šōmēr (guardian) with reference to the Targum rendering of mišmæraēḇ as maṭraḇ (from מטרתא, מטרא).

A. Jellinek, Beiträge zur Geschichte der Kabbala, ii (1852), pp. 4 seqq. considers the derivation from נטר as a possible etymology of Metatron.

The original feature in Jellinek's explanation is his linking up of Metatron as a nāṭēr (guardian) with the passage on the 'Angel' in Ex. 32²⁰⁻²² (לשמרך into למטרך), which already in TB. Sanh. 38 b is used with reference to Metatron. (Alternative explanation: μέτρον, see below.)

M. Jastrow, A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi, sub voce gives Metatron as מטטרון (מ'ט') from נטר.

'Maṭṭatron' (which would be related to maṭṭārā: service, post, watch, guard) means 'Chief of the Service' (chief of the angels who are called Servants). The etymological progenitor of מטטרון was, acc. to Jastrow, a form מטרטון.

(2) Metatron derived from or connected etymologically with the Latin metator.

In mediaeval cabbalistic writings the interpretation of Metatron from 'metator' is first met with. It should be noted, however, that in the writings in question this is never the exclusive interpretation of the name: it is put by the side of various other more or less abstruse 'etymologies'.

Eleazar of Worms (died 1237), Hilkop Miṭatron (in the British Museum MS. Add. 27199, fol. 114 a):

"Know that he is called Metatron because he is a מַטִּיטוֹר, which is interpreted 'leader', as it is said: The Holy One, blessed be He, was made a meṭator for the waters (Gen. R. v. 4),...for He is the Guide of the World (the Prince of the World). And he says רִוֵּן (i.e. 'utter praise' to the Holy One) every day."

Metatron thus is explained from מַטִּיטוֹר + רִוֵּן. This passage is important, since it shows the starting-point for the association of Metatron with meṭator: it was evidently the Midraš dictum of the Holy One as the 'metator' for the primaeval waters (of the Story of Creation). It also shows that this association was made on the basis of the conception of Metatron as the 'Prince of the World' who in this capacity was concerned with the works of Creation (cf. TB. Yeb. 16 b).

In the cabbalistic speculations the dictum "the Holy One was a meṭator" is changed into "the Holy One was Metatron", i.e. the Most High in his cosmical activity was represented by Metatron.

From these cabbalistic speculations the later reading Metatron for meṭator in Gen. R. v. 4 has, most probably, originated.

(In other contexts R. Eleazar of Worms connects Metatron with 'meter', 'metron', 'miṭra', etc. Bodl. MS. MICH. 175, foll. 20 b, 21 a.)

Yalqut Re'ubeni (ed. Warsaw, 1901, ii. fol. 56 b) quotes from Tiqqūnim: Metator is one of several names given to Metatron as indicative of his various functions. The meṭator is here connected with מַטְרָא ('rain', in the cabbalistic symbolical language = the bestowal of spiritual gifts, emanating from the celestial regions, upon the terrestrials) and made to signify: he who conveys spiritual parnāsā (maintenance).

Nachmanides, Commentary on the Torah, on Ex. 12¹², first quoted in Šiyyuni (ed. Cremona, 1560, fol. 39 a), says that Metatron =

'one who shows the way' and is equivalent to metator. He substitutes 'Metatron' for 'metator' in quoting Y^elamme^edēnū to Num. 22³⁶ and Deut. 2³¹.

Nachmanides shows dependence upon cabbalistic speculations in representing Metatron-metator as the שליח from the Holy One לְכָל הַמַּעֲשִׂים הַנַּעֲשִׂים בָּאָרֶץ. Metatron as metator hence means, to Nachmanides, the representative of the Most High in his works on earth.

Substituting 'The Holy One' for 'Metatron' and using 'Metatron' as a sort of appellative, Nachmanides evolves the strange reading of Sifre on Deut. 32⁴⁰, referred to above (p. 92, note 1).

Elias Levita, Tišbi, connects Metatron (sub voce) with Metator, the meaning of which he had "learnt from his pupil (Cardinal Egidius de Viterbo) to be 'messenger'".

David de Pomis (fl. ab. 1550), Šæmah Dāyid (ed. Venice, 1587, fol. 116 b), derives Metatron from metator, "a Greek (Latin) word signifying custos".

Buxtorf in his Dictionary places Metatron and Metator sub eadem voce. The same does Dalman in his *Handwörterbuch*² p. 232.

Danz, Shechina cum piis cohabitans (1723), after giving a comprehensive summary of the different derivations of the word Metatron, decides in favour of the etymology from metator, in Greek μετατωρ.¹

Danz, from quotations of numerous sources, proves conclusively that the Hebrew מִיטְטוֹר is identical with the Latin metator in the sense of 'praecursor, praeparator, antegestor'. The Greek Μετάτωρ is found in the Gloss. Basilic. lvii. 12 (Du Cange, Glossarium, s.v. p. 919: ὁ ἀποστελλόμενος ἄγγελος πρὸς τοὺς ἄρχοντας), and also in Suidas' dictionary, vol. ii, interpreted as ὁ προαποστελλόμενος ἄγγελος πρὸς(ς) τοῦ ἄρχοντος.

The main contention of Danz on the basis of his identification of the words metator and Metatron is that this celestial entity was by the name Metatron indicated as none other than the Šekinā. This accords with the cabbalistic basis for the association of Metatron and the Holy One as metator.

Danz also refers to the cabbalistic distinction between the two quasi manifestations of Metatron, one lesser, regarded as a created angel, the other, higher one, identical with the Šekinā or called the body of Šekinā, and maintains: "hic ipse Angelus Metator primus et supremus idem prorsus sit cum Shechina, ab officio quod sustinet, cognomen hoc accipiente".

1 In Meuschen, Novum Testamentum ex Talmude et Antiquitatibus Illustratum.

Whereas in the earlier instances of the association of Metatron with metator hitherto referred to, this association was made to convey the exclusive position of Metatron as the representative of the Most High or even as identical with the Šekinā, later followers of this interpretation seize upon it as a means of maintaining the comparative unimportance of Metatron, at least in the earlier phases of the conception. Hence we find that those who adhere to the 'metator-interpretation', in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, mostly do this for dogmatic reasons.

This new development sets in with Cassel.¹

Cassel contends that the form 'Metatron' was substituted for the original 'metator' simply to make up the numerical value 314 required to make the angelic name in question 'by gematria' equal to the Divine Name ŠADDAY (this rests on the late interpretation of the words "My Name is in him" with reference to Metatron. The sequence of ideas is exactly the reverse: the angelic figure Metatron was called YHWH or the Lesser YHWH, and the cited words were applied to him: 3 *En. 12*⁵, 48 *C*⁷, *D*¹ no. 102. Then later the accidental numerical quality of מַטְטְרוֹן and שְׂרִי was played upon. So by Raši and in cabbalistic writings; cf. above, pp. 116, 117, 119).

"Es soll", says Cassel, "durch seinen Inhalt allem selbstschöpferischen, selbständigen ausweichen, eben weil es (metatron-metator) Diener bedeutet der Gott nur vorangeht und dessen Befehle erfüllt".

The same derivation (in the same general sense) is maintained by M. Sachs in Beiträge zur Sprach- und Altertumsforschung, 1852, i. 108 n. and 194; Lewi Herzfeld, Geschichte des Volkes Israel, II. ii. 298, 345 (1847-57); Hamburger, Realencyclopädie des Judenthums, ii. 781; J. Fürst, Glossarium Græco-Hebræum, 1890, p. 138 a; and S. Krauss, Griechische und Lateinische Lehnwörter im Talmud, Midrasch und Targum, Berlin, 1898-9, ii, sub voce, also Bacher, Die Agada der Tannaiten, i. 154.

S. Krauss, op. cit. i. 92, derives Metatron from metatorium (μυητατώριον). In a note, pp. 250-252, he combines the two interpretations, regarding metatorium as a formation from metator: "Metatorium, der von Metatron abgesteckte Platz".

Friedländer, Der vorchristliche jüdische Gnosticismus, 1898, accepts the derivation from metator, but propounds an original theory as to the origin of the name and the angelic conception. Metator is also to Friedländer a 'Grenzabstecker'; the origin of the conception is to be found in Gnosticism from where it was brought into the circle of the Rabbinic scholars who occupied themselves with the study of the Mærkābā (pp. 102 seqq.).

The Talmudic teachers—under the mighty influence of the Gnosis—were forced into accepting a second, from the highest one distinguished Deity. Thus, says Friedländer, the Gnostic Metatron came into the Talmudic literature, and to him were assigned besides a world-creative function also the office of guiding the Israelitish people and mediating between them and God. (Cf. below, p. 144.)

The Gnostic figure which in Jewish circles emerged into Metatron was, acc. to Friedländer, the Divine Dynamis Horos, which again emanated from the λόγος of the Jewish Alexandrian School.

The parallels adduced by Friedländer to show Metatron's origin from Horos are, however, insufficient for the purpose.

J. D. Eisenstein (OM. ii. 285 a) also accepts the derivation from Metator: מטטרוֹן : מלאך ושר הפנים ברקיע הוא מלשון יונית Metator שחוראתו מורה דרך ומרומו בפסוק הנה אנכי שולח מלאך לפניך לשמרך בדרך (שמות כ"ג ב). והוא בדרך השאלה שנדמה הקב"ה למלך אשר ישמש אתו שליחו ובא כח (אמבאסאדאר).

L. Blau, article 'Metatron', in JE. viii. 519, says "the derivation from the Latin metator (= guide) is doubtless correct" and adduces as further evidence a passage from "the Hebrew Book of Enoch" which, however, will be seen to be a mistranslation of a misprint in the text of Alphabet of R. ⁴*qīḏā*, from which it is taken.

"The Hebrew Book of Enoch, in which, however, reference to Metatron is constantly implied, says: 'He is the most excellent of all the heavenly host and the guide (metatron) to all the treasures of my (God)'." Thus Blau.

The misprint (BH. ii. 117) originating in the Cracow printed edition of A. R. Aq. (1579), leaving out the words מוציא אותם after 'Metatron', is caused by the insertion in that edition of a bracketed gloss, explaining Metatron from נטר (vide above). But even in this corrupted state the text cannot be translated as Blau translates.

The passage is in reality vss. 9 and 10 of ch. 48 D of our book, which does not in any way use Metatron as an appellative, in the sense of 'guide'.

G. F. Moore, "Intermediaries in Jewish Theology," Harvard Theological Review, vol. xv, after examining the occurrences of Metatron in Rabbinic and giving a survey of different interpretations of the name Metatron (in which the writer acknowledges his indebtedness to Danz, op. cit.), decides with emphasis in favour of metator.

The sense in which the author takes Metatron to be identical with or originating from metator will be best seen from a quotation of summarizing points in the article:

“(1) Metator (Metatron) is originally an appellative borrowed and first used in its proper, almost technical sense, an officer who goes in advance of an army, etc.... Israel’s metator in the desert was God himself or an angel assigned... by him to this task. This office was most naturally filled by Michael, the champion of the Jews.

“(2) In two passages in the Babylonian Talmud Metatron is the proper name of an angel whose office in heaven indicates a peculiar relation to Israel; the same office... (is) assigned in different sources, now to Michael, now to Metatron.

“(3) In the revived apocalyptic and cabbalistic literature of the Gaonic period and after, the translated Enoch becomes Metatron.... Theosophic speculation seizes upon this angelic mythology, and elevates Metatron to a still higher eminence....”

The author is especially opposed to Metatron being held as an Intermediary or Mediator. The derivation from metator to him indicates the extremely modest beginnings of Metatron (or of the ‘Metatron mythology’). In this he is in line with Cassel and Hamburger. The author does not adduce any further evidence beside that of earlier vindicators of this derivation.

Eduard Meyer, Ursprung und Anfänge des Christentums, ³1923, iii. 649, follows Moore in identifying Metatron with Metator against his own earlier acceptance of the probability of derivation from μετάθροπος.

(3) Metatron derived from or connected with Mipra.

The earliest writer known to have attempted identifying Metatron with Mipra is H. E. Schmieder in his Programma, Nova Interpretatio... Gal. 3^{19, 20}, pp. 41–8, Excursus de Mitatrone (1826).¹

Pointing out parallel features in the conceptions of Metatron and Mipra Schmieder puts forward the hypothesis that the Persian ideas, esp. with regard to Mipra, were first introduced into Jewish circles among the Essenes who then cultivated and developed them further. The central function in which Schmieder holds Mipra and Metatron to be congruent is that of mediator.

¹ Pointed out by Hengstenberg, in Christologie, iii, and Max Grünbaum, Gesammelte Aufsätze, etc. pp. 74, 124, 194. See also Mövers, Phön. i. 390.

Nork (Felix Adolph Korn), Brahminen und Rabbinen, 1836, pp. 99, 100, trying to connect the Jewish archangels and angels over elemental forces with the Persian 'Amshaspands' (i.e. Ameša Spentas) and 'Izeds' (i.e. Yazatas), also identifies Metatron with Miṣra.

The total picture that Nork evolves of Metatron corresponds to the representation of this angelic or celestial figure as given by the Yalqut Re'ubeni, or, generally speaking, to the conceptions prevalent in cabbalistic works from the fourteenth century onwards. Nork-Korn does not really attempt to account for the origin of Metatron from the Persian Miṣra. His knowledge of Metatron seems to have been based on Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum.

Wiesner, in Ben Chananja, 1862, p. 384; 1866, pp. 600-625. This is the most important and most elaborate among the endeavours to derive Metatron from Miṣra. Wiesner, not—as is usual—Kohut, should indeed be mentioned as the pioneer champion of the Metatron-Miṣra theory.

For the conceptions of Miṣra Wiesner bases upon Rhode, Sage der Perser, Spiegel, Avesta, Windischmann, Mithra and on the Zend Avesta, in particular Mihir Yašt. For the conceptions of Metatron he goes back to the earliest references known at that time, viz. those contained in the Babylonian Talmud. These references he considers critically. Wiesner lays stress on the following parallels:

(1) Miṣra: Guardian of the World, the Mediator for the earth (Mittler der Erde), the Prince of the World (Mihir Yašt, 103).

Metatron: Prince of the World, Mediator. Wiesner here rightly points out that TB. Sanh. 38 b, clearly involves the existence at that time of a view maintaining Metatron's mediatorship.

(2) Miṣra: Miṣra's glory is compared with that of Ahura Mazda, e.g. in Mihir Yašt, 1: "Ahura Mazda spake... 'Verily, when I created Miṣra,... I created him as worthy of sacrifice, as worthy of prayer as myself, Ahura Mazda'" (Darmesteter's translation in Sacred Books of the East).

Metatron: bearer of the Divine Name (TB. Sanh. 38 b).

(3) Miṣra: Miṣra is the careful witness of all thoughts, words and deeds and hence representative of Truth, Justice and Faith, "der Hort des Gesetzes und sein Rächer" (Windischmann, Mithra, p. 53).

Metatron: Scribe-Witness and representative of the Godhead towards the world, implied by TB. Hag. 15 a.

(4) and (5) Miṣra connected with death and immortality; increases the water and is the instigator of the dry land.

Metatron has to do with the fate of men in and after death; is connected with the primaeval waters acc. to the variant reading of Gen. R. 5.

(6) and (7) Mipra was identified with the Demiurg which latter is represented as a 'Youth'; Metatron also called the 'Youth' (Na'ar).

Mipra is, according to some sources, "born of woman", and "ein König göttlichen Geschlechtes". Metatron, being Enoch, is also "born of woman".

(8) Mipra a celestial priest (Mihir Yašt, 89). Wiesner remarks upon the curious fact that—acc. to him—the Talmudists ascribed this office not to Metatron, but to Mikael. We now know that Metatron in mystical sources was represented as having a Tabernacle of his own (2 Leg. Martyrs; 3 En. 15 B).

The parallels adduced by Wiesner are striking. They are, of course, not sufficient to show that the conceptions of Metatron have actually evolved or developed out of those of Mipra. Wiesner's theories were supported by Zipser in several articles in the contemporary periodical.

M. Joel, Blicke in die Religionsgeschichte zu Anfang des zweiten christlichen Jahrhunderts, 1880, i. 127, regards Metatron as identical with the Mipra of Mipraism, the ideas of which may have influenced the Rabbinic teachers of the time of 'Ælisa' bæn 'Abuyā (TB. Hag. 15 a; cf. 3 En. 16).

A. Kohut, Ueber die jüdische Angelologie und Dämonologie in ihrer Anhängigkeit vom Parsismus.¹ All the features in the Mipra and Metatron conceptions, which are of real import for the study of a possible Mipraic origin of the mysticism which finds its centre in the figure of Metatron, and which are found in the article by Kohut, are already pointed out by Wiesner. The points on which Kohut goes beyond Wiesner are, on the other hand, rather uncertain and vague as well as insufficiently founded.

A refutation of the article of Kohut, hence, is by no means eo ipso a refutation of the hypothesis of Metatron as being derived from Mipra or influenced by the conceptions of the latter. A further investigation of the possible connections between Mipra and Metatron might with more reason be connected with the name of Wiesner (and his contemporary Zipser) than with that of Kohut.

K. Kohler, JE. viii. 500, and Jewish Theology, ed. New York, 1918, p. 185. K. Kohler is also an adherent of the Metatron-Mipra theory especially from the point of view of Metatron's connection with the Mærkābā-speculations.

"There can scarcely be any doubt as to the Mīpraic origin" of the Mærkābā-rites in general. Metatron, like Mīpra, acc. to Kohler, is the Divine charioteer. The Mīpra speculations entered Jewish circles through Mīpraism.

It must be remarked here that Metatron does not figure as the charioteer of the Mærkābā. The only trait pointing in this direction would be Metatron's function of guide of the Mærkābā-seer. But this is not constitutive for Metatron. Other high angels have the same function (MIKĀEL, GABRIEL, 'URIEL, etc.).

(4) Metatron derived from μετατύραννος, μέτρον, μήτηρ, etc.

1. The derivation from the Greek μετατύραννος, in the sense of "next to the ruler, i.e. God", is advocated by Frankel, Levy and Weber.¹ It is held probable also by Max Grünbaum.²

2. S. Krauss, Griechische und Lateinische Lehnwörter, etc. i. 92, identifies Metatron, without any qualifications, with μητατώριον = metatorium, i.e. palace.

In vol. ii Krauss interprets Metatron as metator. In the appendix of notes in vol. i. pp. 250-252, he represents Metatron as metator, but metatorium as developed from metator and meaning, in the first instance, "der von Metatron abgesteckte Platz", but then used as a name for this angel analogously with the use of מקום (Place) as a metaphor for the Godhead.

Grünwald says, in Jahrbuch für Jüdische Geschichte und Literatur, iv. 127-8, that Metatron signifies 'palace, place, abode' and is parallel with the Divine Name מקום. It is an intended symbol of the relation between Makrokosmos and Mikrokosmos.

3. Jellinek, Beiträge zur Geschichte der Kabbala, ii (1852), 4 seqq. gives μέτρον (measure, rule) as an alternative explanation of Metatron, on the assumption that Metatron was identical with Horos.

One of the secondary names given to Metatron, viz. the מִטְרֹן, might perhaps be regarded as supporting this derivation. But that this 'name' is merely a formation on the basis of מטטרון is more probable: the מִטְרֹן is in the enumerations of the names of Metatron accompanied by other variants of a similar appearance, such as מוטרון, מיקון, מיגון, etc.

4. The connection of the word Metatron with מטרא (rain) is a comparatively late cabbalistic device and was perhaps never intended as an actual derivation: YR. i. 56 b, Bodl. MS. MICH. 175, foll. 20 b, 21 a. (Cf. above, p. 127.)

Possibly the above-mentioned passage in YR. was known to Danz, since he declares (op. cit.) that Ruben Hoschke contended that Metatron is called metator because he is appointed over the rain. Danz comments upon this interpretation: on this assumption Metatron would equal Imbrifer, Imbricator, ὀμβροφόρος.

5. Metatron was explained as derived from 'mediator' by Heinrich Gebhard, in Programma.¹

Hengstenberg, in Christologie, iv. 324, regards this derivation as the most probable next to that from metator. Against it speaks, in Hengstenberg's view, only the fact that the word mediator does not occur in Jewish literature.

6. The derivation from mater—μητήρ—matrona—מטרוניתא is of late origin and dependent upon the cabbalistic speculations on Metatron's connection with or identity with the Šekinā as matroniṣa. It is given by Baḥya (as applying to Metatron in his higher aspect, i.e. as the counterpart of Šekinā).²

Levi ben Gešon, on Prov. 1⁸, defining Metatron as 'active intelligence' שכל פועל, states that the word Metatron is derived from the Latin word for 'mother' (i.e. mater). This passage was pointed out already in Pugeo Fidei, 1651, p. 392 b.

7. Max Grünbaum, op. cit. pp. 74 and 124, points out the Arabic equivalents of 'Metatron': مططرون (as the name of an angel in the theology of the Druses) and ميظطرون (from Mas'udi, ii. 391). He cites Eichhorn, Repertorium, xii. 100, 128, 189.

It is a strange coincidence, that the two Arabic forms evidently correspond to the two variants of Metatron, viz. מטטרון and מיטטרון. The dependence on these is obvious.

8. Metatron > שרי. (Cf. Raši on Exod. 23²¹, note on ch. 12⁵ and 48 D¹, p. 174 bottom.) On the basis of the equal numerical value (314) of מטטרון and שרי Bartolocci³ explains the origin of the word Metatron as follows: the angel mentioned in Ex. 23²⁰ is Mikāel, the custodian of Israel (cf. George Foot Moore above, p. 131); the Divine Name inherent in Mikāel is שְׂרִי (God Almighty), since God, operating all the miracles of the guidance of Israel through the desert “per ministrum suum principem Michaellem”, must needs communicate His omnipotence to Mikāel “quantum necesse fuerat ad populi Israelitici commodum”. “Unde Michael quasi שְׂרִי hoc est Omnipotens, erat dicendus. Sed Cabalistae ne Dei nomina Angelis proprie attribuere viderentur, pro שְׂרִי substituerunt מטטרון Mattatron quod per גמטריא numerum conficit 314 ac שְׂרִי. Mattatron igitur volunt esse Angelum ductorem populi, et directorem Mosis... Ex his igitur patet quod Mattatron est nomen fictitium Cabalisticum ad hoc tantum excogitatum, ut ex eo numerus 314 elici possit.” Metatron is thus, acc. to Bartoloccius, simply a cabbalistic gematrical device, having no lexicographic derivation. No wonder that he exclaims: “In hoc apparet, quam sublimis sit ista Cabalistica scientia... ex qua quidlibet ex quolibet fieri potest”.

(5) Metatron derived from μετά and θρόνος.

J. H. Maius, in Synopsis Theologiae Judaicae (1698), p. 72, is the first writer known to have suggested the two Greek words μετά and θρόνος as conjointly furnishing a possible derivation of Metatron.

Maius suggests that Metatron indicates the σύνθρονος of the Most High, the co-occupant of God's throne.

J. Fr. von Meyer, Blätter für höhere Wahrheit, vol. iv (1823), also interprets Metatron as “der Mithroner Gottes” (ὁ μέτοχος τοῦ θρόνου) who is seated at the right hand of God.

Meyer thinks that the Jewish conception of Metatron forms an exact counterpart of the Christian conception of the Son of God, hence points to Rev. 3²¹ as a parallel.

Ad. Franck, La Kabbale, supports the same derivation. He points to the cabbalistic representation of Metatron as the president in the world of Yṣirā (Franck is probably thinking of the passage in the Massēkēp 'Ašiluṣ containing this representation), and next under the world Bṣri'ā with the Throne (Metatron = next to the Throne?) (ed. Jellinek, p. 43, n. 2).

² Kerem Chemed, iv. p. 179.

³ Die fremdsprachlichen Elemente im Neuhebräischen, Prague, 1845.

⁴ *Die Kabbalah*², Leipzig, 1917, p. 37 (“Nach-Throner, Gottes Stellvertreter”).

Salomon Munk¹ and Moise Schwab² interpret Metatron as μετὰ θρόνου, "placed at the side of the Throne".

F. Weber, Jüdische Theologie,³ considers the derivations μετά-θρονος and μετατύραννος equally admissible. The sense would, acc. to him, in both cases be "der nächste nach dem Herrscher".

Cf. also Eduard Meyer, Ursprung u. Anf. d. Christentums, vol. ii. p. 341 and vol. iii. p. 649. (Vide above, p. 131.)

W. O. E. Oesterley and G. H. Box, The Religion and Worship of the Synagogue (2nd ed. 1911), pp. 196-204, on the irrefutable claim that "the name (Metatron) must originally have given some indication regarding the functions of this personality" maintain that the derivation from Metathronos, or perhaps Metatyrannos, is the correct one, a derivation which accords with the functions of Metatron. (These are set forth at length.)

It is to be noticed, that the derivations from the Greek words under consideration are represented somewhat differently by the different vindicators of the etymology, viz.

as μετὰ θρόνου: J. H. Maius, S. Munk, M. Schwab; as μετὰ θρόνον or μεταθρόνιος: Luzzatto;

as μετάθρονος: J. F. von Meyer, Franck, Weber, Bischoff, Box and Oesterley.

The derivation is applied in two different senses, viz.

(1) as equivalent to σύνθρονος, co-occupant of the Divine Throne: J. H. Maius, J. F. v. Meyer, Ed. Meyer.

(2) as signifying the celestial being next to the Divine Throne, occupying the next rank to the Divine Ruler, the representative of the Most High: Franck (?), Schwab, Weber, Bischoff, Box and Oesterley.

Of these different modes of interpretation that regarding Metatron as equivalent to σύνθρονος can be easily dismissed. There is not a single instance in any known Jewish source of Metatron being represented as the co-occupant of the Divine Throne.

On the other hand, the interpretation of Metatron as denoting a celestial being who was next after the King of the World, the representative of the Most High, is that which of all interpretations proffered best accords with the essential character assigned to Metatron in the earliest representations of him, above all in our book.

³ Ed. by Delitzsch and Schnedermann under this title, Leipsic, 1897 (as the 2nd ed. of Weber's work previously edited with a different title).

Of the two derivations conveying the sense "next in rank to the Divine Ruler" (Box-Oesterley), viz. μετατύραννος and μετά+θρόνος, the present writer gives preference to the latter, on the ground that the idea of the 'throne' plays a central part in the conception of Metatron.

Hence it may be suggested that the exact interpretation of the word Metatron is:

The celestial being who occupies the throne next to the Throne of Glory (the Divine Throne), or the Throne next to the Throne of Glory (using the early terminology acc. to which 'throne' = 'occupant of a throne'; see below, p. 142), or lesser Throne (= lesser ΥΗΥΗ; cf. ch. 12).

As regards the derivation of 'Metatron' from μετά+θρόνος this need not be contemplated as a new formation in the strict sense of the word. It would simply, from the beginning, have been a shortened form of an expression defining the character or position of the celestial being in question. This expression might have been: "he whose throne is (the most glorious) next to the Throne (i.e. the Throne of Glory)" or "the throne greatest next to the Throne", in Greek: οὗ (ὁ) θρόνος μέγιστος μετὰ [τὸν] θρόνον, ὁ θρόνος ὁ μέγιστος μετὰ [τὸν] θρόνον, or similarly. In all such expressions the words μετὰ θρόνον would form the last and essential part of the definition, and might, when the conception had become established in this form, be shortened into (ὁ) μετὰ θρόνον. The last would, in a hebraized form, most naturally be מטטרון.

This explanation of the name accords perfectly with the character that seems to be essential and original in the earliest representations of Metatron, as far as they can be traced:

(1) The representations of Metatron in 3 Enoch decidedly picture Metatron as the angel who, as God's representative, is seated upon a throne of his own. This throne is, moreover, explicitly stated to be "a reflection of the Throne of Glory", a lesser copy of the Throne of Glory (ch. 10¹).

On this throne Metatron is seated as the Holy One is seated on His Throne, only that Metatron's throne is placed, to denote its secondary rank, "at the door of the seventh Hall" (chh. 10², 48 c⁵, 8). Metatron's enthronement and his investment with all the splendours forming part of the enthronement, or being corollaries to it, constitute the central picture in the Enoch-Metatron fragments (chh. 10-15, 48 c⁵⁻⁹).

(2) 3 Enoch further actually associates the name Metatron with the enthronement of this celestial being, hence implicitly connects the word Metatron with the word 'throne'.

It is highly significant that, acc. to the large Enoch-Metatron piece (chh. 3-15), Enoch, in the course of his elevation and transformation into a high angel-prince, is not officially pronounced in the heavens as Metatron until immediately on his having been enthroned by the Most High: ch. 10³.

The expressions in the smaller Enoch-Metatron piece, ch. 48 c⁵, are, in fact, more or less equivalents of the Greek expressions suggested above.

(3) Also in the Talmud the significance of 'Metatron' as the angel seated on a throne as his Master is easily attested.

It is evident that in the passage in TB. Hag. 15 a the essential distinction of Metatron, which caused such a disturbance to 'Aḥer' and which the Talmudists are anxious to explain in a 'rational' manner, is his being 'seated' (= as the Holy One himself), whereas the other angelic beings are standing. This distinction is, moreover, such a well-established feature in the Metatron-conception that the Talmudists are unable flatly to deny it. Metatron, they say, was seated (one might add: as his name suggests) by permission from the Holy One, but the reason why he was allowed to be seated was simply his function of 'scribe of righteousness' (cf. above, on 'the conceptions of Metatron in Talmud, Miḡraś and Targum', pp. 90 seq.).

(4) This interpretation of the name of Metatron gives the key to an understanding of the other features of the Metatron-conception. Thus, as the angel enthroned on a throne next to that of His Master, Metatron will naturally be identified with any angel-prince that before had been regarded as the angel nearest to the Godhead or as the representative of the Most High—or will take over the functions assigned to that angel. On this basis the following functions or identifications of Metatron are easily explained, viz.:

(a) the identifications with the Angel of YHWH, who bears the Ineffable Name (after Ex. 23²⁰⁻²²), with YAOEL or YEHOEL (Apocalypse of Abraham, chh. 10, 12, etc.; cf. Jael (name of God) and Joel (archangel) in Vita Ad. & Ev. 29⁴, 33², Ap. Moses, 43⁵, and "the Lesser YHWH").

(b) with the angel of the Presence (Book of Jubilees, 1^{27, 29}, אַלְהֵי הַפָּנִים, the Angel of the Face, cf. 2^{2, 18}, 15²⁷, 31¹⁴; 1 En. 40), in fact only another designation of the bearer of the Ineffable Name.

(c) many functions of MIKĀEL, the highest of the angels in the earlier angelology, are transferred to Metatron (cf. above).

(d) Metatron identified with the Prince of the World, God's vice-regent over the world, etc.

(e) with the Na'ar, the 'Æbæd, the Principal Servant of the Most High, the Chief of the Service, etc.

(f) with Enoch who in the "Enoch Literature" tended to occupy the most exalted position in the Presence of the Godhead. (In fact, this derivation seems to give the only reasonable explanation why the figure of Metatron was at all introduced into the Enoch Literature.) See 2 En. 21³, 22^{4, 6, 10}, cf. 1 En. 70.

(5) The objections raised against the derivation from μετά and θρόνος will be seen to be invalid as applied to the derivation suggested here.

The two foremost objections: (a) that the Rabbis or mystics who introduced the celestial figure in question would not have invented a new word, 'μετάθρονος', but would, if the word was at all of Greek origin, have chosen the σύνθρονος, and (b) the impossibility of conceiving the formation of a new Greek word by the 'Rabbis', do not apply here: (a) Metatron is not = σύνθρονος, and (b) Metatron is acc. to the present assumption not derived from a new formation of the type of μετάθρονος.

The only objection applying here is this: the Greek θ of θρόνον would not have been transcribed ט, but ת (the word would have been מַטְטְרוֹן not מַטְתְּרוֹן).

The answer to this objection is:

(a) since μετά must be transcribed מט with ט the law of assimilation would naturally tend to transform a ת immediately following into a ט.

(b) it is a false supposition that the Greek θ is always transcribed, in Hebrew and Aramaic, ת. On the contrary there are numerous instances of Hebrew-Aramaic words borrowed from the Greek, in which θ has been transcribed ט. Krauss in Griechische und Lateinische Lehnwörter gives several such words. To the instances adduced by him the following may be added:

אטנום = θύνος (TB. Hull. 25 a, 66 b).

אנטינא = ἀντινά (Tj. Kil. ix. 32 a; Tj. Mo'ed Qaṭ. iii. 82 a).

אנטיפאס = ἀντίπατος (Tj. Meḡ. iii. 74 a; Ber. v. 9 a; Eccl. R. to Eccl. 3⁶ Lev. R. 12).

אסטניס = ἀσθενής (M. Yomā iii. 5).

סונטמא = σύνθημα (Lev. R. 12).

ספטין = σπαθίον (Tos. Kelim B. Meḡ. v. 6).

קנטרופוס = κυνάνθρωπος (Tj. Giŧt. vii. 48 c).

מיסברא = θησαυρός (Targ. Qoh. 2⁸).

מליקא = θύλακος (TB. Giŧt. 28 a; TB. B. Meš. 20 b).

מיאטרון = θέατρον (Cant. R. beg.).

מברייט = θεωρητής (Pes. R. Friedm., 201).

מריית = θρίσσα (TB. Meš. 6 a; Sifre Deut. 354; Num. R. 13; M. 'Ab. Zār. ii. 6).

פיטם = πίθος (M. Roš ha šŠānā, iii. 7).

טריים = θυρεός (Tos. 'Erub. viii).

אמימום = ἄθμος (Gen. R. 48).

אבטינס = Εὐθύνοος (M. Yomā, iii. 11; Midd. i. 5).

טז = ζῆτι (Tj. Ber. vi. 10 d).

נפט = νάφθα (M. Šab. ii. 2). (Cf. K. Albrecht, Neuhebr. Gramm. pp. 10, 81-83.)

Several others could be given. If in one case or other the derivation from a Greek word may seem uncertain, the cumulative effect of the instances is quite sufficient to prove beyond doubt that the Greek θ was easily transcribed ט especially in words containing ט, ק, פ, ר etc.

(6) Lastly the theory must be refuted that the formation 'Metatron' has in any way been due to a design to make its gematrical value equal to the Divine Name Šaddai (Rashi and others), and—as would be the consequence of this theory—that Metatron as 'bearing the Divine Name' was called the little YHÜH. It is quite the reverse. The speculations on the angel bearing the Divine Name are quite early (Ja'el etc., vide note on 12⁵). The expression 'the little Iao' occurs in Pistis Sophia (ed. Horner, p. 6, cf. below, pp. 188 seq.). Metatron, 'the little Throne', was from the beginning evidently called 'the little YHÜH (Yāhō)', or, perhaps better, the little YHÜH was called Metatron. To a Jewish ear 'the little Throne' sounded better than 'the little YHÜH'. (Cf. below, p. 145.) Later it was discovered that the numerical value of Metatron was equal with that of the Divine Name Šaddai.

Next to that from μετά + θρόνον the derivation from Mipra would seem to be the most plausible. The derivation from metator, on the other hand, is probably caused merely by a confusion at later times between 'Metatron' and the word 'metator', the exact meaning of which might easily have been forgotten. Thus 'metator' was no doubt the original reading in Gen. R. 54. Perhaps first in cabbalistic circles (cf. above on the derivation from metator)—speculating upon Metatron's function at the Creation—the 'metator' was interpreted to mean Metatron (as the representative of the Holy One) and on the basis of this interpretation of the passage the variant reading of the Sifre passage (and the Y'ammē dēnū readings adduced by Nachmanides) was evolved. Subsequently, when the meaning of 'metator' was again known (cf. Elias Levita, Tišbi), this was also used to interpret the supposed equivalent 'Metatron'. It will be unnecessary to state that the other derivations, i.e. from mater, μέτρον, etc., need not be considered.

§ 13. ORIGIN OF THE CONCEPTION 'METATRON'

IN the preceding we have been mainly concerned with the origin of the word Metatron, and have come to the conclusion that it signifies 'the Throne next to the (Divine) Throne' or, which would be the same, 'the second Throne'. In dealing with this we have only in passing touched upon the origin of the conception underlying that word.

The rise of the conception of Metatron cannot be explained from any single idea, but must be considered as a resultant phenomenon of the meeting and coalescence of different ideas. The various elements co-operating towards the formation of the conception are the following:

(1) The conception of angelic beings called θρόνοι, evidenced especially (a) in Test. Levi 3⁸: ἐν δὲ τῷ (οὐρανῷ τῷ) μετ' αὐτόν εἰσι θρόνοι, ἐξουσίαι, (b) in NT. Col. 1¹⁶:...εἴτε θρόνοι, εἴτε κυριότητες, εἴτε ἀρχαί, εἴτε ἐξουσίαι, (c) in 2 En. 20¹:...theseventh Heaven, and I saw there a very great light, and fiery troops of great archangels, incorporeal forces, and dominions, orders and governments, cherubim and seraphim, thrones and many one-eyed ones.... The θρόνοι are, no doubt, angels possessing thrones, whence metonymically called 'thrones'.¹

(2) The idea of 70 (or 72) celestial rulers, representing the 70 (or 72) earthly dominions, kingdoms, or nations; these were naturally also considered as enthroned. Acc. to one (the earlier?) view these, as representing Gentile Kingdoms, were evil agencies (trace of this even in 3 En. 1⁴).² Under the influence of the Jewish fundamental doctrine

¹ In the sense of celestial beings 'possessing thrones' the θρόνοι of Col. 1¹⁶ are interpreted by E. Haupt, in A. W. Meyer's Kr.-Ex. Komm. ib. d. N.T., ad locum, and by M. Dibelius, in H. Lietzmann's Handb. z. N.T. 3, 2, ad loc. a.o.

It may not be out of the way to point to the representations of Rev. 4^{2,4} "ἰδοὺ, θρόνος ἔκειτο ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ... καὶ κυκλόθεν τοῦ θρόνου θρόνοι εἴκοσι καὶ τέσσαρες· καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς θρόνους εἶδον τοὺς εἴκοσι καὶ τέσσαρας πρεσβυτέρους καθήμενους, ib. 11¹⁶ καὶ οἱ εἴκοσι καὶ τέσσαρες πρεσβύτεροι, οἱ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καθήμενοι ἐπὶ τοὺς θρόνους αὐτῶν (cf. Mt. 19²⁸, Lk. 22³⁰).

The θρόνοι as a class of angels remain in Christian angelological systems: Origen, Opp. 1733, pp. 66, 70, Ephrem Syrus, Opp. Syr. i. p. 270, Pseudo-Dionysios, on the celestial Hierarchy, Thomas ab Aquino, Summa Theol. i. 108.

of God's Absolute Sovereignty over Heavens and Earth, the celestial rulers of necessity became the satraps, viceroys under 'the King of the Kings of Kings', appointed as rulers by Him; in this capacity they may fail, or be faithless (a remnant of their character of independent evil agencies) and subsequently be punished.¹ In connection with the early idea of the Divine Council they were as the representatives of the terrestrial kingdoms also thought of as forming the Divine Bēḥ Dīn. The ideas of θρόνοι, 'thrones', and of 70 enthroned vice-regents of the Most High must have been assimilated at quite an early time. They can be traced, even after the development referred to below (3) has taken place, in Mass. Hek. ii: שבעים כסאות של מלכות יש לו ... להקב"ה מעין כסאי מלכויות שבעולם כנגד שבעים אומות שבעולם ... וכלם אינו אלא משלו "the Holy One, blessed be He, has 70 thrones of kingship in analogy with the thrones of kingships in the world corresponding to the 70 nations in the world... and they are all derived from Him (lit. are all from that which is his)". The idea of 70 thrones here is evidently a remnant of the conception of 70 enthroned rulers, called 'thrones'.²

(3) Whatever may have been the first origin of the conception of 70 (72) angelic rulers of the nations and 70 (72) councillors of the Most High this conception was, in various modifications, widely spread in the different syncretistic systems and circles, as Bousset has pointed out.³ Hence the speculations on this theme were inspired not only by the ideas which had been introduced into Jewish religious thought several centuries before, but also by current syncretistic ideas. Probably under the weight of the Gnostic representations of world-creating and world-dominating ἄρχοντες, and in opposition to what was felt as dualistic notions, the 70 (72) enthroned vice-regents were still more emphatically put under the absolute rulership of the One God; in order to mark their complete subservience under the Most High, they were deprived of their 'thrones'. The underlying idea being: "there is only one real ruler in heaven", the consequence was: "there is only One Throne, or only One possessor of thrones in heaven, viz. the Throne of Glory and He who is seated on it". But at this point of development, the conception of a second throne was already so firmly established as not to be obliterated; this second throne was Metatron. To understand how Metatron could survive the extinction of the (other) θρόνοι, it is necessary to recall the existence of other deeply ingrained ideas, viz.

1 Cf. the 70 shepherds, 1 En. 89¹¹ seqq.

2 Zohar, i. 173 b, says: דהא שבעין הוו דאינון משתכחי תדיר בהרי שכינתא ושבעין קתוראי סחרניה דשכינתא In that late work there is, thus, also a remnant of the idea of 'thrones' as independent beings and of their identification with the 70 rulers forming the Council of the Holy One. The writer of Mass. Hek. ii, and probably also the writer of the Zohar passage referred to, did evidently not think of the 'thrones' or 'seats' as angelic beings, but took them literally.

3 Hauptprobleme der Gnosis, pp. 358-361.

(4) The one ἄρχων, the leader of the world-ruling ἄρχοντες, in relation to the Highest God viewed as the second or small ἄρχων; in general all those Gnostic representations picturing a second, lower, lesser Divinity, or Divine emanation differently expressed in different systems.¹ It should be understood that the idea in question is not to be derived from any particular system, nor figure in that particular system. Thus M. Friedländer,² who had a correct intuition in bringing the figure of Metatron under the light of Gnostic ideas, was wrong in deriving him from Horos. Metatron is by no means a Gnostic figure; the most that can be said is that Gnostic ideas have influenced the conception.

(5) The most important element or complex of elements which gave life and endurance to the conception in question was the notion of the 'angel of ΥΗΥΗ, who bears the Divine Name' and the 'angel of the Face, the Divine Presence', called Yael, Yehoel, Yoel, the highest of the angels, the Divine Name representing the Godhead. Extensive speculations must have centred round this possessor of the Divine Name. For this it may suffice to point to the Pseudepigrapha, to the Apocalypse of Abraham, etc. (cf. above, p. 139 and note on 12⁵) and also to Philo, who calls the angel bearing the Divine Name: 'ἀρχάγγελος καὶ πρεσβύτατος λόγος', 'λόγος θεῖος',³ also ἀρχή, ὄνομα θεοῦ (the 'Divine Name') κατ' εἰκόνα ἀνθρώπου, ὃ ὁρῶν, θεοῦ εἰκὼν,⁴ etc. From this conception of an angel, partaking of the Divine Glory (being the Angel of the Presence) and called by the Divine Name יהוה there arose the appellation "the Little ΥΗΥΗ". It is highly improbable that this appellation was at any time accepted by the Rabbis. To Rabbinism the whole idea must have presented itself as the worst of all possible heresies, that accepting "two powers". Even the combination itself: "Little + ΥΗΥΗ", whatever interpretations were applied to it, must have been an abomination to a Rabbinic mind. The origin of this appellation must be sought with some sect or mystic circle outside the Rabbinic fold, probably one open to and willing to assimilate current Gnostic-syncretistic ideas. Sects and circles of many different shades have certainly existed within Judaism,¹ and many of these have borrowed freely from each other and from every other source congenial to them; and have also been under the influence of current religious ideas. It is further to be supposed that some of the circles devoted to mystical subjects (and experiences) were not inimical to the Rabbinic teachings, just as it is impossible to deny that some of the recognized Tannaitic teachers found it worth their while to devote themselves to the mysteries of the Mærkābā and Creation. In the circles, where the conception of the High Celestial being, called "the Little יְהוּה" was at home, this name, or at least the frequent use of it, under the strong influence of the Rabbinic teachings, may have been felt as a profanation, and, instead, Metatron, as implying the same, was used. Just as the Throne of Glory referred to the Holy One, so the "Little Throne", "the Second Throne", "the reflex of the Throne of Glory", i.e. Metatron, referred to; became a metonym for the Little יְהוּה. Through this assimilation Metatron became the centre of powerful mystical speculations, perhaps even a popular figure, and was able to penetrate into the Rabbinic literature.

1 In Mandaitic the expressions and ideas connected with the relation between the [נוכרני] היי and the היי תניאני [Second Life], and also, by the way, between היי תניאני and היי תליתאני [Third Life] proffer many close similarities with the representations of Metatron (cf. above, pp. 64 seqq.).

2 Der vorchristliche jüdische Gnosticismus, pp. 102-105. (Cf. above, p. 130.)

3 Friedländer, op. cit. p. 107, notes 150, 151, quoting Philo's Quis rerum divin. haeres. i. 501, De Migrat. Abrah. i. 463.

(6) An element that must be taken into consideration is lastly the figure of the Elect One and the Son of man, of the 'Parables' of 1 Enoch, who at least to the circle behind 3 Enoch was, apparently, conceived of as one being. To understand the connection between that figure and Metatron two different facts must be kept in view: viz. (1) that Metatron is invested with most of the attributes that in 1 Enoch characterize the Elect One and the Son of man; to perceive this it is sufficient to read side by side 1 En. 46 and 3 En. 48 c⁹, 1 En. 61^{8, 9} (45⁸) and 3 En. 10^{4, 5}, 48 c⁸; (2) that Metatron, however, lacks all Messianic character; further, is never represented as seated on the Throne of Glory, God's Throne; lastly, although identified with a human being, Enoch is not connected with the "one that looked like a man" of Dan. 7¹³ (1 En. 46¹). In view of the close dependence of 3 En. upon 1 En., and, moreover, of the traits given to Metatron in 3 En. upon those given to the Elect One, Son of man, in 1 En., the avoidance of any reference to the features mentioned under (2) above must be considered intentional and interpreted as originating from a refutation of the views implied therein, and, more especially, of the similar views, beliefs and manners of expression current among contemporary religious sects or communities. (Christian: Messiah and his throneship, the use of the term 'Son of man'; Mandaean: the speculations on 'Enoš, the man and the Celestial Being, the 'Upra, et sim.) In contrast to such views the Metatron-conception emphasizes that the angel or celestial figure in question is seated on 'a second Throne', a throne of his own¹ which is a lower throne, a reflection of the Throne of Glory. At the same time the only counterpart to the designation 'Son of man' in 3 En. is the derogatory "Born of woman, a putrefying drop" laid in the mouth of the angels (ch. 6²). (Cf. the use of 'Enoš' as the "head of the idol-worshippers", ib. 5.) It is characteristic that Enoch-Metatron in the same context is called "an elect one among the (inhabitants of the) world", ch. 6³, and that he is implicitly, and in later sources explicitly, the 'Ādām Qadmon.

(7) The Wisdom naturally would be connected with the Metatron-figure; all that the Wisdom speculation implies is so well known as not to need any demonstration here. It will suffice to point out that in 3 Enoch Wisdom and Torā are identical. The personified Wisdom, the hypostasis, created in the beginning (Prov. 8²²) has been identified with Metatron; the Wisdom as the 'secrets of the Torā' (vide below, pp. 171, 172) possessed in the beginning (Prov. ib.) was then made a 'possession' of Metatron.

¹ A correction in the MS. T (Abbadianus 35) and in the so-called 'second group' of MSS. of 1 Enoch read 'his throne' instead of 'my throne' in 1 En. 51³. What deductions bearing on the present question may be rightly made from this is difficult to decide.

§ 14. THE ANGELOLOGY OF 3 ENOCH

THE various traditions concerning names, classes, order of ranks, number, functions and nature of the angels, that are embodied in 3 Enoch, may be arranged under the following divisions:

(1) Those contained in the part of the book, which is entirely devoted to the exposition of the hierarchy of angels and to the descriptions of the different angel-princes and classes of angels, i.e. the 'angelological section', chh. 17-22, 25-28⁶. Within this angelological section again are to be distinguished at least three independent systems of angelology:

(a) ch. 17, in the following referred to as A 2;

(b) ch. 18, in the following referred to as A 3;

(c) chh. 19-22, 25, 26, supplemented by chh. 27, 28¹⁻⁶, referred to as A I.

(2) Those contained in the remaining parts of the book:

(a) in the chapters dealing with the Judgement, the performance of the Qeḏuššā, the fate of souls and spirits, etc., chh. 28⁷⁻⁴⁷;

(b) in the Metatron-pieces, chh. 3-16, 48 B-D 1, 2; further in 23 and 24;

(c) in the fragments, chh. 15 B, 22 B and C.

A. The angelology of A I (chh. 17-22, 25-28⁶).

A I, the largest and most elaborate of the angelological systems of 3 Enoch, does not contain a systematic treatment of all the hosts of angels. It deals only with the highest classes and angel-princes, namely those functioning by the Divine Chariot (the Mærkābā) with the Throne of the Godhead. It is evident, however, that the said chapters are only the latter part of a more comprehensive angelological treatise (cf. beg. of ch. 19 and note). As to the contents of the former (lost) part of this treatise it is useless to proffer conjectures. Cf. notes on chh. 17⁸ and 19¹. That the section knew of other angelic orders besides the Mærkābā-angels and angels of the Throne is apparent from e.g. ch. 19⁶.

The order of classification is one proceeding from the lower to the higher classes, treating first of the five angel-princes appointed over the five angelic classes by the Mærkābā (i.e. the Divine Chariot, derived from Ezek. 1 and 10), and then of the five angels in the immediate proximity of and functioning by the Throne, the supreme part of the Mærkābā, being the seat of the manifested Godhead. Thus the order is the following:

(1) The Wheels (Hebrew: Galgallim) of the Mærkābā under the prince Rikbiel (from rāḳēb = chariots). The name Galgallim is derived from Ezek. 10^{2, 6, 13}. The Galgallim play the part of the 'Wheels' of Ezek. 1 and 10, i.e. they carry the Mærkābā. They are at the bottom of the Mærkābā-structure: "the feet of the Ḥayyōḥ are resting upon them" (19⁵). The word Galgallim is used instead of the originally equivalent 'Ofannim (in Ezek. 1 and 10 more commonly employed than Galgallim), apparently because the 'Ofannim are already definitely associated with another, higher order of Mærkābā-angels (the 'Ofannim of ch. 25). The Galgallim of ch. 19 are only just emerging as a specific class of angels; in vss. 2 and 3 they are depicted more in the form of 'wheels' in the strict sense of the word than as angels. See further note on ch. 19.

The Galgallim are eight in number, "two in each direction" (19³). The expression "two in each direction" is no doubt deduced from Ezek. 1¹⁶ ("as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel") and 10¹⁰, thus making one pair of 'wheels' for each of the four Ḥayyōḥ.

The function of the prince of the Galgallim, Rikbiel, is not defined—in contrast to the case of the princes of the four subsequent classes of Mærkābā-angels.

The Galgallim, besides carrying the Mærkābā, share with the higher Mærkābā-angels in the performance of the Celestial Song (vs. 7).

(2) The prince Ḥayyiel and the four Ḥayyōḥ, chh. 20, 21. The four Ḥayyōḥ (derived from Ezek. 1⁵ seqq.) are next above the Galgallim. They have four faces, four wings (cf. Ezek. 1^{6, 23}), and crowns on their heads. The only function of these angels mentioned in the chapters in question is the utterance of the responses of the Q'ēduššā, in the right and timely performance of which they are prompted by Ḥayyiel, the prince appointed over them.

(3) Above the Ḥayyōḥ are the K'erubim with their prince K'erubiel, ch. 22. The high position assigned to K'erubiel is marked by an extravagant description of his glorious and awe-inspiring appearance. The conception of the K'erubim, as it appears here, is mainly derived from Ezek. 10. They are four in number (vs. 15), in accordance with Ezek. 10^{15, 21, 22}. They utter song and praise (vss. 12, 13, 15). But they also appear as God's messengers ("do the will of their Creator", vs. 16). The description in ch. 22 preserves traces of the old idea of the K'erubim as the vehicles of the Šekinā: this is implied by the expression "the chariots of the K^eruḇim" (vs. 11). Similarly "the Š^ekinā is resting upon them", "the splendour of Š^ekinā is on their face" (vss. 7, 13). To them is applied the OT. expression "who dwelleth on the K^eruḇim", referring to the Most High (vss. 12, 16, cf. 1 Sam. 4⁴, 2 Sam. 6², 2 Kings 19¹⁵, Is. 37¹⁶, Ps. 80², 99¹, 1 Chron. 13⁶, Ezek. 9³); "above their lofty heads abides continually the glory of the high King" (vs. 12). Cf. Ezek. 11²², 10¹⁹.

The conception of the K^eruḇim drawing (or being) the chariots on which the Most High rides through the heavens—in accordance with 2 Sam. 22¹¹, Ps. 18¹⁰—viz. when leaving the Throne and the Mærkābā, is not attested in ch. 22, but it is perhaps to be discovered in ch. 23¹⁷.

The "K^eruḇim of the flaming sword" (Gen. 3²⁴) are perhaps remembered in the explicit reference to the sword of K^eruḇiel in vs. 6.

K^ERUBIEL, the prince of the K^eruḇim, acc. to vss. 11, 12 and 16, has charge of the chariots of the K^eruḇim and exercises the function of supervision and attendance on the K^eruḇim.

(4) The prince 'OFFANNIEL, appointed over the 'Ofannim, is next above the K^eruḇim and K^ERUBIEL, ch. 25. Of the 'Ofannim (derived from the theophany of Ezek. 1¹⁵, 16, 19–21, 3¹³, 10⁶ et passim) the details given are scanty (vss. 5–7). Not even the number of these angels is defined, although it is probably to be understood as four: the exposition of the section supports the picture of a Mærkābā m^erubba'āḇ—to use the technical term frequent in later cabbalistic works. The only function explicitly assigned to them is the "praising their Creator" (vs. 5).

To the chieftain of the 'Ofannim, 'OFFANNIEL, more space is given. Besides ascribing to him the inherent function of attending and supervising the 'Ofannim, the description shows traces of a conception of 'OFFANNIEL as especially connected with the course of or sphere of the moon (vs. 2, cf. note ad loc.). Elsewhere in the book (chh. 14¹⁰, 17⁵) 'OFFANNIEL is explicitly stated to be the prince set over "the globe (wheel, 'ofan) of the moon", and this might have been the earlier character in which this angel-prince was conceived.

(5) Above the 'Ofannim and 'OFFANNIEL are the S^erāfim under the prince S^erāfiel. They may here be called the highest class of Mærkābā-angels proper. They, in common with the four other classes, share in the performance of the Celestial Songs, especially the Q^eḏuššā. But they seem further to have had the special function of transmitting documents or petitions to the Most High. To them Satan—as chief of the Accusers—together with the two “princes of kingdoms” representing respectively the two chief Gentile Empires, Persia and Rome, hand over the documents of accusation against Israel, “that they may present them before the Holy One, blessed be He” (vs. 12, cf. note ad loc. on the quoted sentence). At the same time it is stated, that the Serāfim take sides with Israel, in so far as “they burn the writing tablets of Satan in the fiery river”—they are counted among the angels pleading the cause of Israel (cf. the “angels of Mercy”, ch. 33¹).

The number of the Serāfim is given as four (vs. 9) in correspondence with that of the Hayyōḥ, the Kerubim and the pairs of Galgallim. The description of the prince of the Serāfim, S^ERĀFIEL, is extravagant, but the details do not materially differ from those of most descriptions of high angel-princes: the radiance and splendour of his appearance—Kāboḏ—the innumerable eyes, etc. One statement, however, is somewhat surprising, in giving a ‘name’ to the “crown on his head”: it is called “the Prince of Peace” (vs. 8, Is. 9⁵). This is only paralleled by the passage in the R. Iṣma‘el version of the Ši‘ur Qomā, according to which the crown on the head of the manifested Godhead bears the name of ‘Israel’ (Bodl. OPP. 467, fol. 60 b). It is possible that the interceding or pleading function of the Serāfim at the Judgement may have been thought of in the application of this name which naturally is meant to refer to the character of S^ERĀFIEL as the prince of the Serāfim. The function assigned to S^ERĀFIEL is conform to that of the princes of the other classes of Mærkābā-angels; he has charge of the Serāfim and teaches them song, praise and the right performance of the Q^oḏuššā.

With the Serāfim-S^ERĀFIEL, as has been pointed out above, the highest order of the ‘Mærkābā-angels’ proper is reached, and the remaining part of the section turns to describing the angel-princes above them, who, by way of distinction, may be called the ‘Throne-angels’ or ‘Throne-princes’. Together with the transition from the Mærkābā-angels to the Throne-princes there occurs a change in the representation of the Throne itself, a change already marked in the closing verse of ch. 26: the Throne which in the foregoing part is always referred to as the ‘Throne of Glory’ is henceforth seen in the two aspects of ‘Throne of Glory’ and ‘Throne of Judgement’, the latter of these aspects being apparently represented as the higher. The expression ‘Throne of Glory’ probably refers to the presidency of the Most High over the angels and angel-princes, the ‘Throne of Judgement’ is associated with His rulership or government of the Universe and His judicature over the inhabitants of the world. Here, as elsewhere, the 'Judgement' (Dīn) is to be understood in a wide sense, including forensic and executive judgement as well as government in general.

Consequently, the angel-princes of the Throne are represented as functioning primarily at the Judgement, or in the 'Council of the Holy One'.

(6) RAḌŪERIEL, ch. 27. RAḌŪERIEL is above the Sērāfim and is appointed "over the treasuries of the books" and especially over the 'Case (d'husqōm)' containing the "Book of Records". The "Book of Records" is opened and read at the sitting of the Celestial Court (Bēḥ Dīn š'el-ma^alā), presided over by the Most High. The 'Book' is essentially a 'book of Judgement', and is supplemented by other 'books' of similar character (vs. 2), all conceived of as containing the 'records' of men's deeds.

(For the general ideas of "Books of Records," etc., vide Charles's exhaustive note on 1 En. 47³ and Box's note on 4 Ez. 620.¹)

The seals of the d'husqōm are broken by RAḌŪERIEL and the books taken out and delivered by him to the Most High.

In passing, reference is at this point of the description made to the angels called 'Scribes' (vs. 2) who read the books before the Celestial Bēḥ Dīn. It is noteworthy that the Scribes who elsewhere (chh. 18²³⁻²⁵, 33², T.B. Haḡ. 15 a—Metatron as scribe—et freq.) are assigned a very high position in the heavenly hierarchy, in the present angelological system play quite an unimportant part; they are not even given a definite place in the scheme. They are, in fact, represented less as Scribes proper than as Readers. The essential function of the Scribe(s), the recording merits, demerits and Divine decrees, is here in all probability understood as adhering to RAḌŪERIEL, as he, not the so-called Scribes, has control of the 'Books'.

RAḌŪERIEL, as is pointed out in the note on vs. 1, is probably identical with VRETEL of 2 En. 22^{11, 12}, "one of the archangels who was more wise than the other archangels and wrote down all the doings of the Lord", to whom the Lord said, "Bring forth the books from my store-places, etc."

VRETEL, besides being the keeper of the books, is explicitly stated to be the Scribe ("wrote down...").

Although primarily functioning at the Judgement, RAḌŪERIEL is also concerned with the Q'ḏuššā (vs. 3). But, in common with the 1 R. H. Charles, The Book of Enoch or 1 Enoch, 2nd ed. Oxford, 1912, pp. 91, 92 n. G. H. Box, The Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 74.

'Irin and Qaddišin of ch. 28, he does not himself take part in chanting the Qeḏuššā. In this connection a remarkable statement is made (vs. 3): "out of every word that goeth forth from his mouth an angel is created and he stands . . . and utters a song", at the time of the performance of the Qeḏuššā. (Cf. ch. 40⁴, TB. Ḥaḡ. 13 a, Gen. R. 78₁, Lam. R. 32₁.) Thus the essentially Divine power of creating song-uttering angels by a word of speech (a dibbur) is here transferred to RAḌŪRIEL. Vide further note on vs. 3.

If the representation is original, it shows that this angel was assigned an exceptionally high position in relation to on one side the Godhead, on the other side the other angels.

It is possible that the central feature of the conception of RAḌŪRIEL was that of Scribe and Recording Angel (cf. Ezek. 9²¹, Dan. 12¹, Pirqe 'Abot, iii. 16, Tanḥumā, ed. Buber, p. 17, Y. Targum on Ex. 24¹, Asc. Isaiae, ix. 21). The conception shows affinities with non-Israelitish conceptions, e.g. of *Nabu*¹ and Thot.

(7) Above RAḌŪRIEL are the highest princes mentioned in the present angelological section, the Watchers and Holy Ones, named with the Aramaic terms of Dan. 4^{10, 14} 'Irin and Qaddišin, in singular 'Ir and Qaddiš (ch. 28). They are four in number, two 'Irin and two Qaddišin (vs. 5), and each of them is equal to all the rest of the angels and princes together (vs. 1).

These angels form the Council of the Almighty. "He doeth nothing in His world without first taking counsel with the 'Irin and Qaddišin" (vs. 4).

Their activity is, however, not limited to that of giving counsel to the Most High, but they also exercise definite power over the inhabitants of the world and the empires and kingdoms on earth. It is they who give effect to the decrees of the Most High "over the kingdoms of men": "they abase to the ground those that are proud and they exalt to the height those that are humble" (vs. 6), an evident allusion to Dan. 4^{14 (17)}. Note that the same power is ascribed to the 70 princes under Metatron in ch. 48 c⁹.

According to vs. 8 the 'Irin and Qaddišin are the 'court-officers' who "raise, argue and close every case that comes before the Holy One. . . when He is seated on the Throne of Judgement". This verse, however, is not to be included in A 1 (see note on vss. 7-10). It forms part of a representation of the 'Irin and Qaddišin as a larger number of high angel-princes (vs. 9), identifying them in chh. 29 and 30 with the 72 princes of kingdoms. A 1 is probably to be regarded as ending with vs. 6.

The conception of the four 'Irin and Qaddišin no doubt belongs to the same range of ideas as that of the "Four Presences" of 1 En. 40-41², although the four Presences are, ib. ch. 40², said to be "different from those that sleep not" (i.e. the Watchers, 'Irin).¹ The Four Presences are, like the 'Irin and Qaddišin, set over the activities and affairs of the terrestrials (1 En. 40⁶, 7) and they are connected with the Judgement (1 En. 40⁹, 41¹, 2).²

It is noteworthy that the 'Irin and Qaddišin are the only angel-princes of the present section who are explicitly stated to wield executive power over men, and only the three highest grades of angels, the Serāfim (ch. 26¹²), RAḌŪRIEL (as Keeper of the Book of Records) and the 'Irin and Qaddišin are stated to be in any way connected with the affairs of men. That is to say, that the highest aspect of the angelic (and Divine) activities is that of the rulership and judgement of man. The same idea is revealed in the tendency to represent the Throne in its highest aspect as the Throne of Judgement (vide above).

B. The angelology of A 2 (ch. 17).

Note. The systems of angelic hierarchy of A 2 and A 3 are altogether different from that of A 1. Not one single specified angel, order of angels nor angel-prince is, as regards function and name, common to A 2 and A 3 on one side and A 1 on the other.

One angelic name, 'OFFANNIEL, occurs both in A 3 and A 1, but the very fact that this name in the two systems is used to denote two different angelic figures is conclusive proof of the disparity between these systems. To A 2 and A 3 are common the conception of angel-princes set over the different heavens (17¹⁻³, 18¹, 2).

That A 1 is not a sequel to A 3 is evident from a comparison of the end of ch. 18 with the opening sentence of ch. 19 (cf. note on ch. 19¹). But stronger evidence is to be seen in the fact that ch. 18 (A 3) represents a complete system in relation to A 1: the highest angel-princes, those of the Throne, the Judgement, and further the Recording Angels, are all contained in the final part of the exposition of ch. 18, just as they are the subject of the last chapters of A 1 (chh. 27, 28) though in a different form and with different names.

1 No doubt the 'Watchers' of the Pseudepigrapha were in the original Hebrew (-Aramaic) texts termed עִירִין. Cf. in Schechter's Fragm. Zadok. p. 2, l. 18: עִירֵי הַשָּׁמַיִם.

2 Cf. Charles, The Book of Enoch or 1 Enoch, 2nd ed. Oxford, 1912, p. 77, notes on 1 En. 40², 4.

That A 2 cannot be regarded as an introduction to A 1 is scarcely less evident. Apart from the occurrence in both of the angelic name 'OFFANNIEL in different connotations, the order in which the ranks of the angelic hierarchy are presented is in A 2 regressive, in A 1 again progressive.

The last verse of ch. 17, however, describing the 72 princes of kingdoms in Rāqīa' (the second heaven) might possibly be a fragment of the missing former part of A 1, the latter part of which is preserved in chh. 19 seqq.

It begins with the phrase למעלה מהם ("above them"), the characteristic opening expression of the different chapters of A 1 in introducing a new, i.e. higher, order of angels or angel-princes. This verse also seems to be more akin, in phraseology, to A 1 than to A 2, e.g. in dwelling on the splendours and adornments of the angel-princes.

If 17⁸ be regarded as a fragment of the missing part of A 1 it would also indicate the general structure of this missing part, viz. as a description of the various angelic inhabitants of the six lower heavens, 17⁸ belonging to the section treating of the second heaven, the Rāqīa'. The part preserved in chh. 19 seqq. of course treats of the angelic residents of the 'Arāboḥ (the Mærkābā-angels and the Throne-angels).

The framework in which the angelological system of A 2 is put is that of the seven heavens only. It begins by referring to "the seven princes, great, glorious, revered, etc." These seven princes are the seven archangels, and are mentioned as something already well known. They are in the chapter enumerated by name; they are further allocated each to one of the seven heavens, as the m^emunnae (i.e. appointed one, president) over that heaven and as "the prince of the host" of angels who occupy it.

In this representation two different elements are to be distinguished, viz.:

(1) The notion of the seven archangels (as to how far this was originally connected with the conception of seven heavens, see note on ch. 17³).¹

(2) The conception of angelic hosts distributed among the seven heavens and of princes appointed over them.

¹ Cf. A. Dieterich-O. Weinreich, *Eine Mithrasliturgie*³, pp. 10, l. 15 f., 12, l. 27. K. Dieterich, Hellenistische Volksreligion und byzantinisch-neu-griechischer Volksglaube (in ATTEAOZ, 1925, pp. 3, 4): "In der gnostischen Lehre... blieben nur die sieben Archonten und die sieben Planetensphären übrig, die dann unter jüdischem Einfluss sich in die sieben Erzengel und die sieben Himmel verwandelten".

There is in A 2 yet a third element, viz.:

(3) The idea of angelic moving forces of the four classes of heavenly bodies: sun, moon, planets and constellations; and of (four) chieftain princes controlling or directing these angelic forces.

This third element is brought into harmony with the heptouranic plan of the system on the basis of the Rabbinic tradition assigning all the heavenly bodies to one heaven, in this case the second, the Rāqīa'.¹ On the other hand the sidereal significance, which may originally have attached to the conception of the seven archangels or the princes of the seven heavens, is hereby concentrated to the rulers of the heavenly bodies located in the second heaven exclusively.

In the conception of seven archangels A 2 shows continuity with the ideas prevalent in the Pseudepigrapha; but also for the notions of different angelic hosts distributed in the seven different heavens, of angelic rulers of the heavenly bodies, and for the locating of these angelic rulers and the heavenly bodies in their charge in a specific heaven, there are precedents in the apocalyptic or pseudepigraphic literature.¹

As regards the names of the seven archangels, of the seven heavens and of the four princes appointed over the angelic forces of the heavenly bodies, it is to be noticed:

The names of the seven princes of the seven heavens are presented in different order and readings both in the two enumerations in the chapter (vss. 1 and 3) and in the two extant sources (N and 7). In this very variance as to names A 2 agrees with the other representations as far as they are preserved of these seven archangels. Yet, in spite of the incongruity between the various enumerations of the names of the seven archangels there is sufficient similarity in the form of the names to show affinity, interdependence or common origin.

There are first the two outstanding names of venerable ages: MIKĀEL and GABRIEL (Dan. 10, 12, 8, 9). They are here represented as the two highest of the archangels, and occur in most of the enumerations, from the early one of 1 En. 20^{5, 7} (in a portion belonging acc. to Charles to a pre-Maccabaeian period) down to that of Sode Rāzā (thirteenth century) quoted in YR. i. 6 a. The other names also seem to date back to the time of the earlier portions of 1 Enoch.

The other names are found in the portions of 1 Enoch dealing with the superior angels referred to collectively as the "Watchers" or

“The Watchers and Holy Ones” and, in 1 Enoch, usually contemplated as Fallen High Angels. These superior angels (whether they were originally conceived of as angels of the “Throne”, or as Princes of the nations of the world or as Ἀρχόντες) were evidently given individual names at a time when one of their main activities was thought to have to do with sidereal and elemental forces. Thus BARADIEL = the angel of Hail, BARAQIEL = angel of the Lightning, ŠAḤAQIEL = the angel of the sky, ŠAPAQIEL = angel of the Stillness, the Appeasing of the thunder and storm, etc. The names were kept even though—as here—the character of the angel-princes to which they were applied had changed.

The absence of the names 'URIEL and RAFAEL here is remarkable. On this peculiarity see note on the chapter.

As regards the names of the heavens and their order A 2 in the main agrees with the traditions on which TB. Hag. 12 b (the most important Rabbinic reference) is based. For the first (i.e. lowest) heaven A 2 gives, besides Uilon, the Hebrew variant Šamayim (cf. Deut. R. 2₂₃).

As regards the angelic occupants of the different heavens A 2 differs from TB. Hag. 12 b but agrees with the earlier Pseudepigrapha. (Vide note ad loc.) The angels subservient to the princes of the heavens are represented as numerous. Each “Prince of the Host” has a suite of ministering angels consisting of 496,000 myriads.

This number, besides giving an impression of the vast number of angels who do the bidding of the seven archangels, is symbolical of the conception assigning to the large multitude of angels the duty of proclaiming, expressing, the Kingship of the Most High throughout all the heavens. “They take upon themselves the yoke of the Kingdom of heaven.” The numerical value of the Hebrew word for ‘Kingdom,’ מַלְכוּת, is 496. The number 496 is therefore usually mentioned in connection with the ministering angels as uttering the Qeḏuššā. Cf. chh. 35¹, 40³.

The names of the angel-princes appointed over the four classes of heavenly bodies stand in direct relation to the functions ascribed to them and are in the chapter interpreted accordingly. GALGALLIEL is the prince of the globe (galgal) of the sun, 'OFANNIEL the prince of the globe ('ofan) of the moon (cf. 41¹, אֹפַן הַלְבָנָה, against גִּלְגַּל הַחֲמָה), RAHAṬIEL is the prince who makes the constellations ‘to run’ (rāhaṭ) and KOḲĀBIEL or KOḲBIEL is the prince appointed over the planets (koḳābim).

These four are mentioned with the same names and functions in ch. 14⁴, among the 'rulers' of the world. RAHAṬIEL recurs also in ch. 46³. KOḲBIEL is met with in such early writings as 1 En. chh. 67, 69², 83 (Fragments of the Book of Noah, Charles). The term Rahāṭon occurs in TB. Ber. 32 in connection with angelic rulers over the stars and planets.

The angels who accompany GALGALLIEL, 'OFANNIEL and RAHAṬIEL and who move the sun, moon and constellations are in number 96, 88 and 72 respectively, whereas KOḲBIEL has a suite of 365,000 myriads of ministering angels.

The discrepancy between the large number of angels assigned to the last-named prince and the limited number of "great and honoured angels" represented as assisting the three higher princes of heavenly bodies was probably the cause of the addition to this chapter (17) of the fragment contained in vs. 8, dealing with the 72 princes of kingdoms. The redactor who joined together the different pieces of the angelological section (chh. 17-28, 29) was led to believe that the 72 princes of kingdoms mentioned in this fragment formed the real counterpart of the 72 angels who acc. to vs. 6 accompany the constellations and that these princes were hence rulers over the 365,000 myriads of angels referred to in vs. 7. To this effect he interpreted the opening words of the fragment: "over them", "above them". He was further moved to this conclusion by his familiarity with certain traditions which connected the 72 princes of kingdoms very closely with the rulership over the planets and constellations or over the heavenly bodies in general. For the improbability of this fragment having originally formed part of A 2 cf. note on ch. 17⁸. It belonged, presumably, to A 1.

C. The angelology of A 3 (ch. 18).

A 3 is like A 2 a complete scheme of angelic hierarchy. It has, however, a much wider scope than A 2. Whereas the framework in which the different angelic hosts and their chieftain angel-princes are ordered is in A 2 merely that of the seven heavens, A 3 stretches its vision of the celestial structure up to the Throne of Glory, the seat of the Šeḳinā. To the angels and princes of the seven heavens A 3 attaches least importance. Instead it centres its interest and focusses its attention to an increasing extent as the exposition goes on upon the angel-princes occupying the positions near the Throne.

The system under consideration may thus be conveniently divided up into the following parts, proceeding from the lowest to the highest ranks or angel-princes.

(1) The angels of each of the seven heavens; over the angels of each heaven is appointed an angel-prince, sar. (This accords with A 2.)

The angels of the heavens are not defined as to functions or divisions. Neither are the princes of the heavens named by individual names as in A 2. The Princes are 'crowned', i.e. the crown is the symbol constituting the degree of sar, prince, ruler over angels appointed to his charge.

(2) The 72 princes of kingdoms, the celestial representatives of the earthly kingdoms, empires or nations.

The seventh heaven is pictured as divided in two parts, one lower or external, and a higher, central. The outer common part is the abode of the angels of the seventh heaven and their prince; the 72 princes of kingdoms are located on the confines between the outer and the inner regions, evidently in order to indicate their character of intermediaries between the earthly kingdoms and the "King of Kings of Kings." They have crowns of kingship (to denote their rulership over the earthly empires) in distinction from the other angel-princes who have "crowns of glory".

(3) The guardians of the seven Hekāloḥ, Halls, located one within the other in the seventh heaven, forming its Holy part. The inner regions are pictured as arranged in seven Hekāloḥ, the one within—and higher, holier than—the other. The idea of guardians, door-watchers, of the Halls is here just emerging. Contrast the developed form of this idea met with in Hekāloḥ Rabbāḥi, esp. chh. 15-23, also in Massāḥāḥ Hekāloḥ, chh. 4 and 5.

(4) The high angel-princes of the seventh Hall, the place of the Throne of Glory and the Šēkinā. These angel-princes are ordered according as they are conceived of as representing different aspects of the Divine manifestation in the seventh Hall in relation to the angelic and terrestrial worlds.

The seventh Hall represents a similar division as the seventh heaven. The centre of the seventh Hall is also the centre of the Divine manifestation, the Šēkinā, the Throne of Glory. We have here, so to speak, the Holy of Holies (as the seventh Hall is indeed named when in later literature the Hekāloḥ are designated each by its special name, as e.g. in Pardes Rimmonim, Ša'ar Hekāloḥ). Here begins the essential theme of the exposition.

(a) The angel-princes of the celestial performance of the Q̇duššā, viz.:

the four great princes set over the four camps of Šekinā, Taḡ'aṣ, Baraṭṭiel, and Hāmon.

The four camps of Šekinā represent the multitudes of song-uttering angels ordered in four great divisions, rows or 'armies', one on each side of the Šekinā. The princes appointed over the camps of Šekinā are usually named as the four princes on the "four sides of the Lord of Spirits", i.e. MIKĀEL, GABRIEL, 'URIEL (NURIEL or FANUEL) and RAFAEL. The conception in its germ goes back at least as far as 1 En. 40^{1-3, 9}. ("On the four sides of the Lord of Spirits I saw four presences... and I heard the voices of those four presences as they uttered praises before the Lord of glory.")

TAG'AS who stands at the head of all the song-uttering angels is symbolical of the Unity. The significance of this name is in later mystical literature essentially that of 'head', 'origin', 'fountain'.¹

תַּגְאֵשׁ is in cabbalistic writings considered as a combined t^emurā, viz. אֵשׁ אֲבִי"ב combined with אֲבִי"ב and usually connected with another similar combination, viz. מַעַצ"שׁ = t^emuras אֲבִי"ב and אֵשׁ אֲבִי"ב. These combinations are regularly applied to the letters of the Divine Names. (References in note on ch. 18⁵.)

BARAṬṬIEL and HĀMON both express the momentous significance of the heavenly Q̇duššā, the commotion pervading all the angelic hosts at the time when the Thrice Holy is about to be sung. (Cf. ch. 38.)

(b) The angel-princes of the heavenly treasures (probably), representing the corresponding functions traditionally ascribed to Metatron Na'ar, "the eldest Servant of His house", viz.:

TUṬṬESIEL, 'AṬRUḠIEL, NA'ARIRIEL and SASNIḠIEL.

TUṬṬESIEL is one of the names of Metatron in 48 D I, no. 83. It is almost certain that this name is an allusion to that of Metatron. The same is probably the case with 'AṬRUḠIEL. NA'ARIRIEL at once suggests the name or epithet 'Na'ar' or 'Youth' given to Metatron;

¹ Cf. B^eriḡ M^enuḡā, ed. Amsterdam, 1648, e.g. foll. 3 a and 5 a. The name Taḡ'aṣ, in contrast with the other angelic names of the section, is followed by epithets in Aramaic (שְׂרָא רְבָא וִיקִירָא) instead of in Hebrew. Cf. in סֵפֶר אֱלִיהֵו (ed. Bittenwieser) beginning in Aramaic: רְבָא דִּישְׂרָאֵל. The Aramaic here suggests that the name Taḡ'aṣ emanates from some Aramaic source. In Mandaitic תַּגְאֵשׁ is the term for 'crown'. Cf. the Jewish תַּגְאֵשׁ.

SASNIĠIEL or S^EGANS^EGÆL or ZAGN^EZAGIEL is one of the main synonyms for METATRON. It would thus seem that these four angels represent certain functions connected with the name of Metatron, namely the functions indicated by the names Zaġne^ezāġiel (from נָנִי) and Na'ar, i.e. the stewardship over the celestial treasures, 'g^enāzīm'. Cf. the cabbalistic play on the word Na'ar: as Na'ar (young) Metatron is also Zāqēn (old) for he is the 'Z^eqān Bēpō', the eldest of His house, i.e. steward, alluding to Gen. 24².

(c) The angel-princes representing the Divine Strength, Might and Power, viz.:

SAZRIEL, G^EBURĀPIEL and 'A^ERĀFIEL.

On these names cf. notes on ch. 18, vss. 12-14 respectively.

(d) The angel-princes of the Torā, viz.:

'AŠRUYLŪ (the general instruction in the Torā) and GALLIŠUR (the revelation of the esoteric doctrine embodied in the Torā).

In conformity with the principle כל מה שיש למטה יש למעלה (everything below has its counterpart above) there is in the celestial or angelic world a teaching of, instruction in the Torā in a heavenly college. The president of this heavenly college is 'Ašruylū. Gallišur on the other hand reveals the "secrets of the Torā", the later term used in the technical sense (cf. TB. Hag. 13 a) of esoteric doctrine, the essence of the Torā. To a knowledge of "the secrets of Torā" only a privileged few would be admitted. And as possessor of these 'secrets' GALLIŠUR ranks above 'AŠRUYLŪ. This gradation in the knowledge of the Torā and the 'secrets' among the angels is in fact always assumed. Cf. this chapter, vs. 22.

(e) ZAKZĀKIEL, representative of God's care for Israel, and 'ANAFIEL, representing the Divine Majesty pervading the 'Arabop (but perhaps originally conceived of as the representative of the world at large, "the Prince of the World").

ZAKZĀKIEL, in accordance with his name—an allusion to זִכְרָה, זִכְרוֹת—"is appointed to write down the merits of Israel on the Throne of Glory" (cf. TB. Hag. 15 a on Metatron). This function connotes a sort of championship for Israel. The emphasis is here not so much on the Scribe-function (which really belongs to the two Soferiel, vss. 23, 24) nor on the function of Advocate in general (this office rests with Z^EHANPURYU, vs. 21), but the central aspect of the present conception of Zakzākiel is most probably that of Israel's representative.

The function and character of ^ANAFIEL are described thus: "... (he) keeps the keys of the heavenly Halls... and the bough of his honour and his majesty and his crown and his splendour and his brilliance covers (overshadows, stretches over) all the chambers of ^A*rābōṣ Rāqīa'* on high even as... the Glory of the Maker of the World covers the heavens and the earth is full of his praise."

^Anafiel is thus conceived of as a supervisor of all the splendours of the seventh heaven, and especially over the seven Halls. His being compared with the Most High in this relation probably signifies that he is a representative of the Godhead to the whole angelic world under him, and perhaps also, as in Hekāloṣ Rabbāpi, implicitly regarded as the Prince of the World. The explanation of the name of ^ANAFIEL as given in vs. 18 of the present chapter recurs in practically identical form in Hek. R. 22₄.

(f) The highest angel-princes in A 3 as in A 1 are those of the Judgement, those serving by the "throne of Judgement". They are here:

SO^PER ^AŠIEL—ŠOQEḌ ḤOZI—Z^FHANPURYU,

^AZBUGĀ,

SO^FRIEL YH^UH MĒMĪṖ—SO^FRIEL YH^UH MĒḤAYYĀE.

The first-named triad represent respectively the Accusing-Executing, the Impartially Deciding and the Defending-Mitigating aspects of the Judgement. Or, in the language of ch. 31, the Attributes of Justice, Truth and Mercy.

SO^PER ^AŠIEL represents the rigid claims of the Attribute of Justice as well in the actual judgement (trial and verdict) as in the execution of the judgement. He enters before the Š^e*kinā* as prosecutor, basing upon the records of men's deeds preserved in the 'books' kept by the two So^Friel. As the executor of the judgement, i.e. of punishment, he is appointed over the Fiery River which is the symbol of the execution of punishment. In his zeal "he stirs up the fire of the river". The Fiery River is also the means of purification and punishment of the angels. The angel-princes who wish to enter before the Š^e*kinā* must pass through the Fiery River (i.e. be purified in it). SO^PER ^AŠIEL, keeping the "seals of the fiery river", also controls the admission of angel-princes into the Presence of the Š^e*kinā*.

ŠOQEḌ ḤOZI keeps the balance. He weighs the deeds of men in a balance in the Presence of the Holy One.. He is in the middle between the Prosecution and the Defence, the counterpart of the Attribute of Truth in ch. 31. His function corresponds to that referred to in 1 En. 41¹, 61⁸.¹

Cf. the Mandaitic 'Abāḥur, who keeps the balance and weighs the deeds of men: תאקיר עובאדיא ואגריא (Lidzbarski, Mand. Lit. p. 278).

Z^EHANPURYU (Z^EHAFṬARYI) is the Advocate in Judgement and the Mitigator of the Punishment, functions symbolized by the expression "he rebukes the fiery river and pushes it back to its place" (vs. 21).

'AZBUGĀ is the prince appointed for those who in the Judgement have been passed as 'Righteous': Ṣaddiqim and H'side 'Olām. He will clothe them "with the garments of life" in which they are to live eternally.

These "garments of life" are in our book to be considered as symbolizing both "the spiritual bodies which are awaiting them" and as "reflections of the glory of Š^ekinā", the outward visibility of the new bodies, constituted of light-substance, ziy ha-kKāboḏ (celestial nature). Cf. 1 En. 62¹⁶; 2 Esd. 2⁴⁵; 2 En. 22⁸⁻¹⁰; Asc. Isa. 7²²; 8^{14, 25}; 9^{9, 17} etc. 11⁴⁰.²

אז"ב"ג is probably originally only the name of a method of t^emurā.

SOF^ERIEL H' M^EMĪṬ and SOF^ERIEL H' M^EḤAYYĀE are the highest angel-princes in the present angelological system. They fill the functions assigned to the Scribe or Scribes and the Recording Angel. They keep the books of life and the books of death.

On the ideas connected with the terms 'books of life' and 'books of death' cf. notes on chh. 18²⁴, 27², 28⁷, 30 (32¹, 44⁹).³

D. The angelology of chh. 28⁷-48 A.

(a) The section on the Judgement naturally refers to the angels connected with the Divine Bēḥ Dīn; as in A 1 and A 3 the angels of the "Throne of Judgement" occupy the highest position. In the different fragments contained in chh. 28⁷-33 we thus meet with the following representations, viz.:

1. The 72 princes of kingdoms, headed by the Prince of the World, represent the world and its various nations before the Most High, when seated in Judgement (ch. 30). They are identical, according to the Redactor, with the 'Irin and Qaddišin, the court officers of the Divine Judge (28⁸). They also actually form the Celestial Bēḥ Dīn (29, 30).

1 Charles, 1 Enoch, p. 79 n. Box, The Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 19.

2 Box, Intr. to Ascension of Isaiah (TED.), p. xxiv.

3 See also Charles, 1 Enoch, p. 91 (note on ch. 47³).

2. At the judgement of the individual the Holy One is surrounded by three classes of angels: the angels of Mercy, the angels of Peace and the angels of Destruction,¹ representing the Counsels for the Defence, the Impartial Decision and the Execution of Punishment respectively: 33^{1, 2}. Cf. ch. 31: Attributes of Mercy, Truth and Justice.

3. The Mærkābā-angels are mentioned: surrounding the Throne are the Serāfim and the ’Ōfannim, whereas the Holy Ḥayyōḥ carry the Throne from below. The Kerubim and the Galgallim are not mentioned. The reference to the Ḥayyōḥ contains a feature not met with in A 1: 33³.

4. There are two Scribes functioning at the Judgement: ch. 33².

(b) The section centring round the conception of the celestial Qeḏuššā, comprising approximately chh. 34–40, is primarily concerned with the idea of the innumerable hosts of ministering angels as uttering the Qeḏuššā.

1. The ministering angels are divided as regards their duties into three classes: some of them run as messengers, others are standing in attendance, but their main duty is the chanting of the Qeḏuššā.

This multitude of ministering angels, especially in their character of performers of the Qeḏuššā, are as viewed from their centre, the Throne, the seat of the Šekinā, called the “camp of Šekinā” (maḥane Šekinā). From this centre they are also pictured as facing the Throne in four immense ever-widening šuroḥ, armies, rows, at the head of each of which there is an angel-prince, called sar ha-Ḥayil (prince of the army, 35³).

These four armies are also called “the four camps of Šekinā” (’arba’ maḥane Šekinā). Cf. in A 3 (ch. 18⁴).

They are also conceived of as further divided, there being in all 506 thousand myriads of ‘camps’, each camp containing 496 thousand angels. These numbers are to symbolize that the ministering angels, proclaiming the Sovereignty of the Most High in chanting the Qeḏuššā, realize the “Kingdom of Heaven” on high. 496 is the numerical value of מְלִכּוּת, Kingdom, 506 that of the plural מְלָכִיּוֹת, Kingdoms: all the celestial kingdoms are in reality one whole, the Kingdom of Heaven, whose sovereign is the מֶלֶךְ מְלָכֵי הַמְּלָכִים, the King of Kings of Kings. (Ch. 35⁶; cf. in A 2, ch. 17².)

The nature and appearance of the angels are described in ch. 35², after the pattern of Dan. 10⁶ (bodily form, immense size, numerous eyes, etc.). They are changeable, however, into different forms, even into "flames, sparks, firebrands, males and females" (35⁶; cf. Gen. R. 21₁₃). According to the view of the present section these various forms represent a sort of chaos, preceding the daily repeated establishment of the Kingdom of Heaven: with the establishment of the Kingdom among them, their "taking upon themselves the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven", they eo ipso emerge in their "former shape" which is their real existence.

Before chanting the Q̇duššā the angels go down into and purify themselves in the fire of the 'N^ehar di-Nur'. From the 'N^ehar di-Nur' they receive the fiery substance constituting their bodies; from the fiery river they are formed through the 'Word' of the Holy One.¹

When the angels utter the Q̇duššā in the right order and manner, they are rewarded by crowns. The uttering of the Q̇duššā in its right order of course symbolizes—and realizes—their conforming themselves to the Law of the Kingdom, their establishing themselves into one, harmonious whole. On the other hand, when they do not utter the Q̇duššā in "the right order" they are consumed by a fire "from the little finger of the Holy One", i.e. they are deprived of their individual existence in bodily form (ch. 40³). From ch. 47 it appears that the fire from the Most High was conceived of as the counterpart on the side of destruction to the Dibbur that once created them. The bodily substance itself, that was used as their materia, returns to the non-differentiation of the N^ehar di-Nur; but "their spirit and their soul return to their Creator, and they are all standing behind the Š^ekinā" (ch. 47²).

In the place of the punished and destroyed angels there are created "new ones" by "one word" of the Holy One (ch. 40⁴).

2. Other angelic classes and angel-princes mentioned in the Q̇duššā section are:

(a) "Servants of His Throne, the attendants of His Glory": (m^ešār^epē kis'ō, m^ešamm^e š[unn]ē k^ebōdō) ch. 40¹.

(b) "The Prince of the World", represented as having authority and command over the heavenly bodies: ch. 38³.

(c) The Mærkābā-angels are included in an enumeration of angelic classes: ch. 39².

(c) In the chh. 41-48 A there is no important reference to angelic

¹ Cf. TB. Haq. 14 a, Gen. R. 78₁, Lam. R. 321. In these passages the idea is represented (incorrectly) as two different views contradicting each other: the angels created from the fire of the N^ehar di-Nur versus the angels created from the Dibbur (Word) of the Holy One.

conceptions (apart from ch. 47 already referred to) except perhaps the mention of MIKĀEL as the Prince of Israel, as weeping together with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob over the downfall of Israel, and saying to the Holy One: "Why standest thou afar off, O Lord?" (Cf. Metatron in Lam. R. Intr. 24.)

E. The angelology of the Enoch-Metatron pieces, chh. 3-16, 48 B C D^{1, 2}, and in chh. 23 and 24.

(a) In the two Enoch-Metatron pieces there are also vestiges of a rich angelology, although not so systematic as in the sections A 1, A 2 and A 3.

1. The large multitude of 'common' angels are referred to mostly as "the Ministering angels" (mal'^ake ha-ššārēḇ), divided into 'camps' or 'companies' or 'parties' (ch. 5²). The expression 'mal'^ake ha-ššārēḇ' seems further, as in the Midraš and Talmud, to be used as a general term, comprising even high, individual angel-princes: the three 'Watchers,' AZZA, UZZA and AZZĀEL are in ch. 4⁶ introduced as "three of the ministering angels".

Terms such as 'angels', 'servants' (mēšārēpim), 'mighty ones' (gibborim), 'troops of hosts' (kittōḇ šēbā'ōḇ), 'armies of 'Arāboḇ', 'the children of heaven' (bēnē mērōnīm), 'the heavenly household' (pāmilyā šəl mā'ālā) are hence to be regarded more or less as mere synonyms for 'ministering angels', not necessarily signifying distinct angelic classes.

2. There occur, however, references to definite angelic classes, of a higher order than the angels in general. These angelic classes are usually enumerated together, seldom mentioned singly, and among them are usually included the 'Mærkābā-angels'. These angels are contemplated as occupants of the highest heaven.

Ch. 6²: in the šēmē mārōm are located the Holy Ḥayyōḇ, the 'Ōfannim, the Sērāfim, the Kerubim, the Galgallim of the Mærkābā (i.e. all the five angelic classes of the Mærkābā acc. to A 1) and the "ministers of the consuming fire" (mēšārēḇē 'ēš 'ōkēlā).

Ch. 7¹ enumerates: the troops of anger, the armies of vehemence, the Šin'anīm, the Kerubim, the 'Ōfannim, the ministers of fire and the Ḥašmallim. Similarly in ch. 48 C⁴.

To these names of angelic classes must be added the "'Ēlim, 'Ēr'ellim and Ṭafsārim" of ch. 14¹, who there seem to be accorded a kind of top-position in the angelic hierarchy. The 'Ēr'ellim and Ṭafsārim occur in the similar enumeration, ch. 39², together with four classes of Mærkābā-angels.

Such enumerations as the last-named must have been the material from which the names of the "ten classes of angels" were evolved. These ten classes played an important rôle later. The enumerations in Maimonides' Yād Hāzāqā (Yēsoḏe Torā) and Massækæḇ 'Aṣiluḇ are often referred to.

The 'Ær'ællim are of course derived from Isa. 33⁷ and the Ṭafsārim from Nah. 3¹⁷ (cf. Jer. 51²⁷).¹

3. Angel-princes of a more individual character than the preceding are firstly:

"The 72 princes of kingdoms." These are represented as before the elevation of Metatron surrounding the Throne of Glory, but with the assigning of Metatron as the representative ruler over all the angels, they were made the special attendants of the Throne of Metatron, the highest of his subjects: chh. 10, 14¹, 16^{1, 2}, 48 c⁹. Ch. 14 names SAMMĀEL as greatest among the princes of kingdoms, but subject to Metatron's authority.

Ch. 10³ refers to "eight great princes called YHWH by the name of their King" who are exempt from the jurisdiction of Metatron: a sort of highest princes of the Throne. The passage is, however, probably additional. See above on "The conceptions of Metatron in 3 Enoch" (pp. 84 seqq.).

'ANAFIEL was, acc. to ch. 6¹, sent to fetch Enoch from earth before his elevation into Metatron. Cf. also ch. 16⁵. On 'ANAFIEL see above on the conceptions of Metatron in 3 Enoch and in Hekāloḇ Rabbāḇi (pp. 86 seqq., 100).

Ch. 4⁶ seqq. names 'UZZĀ, 'AZZĀ, 'AZZĀEL as high angel-princes opposing the elevation of Enoch-Metatron. They are here not regarded as Fallen Angels as in ch. 5, but probably as princes having access to the Divine Presence, perhaps functioning as guardians of the Secrets.

Ch. 14 mentions angels of the seven heavens (A 2 and A 3) and further:

The Manhiḡe 'Ōlām (the leaders, rulers of the world). These are divided into two main classes: the angels of the elementary forces and the angels appointed over the four classes of heavenly bodies. The Manhiḡe 'Ōlām carry individual names.

4. Fallen Angels and Demons are mentioned in ch. 5.

(a) The Fallen Angels are 'UZZĀ, 'AZZĀ and 'AZZIEL who correspond to the Fallen Watchers of 1 Enoch. As in 1 En. (chh. 8, 9⁶, 10⁷) they are represented as "teaching men sorceries", i.e. giving them access to the hidden powers and forces of the physical universe, also called "the planetary world". Cf. note on ch. 5⁹; also in Mid. Pet. 'Aharon (Gaster, Chronicles of Yerahmeel, p. 170).¹

¹ The figures of Azzā, ‘Uzzā and ‘Azzi’el or ‘Uzzi’el are no innovations of ³ Enoch. Their origin is probably to be seen in the adoption of certain names of Aramaic and other divinities that were objects of popular cults, such as ‘Uzzā and ‘Aziz (cf. ML. p. 278), as names of Fallen Angels or Demoniacal Powers, leading men astray into idolatry and sorceries (acc. to the known rule: names of gods of an adversary or lower religion changed into names of demons). These were then brought in connection with (1) the Fallen Watchers, the conception of which centred around Gen. 6: (2) the name ⁶*‘azzāsel* of Lev. 16.

Already in 1 En. 6¹ Asael is mentioned as one of the leaders of the Fallen Watchers, and also confused with Azazel who in 1 En. 8¹, 9⁶, 10^{4, 8}, 13¹, 54⁵, 55⁴ is represented as one of or the chief leader of the Fallen Watchers. In 1 En. 69² there is an evidence of the use of several names of a similar character: Asazel by the side of Azazel (the Greek version has Ἀσεάλ, 6¹, Ἀζαήλ, 8¹, 9⁶, 10^{4, 8}, 13¹).

The references in our book, chh. 4 and 5, bear out the fact, that at this time there was an uncertainty whether ʿAzṣā, ʿUzzā and ʿAzziʿel (ʿAzṣāʿel) were to be considered as high celestial beings or as demoniacal powers. This is to be explained from their subsequent connection with the Watchers in general, instead of with the Fallen Watchers (and perhaps also from the Rabbinic influence adverse to any ideas bearing the semblance of dualism?).

On the representations of the Fallen Watchers, vide Charles, Jub. note on ch. 4¹⁵, Charles, 1 En. 2, Introd. pp. cv and 14, and Leo Jung, Fallen Angels, etc. Cf. also note on chh. 4⁶, 5⁹. (The present writer cannot, from an examination of the various references of the speculations in question, agree with Leo Jung, op. cit. p. 183 n. 145, "that there must have been a story of two angels (i.e. that fell), the number of which was increased in later lore". It turns out to be the reverse: only the latest sources have the "two angels" (vide note on ch. 5⁹,¹⁰), these probably due to the "right and left side" systematization.)

It is noteworthy that these names have found their way into:

(1) The Testament of Solomon (ed. McCown), ch. 7⁷: Ἀζαήλ (variants: Ἀζαήλ, Ἀζαήλ) as the name of an ἀρχάγγελος; sec. C, ch. 10⁸⁸: Ἀσιέλ who ἐνεργεῖ εἰς τὸ φανερωθῆναι τὰ κλεπτόμενα καὶ τοὺς κλέπτας καὶ θησαυροὺς τινας. Notice also the incantation referred to by McCown, op. cit. note on ch. 7⁶, mentioning the “ἀρχάγγελος” ἄζαζήλ.

(2) Sib. Or. ii. 217, 18.

(3) Mandaïtic Literature, in the following forms: 'Az rabba, 'Aziz rabba (ML. 22⁵) 'Azazel, 'Azaziel (GR. 144²⁶, 173²¹, the occurrence of the last two forms is an evidence of their transmission from Jewish speculations). According to GR. IV, 144²⁶ (129¹, ²) Azazel is the head of the 444 škinās on the right of the Lord of Greatness:

ריש ארבימא וארבינ וארביא שכינאתא בצרנאג עותרא שומה דהו אלוזעייל שומה (Cf. here the cabbalistic representation 'Azzā and 'Uzziel as the heads of the angels of justice, on the right side, and mercy on the left side, respectively: Ma^araekæþ hæ^alohup 117 b. comm.) GR. 173²¹ (167⁹) enumerates among the 16 guardians or keepers of the fettered 'Ur': 'Azazel, 'Azazel, Taqfel and Margazel: ומארבאזעייל, אלוזעייל, ואזאזייל, ותאקפעייל.

(4) The Gnostic Books of Jeû, where the elements $\omega\zeta a$, $a\zeta a$, etc. of the mystical names of the 'Watchers ($\phi\upsilon\lambda\alpha\kappa\epsilon\varsigma$)' are probably derived from 'azza, 'uzza

(b) The demons desire to get power over and injure man who was, however, as long as the Šekinā resided among the terrestrials, or "in the Garden of Eden", protected from the influence of the demons (mazziqin) by the light-substance radiating from the Šekinā (ziḡ ha-š Šekinā). Cf. TB. Ber. 17 a; Num. R. 12³.

(c) Chh. 23 and 24, though not concerned with the angelology, contain some references to angelic beings or classes of angels. Firstly, both chapters speak of the Kerubim as the special vehicles of the Šekinā (the winds of the Kerubim, ch. 23¹; the chariots of the Kerubim, ch. 24¹).

Secondly, in ch. 24, vss. 15–23, are as vehicles of the Divine Manifestation in turn enumerated four classes of Mærkābā-angels, concluding with the highest and essential vehicle, the Throne:

vs. 15, the Chariots of the Hayyob.

vs. 16, the Chariots of the Galgallim.

vs. 17, the Chariots of the Swift Kerub.

vs. 18, the Chariots of the ’Ofannim.

vss. 19–23, the Chariots of the Throne.

Ch. 23¹⁶ identifies SĀṬĀN with the Ruḥ Sē’ārā.

F. The angelology of the additional pieces, chh. 22 B C and ch. 15 B.

Chh. 22 B and C in giving a picture of the Throne and the Mærkābā present a rich angelology.

1. The larger multitude of common angels consists of two main species:

(a) The "angels of the Glory", mal’akē ha-kKābōd, who are "standing over against the Throne of Glory" and are 660,000 myriads in number.

et sim. Especially may be noticed 1 Book of Jeû, ch. 16 (Jeû, 11): "The Three Watchers: οὐνοῶξει· νοῦσα· ιαε" (ed. Schmidt, Kopt. Gnost. Schr. p. 273). Cf. also Pistis Sophia (ed. Schmidt, op. cit. p. 10²¹, ed. Horner, p. 8): "ζαμα, ζαμα, ωζζα, παχαμα, ωζαϊ."

(5) In the Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur edited by J. A. Montgomery where the following forms occur: מַלְאָכִים (no. 19, p. 195), עֲמָלִים, עֲמָלִים (no. 7, p. 146), Dr Myhrman's text has: "in the name of Gabri'el and Mikā'el and Rēfi'el and in the name of ’Asa’el ’Asi’el the angel and ’Erme (אֵרְמִים) the great Lord". The names in question had become the property of the syncretistic magic and angelology.

(6) Attention may also be called to the ἀζαζαεισθαλιχ’ connected with the constellation of the Capricorn (written αργογερ) in Wessely, Neue Griechisch Zauberpapyri, line 886 (p. 49).

(b) The 'Servants', m^ešār^eḥim, "performing His will", 12,000 myriads in number (ch. 22 B⁴, 6, 7).

2. The angels of dread and fear, called שְׁלִישֵׁי יְרֵאָה and וְרִיזֵי אִמָּה, i.e. guardian angels who inspire dread and fear, ch. 22 B².

3. שְׂרָפִים and מַלְכִּים, Kings and Princes. These terms evidently allude to the 'princes of kingdoms', the Rulers in heaven. These seem to be placed in rank under

4. the classes of angels which include the Mærkābā-angels, here enumerated as follows: the Kerubim, 'Öfannim, Hayyōḥ, 'Irin, Qaddišin, G^edudim, Serāfim. As in A 1 the Serāfim are regarded as the highest of the Mærkābā-angels, and they even, as in the Hekālōḥ Rabbāḥi, are removed to a lofty position by the Throne at some distance from the other classes of Mærkābā-angels.

Ch. 15 B refers to the Hayyōḥ, the Kerubim, and the 'Ælohim as superior angelic orders; further the 'Princes' under Metatron's authority and the "innumerable companies of the hosts". But the special feature of this chapter is the conception of the angelic Advocates (S^eneḡorin)—1800 in number—who form the suite of the Chief Advocate, Metatron (ch. 15 B²).

§ 15. THE QUASI-PHYSICAL ASPECTS OF THE 'ARABOP, THE MÆRKĀBĀH AND THE KISSE HA-KKĀBOD

THE Mærkābā-picture, thus far contemplated in one of its constituent parts, viz. the angels of the Throne and the Mærkābā, is supplemented, in various chapters of our book, by expositions of the different quasi-physical elements and surroundings of the Mærkābā. This part of the picture could perhaps be called the 'by-work of the Mærkābāh'.¹

The Throne itself, the Kisse ha-kKābod, is not made the subject of detailed descriptions in the main part of the book. The only part which is dealt with at some length is

1. The 'Letters' ('Öḥiyyōḥ), "graven with a flaming style on the Throne of Glory" (ch. 41⁴) or written on the Kāḥar (Crown) or on the 'Heart'. The Kāḥar represents the highest part of the Divine Manifestation on the Throne, the Heart its centre.

1 The word מרכבה is used in two senses, viz. (a) the wider sense when it comprises Throne, Chariot, respective angels and the by-work, and (b) the narrower sense, implying the Divine Chariot and the angels forming it. (a) is here referred to as Mærkābāh, (b) as Mærkābā.

These 'letters' are the first essences, elements, from or by which the whole of the manifested world was created, not only earth, planets, constellations, the seven heavens and their contents, but the Throne of Glory itself and the Mærkābā (ch. 41²), i.e. God's own manifestation of Himself (chh. 13, 41).

The 'letters' have the 'numbers' inherent in them. The א thus stands both for 'ĀLÆF' and for '1', ב for 'BĒḤ' and '2'. They are, from one point of view, actually a sort of spiritual atoms.

The 'Ōḥiyyōḥ combined make up the so-called Divine Names or שמות המפורשת. These are contemplated as the second step in the creative emanation, or as secondary creative agencies. (Whereas the word 'create' or 'creation' is always used, what is really intended is 'emanation'.) Chh. 39¹, 48 D⁵,⁸, B¹ (K); 42, 48 C⁹, 15 B⁴,⁵.

The Names, Šēmōḥ, may be divided into three groups, viz.:

(a) Combinations of the same spiritual atoms, as אא, בב, דדה, ווו, etc. (48 B¹, cf. Ši'ur Qomā).

(b) Combinations of different 'Ōḥiyyōḥ into pre-rational elements, as סאם, רגוט, קטק, זכב, etc. (48 B¹).¹

(c) Combinations of different 'Ōḥiyyōḥ into rational elements, corresponding to Hebrew words. To this stage belong in the first instance the 'attributes' or 'abstract qualities' such as Wisdom (consisting of the spiritual atoms represented by the letters of the Hebrew word for Wisdom: חכמה), Understanding, Knowledge, Love, Mercy, Prudence, Righteousness, etc., "by which the whole world is sustained" (chh. 41³, 8) and in the second instance all the various forms of the Universe. The whole world was created in Hebrew.

The number of principal Šēmōḥ is 70 and the number of 'Ōḥiyyōḥ is 22, making in all 92 first elements or cosmical principles, ch. 48 D⁵.

Among these the 'ĀLÆF, or no. 1, is accorded a special significance as the starting-point for the whole process of emanation. On the connection between the 'ĀLÆF and Metatron, vide above on the conceptions of Metatron in 3 Enoch (ch. 48 C¹).

It should be added that in the various Šēmōḥ the first letter is thought to represent the dominant atom. Hence in בינה (Understanding) the BĒḤ is regarded as the dominant element, which is often expressed as follows: "Understanding (Binā) was created by Bēḥ". In consequence, a combination of Šēmoḥ may be expressed by the first letters of each, after the Notariqon system: בשכמל is a Šēm Meḥforāš in which the power of the Bārūk-response of the Qēduššā is concentrated (ch. 48 B¹).

All possible ʾŌḥiyyōḥ and Šēmoḥ are represented as contained in the Torā. "The letters of the Torā" is the technical term for the cosmical letters (ch. 44⁹, 48 D⁷, 13^{1, 2}, 15 B⁵, 18²⁵, 41¹⁻⁴).

2. The Throne is veiled off from the outer parts of the Mærkābā by the Pargoḏ or Curtain (also: Pāroḥāḥ and Pæraēs, orig. = carpet). The Pargoḏ (in Mandaitic bar goḏa; Gnostic καταπέτασμα) on which are continually to be seen, as a living picture, the drama of "all generations, their doings and their thoughts" in past, present and future times, and behind which are the last secrets of the Godhead, is symbolical especially of the "reasons of the Divine decrees". It forms the division between the angels in possession of the innermost secrets of the Godhead and the angels who do not possess the highest secrets (chh. 10¹, 45^{1, 6} and 18^{16, 22} notes). Cf. how acc. to Sifrā on Lev. 1¹ "even the Holy Ḥayyōḥ, who carry the Throne of Glory, do not see the Glory" (ʾāf ḥāyyōḥ ḥā-qḡōḏāēs ḥā-nnōš ʾōḥ ʾāḥ kissē ḥā-kkābōḏ ʾēnān rō ʾōḥ ʾāḥ ḥā-kkābōḏ).

3. Under the Throne are the treasuries and store-houses, containing the Abstract Qualities or the Sustaining Forces of the Universe (chh. 8¹, 10⁶) as well as the treasuries of spiritual Maintenance (Parnāsā) of the World; further, the treasuries of elemental forces ("fire, hail, snow, lightning, clouds, winds," ch. 37). In these are also contained the Chariots, the vehicles for the Šēkinā's appearance at different parts of the Universe, or its "traversing the 18,000 worlds" (chh. 24, 37¹). To the treasuries are also reckoned the Gūf, i.e. the "chamber of creation of the righteous" and the receptacles of the Books of Records, the Books of Life and Death (chh. 43³, 27²).

The most important of the contents of the treasuries are the 'secrets', the 'Celestial Torā': Ginzē Sēḥārīm. Acc. to the Enoch-Metatron pieces, Metatron is appointed over all the treasuries and store-houses on high, but especially the treasuries of the secrets (chh. 10⁵, ⁶, 48 C³, 48 D¹⁰).

4. The Mærkābā-angels (ch. 34), the camps of Šēkinā and the treasuries (ch. 37) are surrounded by concentric walls of clouds, fire, etc., between which are "pillars of brimstone, flaming wheels, winds, voices, thunders, sparks, ice and hail".

5. A special place in the Mærkābā-picture is accorded the fiery river (N^ehar di-Nur), which fulfils the various functions: creation of angels, purification and punishment of angels and spirits of men (chh. 33⁵, 28¹⁰, 36, 47). The conception of the N^ehar di-Nur is amplified into those of "the four heads of the fiery river", "four fiery rivers" and "seven fiery rivers" (chh. 18¹⁹, 33⁴, ⁵, 19⁴).

In connection with the ideas of the counterbalance of contraries, which plays an important rôle in our book, the river or rivers of fire are supplemented by rivers of hail, ice and water (chh. 22 B³, ⁴, C²; cf. ch. 42¹, ⁷).

6. The Garden of Eden is mentioned in chh. 5¹, ⁵, 23¹⁸, 48 D⁸, but does not fit in very well with the use of the Mærkābā-picture.

Interesting is the reference, ch. 23¹⁸, to the spices or fragrances of the Garden of Eden prepared for the righteous. On the idea of the fragrances of the celestial regions, supportable only for those of celestial nature but a deterrent for demons and the unworthy, vide Boeklen, Die Verwandtschaft, etc., p. 65, and Bousset, Hauptprobleme, etc., pp. 301, 302. Notice the Gnostic parallels given by the latter, op. cit. ib.

In the additional fragments, chh. 15 B, 22 B, 22 C, there are to be noticed some further developments in the picture of the by-work of the *Mærkābā*h and of the 'Arāboḥ Rāqīa'.

7. The Ḥašmal which in the angelology of the book is used to denote a specific class of angels, the Ḥašmallim, and otherwise is taken as a sort of celestial matter (ch. 36², cf. chh. 26⁴, 35⁶, 48 B¹, D⁸) au niveau with 'fire', 'hail', 'ælgābiš', etc., is here, in the expression "the habitations of the Ḥašmal", beginning to receive a definite mystical significance as connoting the inner part of the *Mærkābā*¹ (ch. 15 B²).

Another feature is the Tabernacle and Altar on high (ch. 15 B¹), referred to above on the conceptions of Metatron.

Thirdly we are told of "windows above the heads of the Keruḥim", symbolical of the admission or granting ('letting through') of the prayers: ch. 15 B².

A fourth detail is that of a Court (Ḥāšēr) before the Throne, representing the part inside which no angel, not even the Serāfim, can enter: ch. 22 B¹.

1 Cf. TB. Hag. 13 a, b; Hek. R. 13¹; Soṭ ha-Ḥašmal, in 'Arze L^eḥānon, foll. 40 a, 41 a: the Ḥašmal denotes the Ḥayyōḥ and also designates a special place in the 'Holy of Holies' (i.e. the seventh Heḳāl). It also represents the rhythmical effulgence of spiritual Light (Ḥāšā and Mallel), it is the Deity as 'Ur-Sonne': S. Miḏraš Talpiyyōḥ, 167 d (cf. Bō Yin Rā).

This Hāṣēr is surrounded by rivers of fire, and rivers of hail and over these rivers are placed 'bridges' on which the angels and princes approach the Entrance (Mābōy) to the Divine Court, as in the Heḱālōḅ Rabbāḅī, ch. 131.

The highest heaven, ⁴*rābōḅ*, contains the seven Heḱālōḅ (Halls, Palaces), arranged concentrically "one within the other" (ch. 1¹). In the innermost of these, the seventh Hall, are the Throne of Glory and the Highest parts of the Mærkābā (chh. 1^{1, 2, 6}, 16¹, 18^{3, 4, 18}, 22 B⁴, 37¹, 38¹, 48 C^{4, 8}, 10²). The entrance to each of the seven Halls is guarded by angels (cf. above on the Angelology of A 3, p. 159, and ch. 12³ (QAFṢIEL)). The Halls and the guardian angels are here not yet subject to abstruse speculations as in the Heḱālōḅ Rabbāḅī and later.

Ch. 24¹⁷ in a Midraš-like passage speaks of the 18,000 worlds. Vide note ad loc. and confer above, p. 74; similarly ch. 48 A¹ mentions 955 heavens. The import is somewhat different. Vide note ad loc., and cf. the Gnostic Habrasax and the 365 heavens, Hippol. ⁷Ελεγχος, vii. 26. (955 is the numerical value of ה'ש'מ' 'the heavens'; □ = 600; Ἀβρασαξ is by gematria 365.)

§ 16. THE CONCEPTIONS OF SPIRIT AND SOUL. FATE OF THE SPIRIT AFTER DEATH

THE trichotomy of the non-physical part of man in n^ešāmā, rū^aḥ and nāfāš, as met with in developed mystical literature, seems at the time of our book not yet to be conceived of. The surviving part of man is, throughout the book, referred to by the term n^ešāmā exclusively, chh. 28¹⁰, 43^{2, 3}, 44^{1, 2, 6, 7}, 48³. This term n^ešāmā will best be rendered 'spirit'.¹ An examination of the various passages treating of the human n^ešāmā reveals the following ideas, viz.:

(1) The n^ešāmā or spirit is indestructible and eternal, ch. 43.

Wohlberg, Grundlinien, etc., p. 32, says of the three terms for 'soul' used in Bible and Talmud: 'רוח bezeichnet den Geist ausserhalb seiner Verbindung mit dem Leibe, נפש den in diesem wirkenden und durch Thätigkeit sich offenbarenden Geist, Seele, Seelenwesen, Seelenperson den Geist in seiner Verbindung mit dem Leibe, wie er in ihm zum Vorschein tritt, an ihn gebunden ist und mit ihm ein Ganzes bildet.' The present writer is not convinced that this distinction is justified in respect to the Talmudic dicta. The term most often used in the earlier Haggadic dicta is n^ešāmā, and this quite as well of the 'spirit' after its separation from the terrestrial body as when 'in diesem wirkend'. More correct is the remark by Abelson, Immanence, pp. 43, 44: "In Talmudic literature there is...no clear-cut distinction between these terms; but noteworthy is the preferential use of Neshamah to signify the soul in its truly spiritual sense".

(2) The spirit, even when not united to a body, has a bodily form. This bodily form is evidently pictured as similar to the form of the manifested (or physical) body save in so far as it is winged.

This bodily form must not be confused with the "pre-existent form or type of body" preserved in the Chamber of Creation (ch. 43³), with which the spirit is invested when about to go down into life earthly. Cf. below.

(3) The nēšāmā is, in all probability, conceived of as pre-existent. This seems to be presupposed by the expression used in ch. 43¹⁻³, speaking of "the spirits that have been created and have returned" and "the spirits that have not yet been created" as two distinct classes. Cf. notes on ch. 43.

It must, however, be admitted, that the representations of ch. 43 do not absolutely compel the interpretation, that actual (so-called 'real') pre-existence is meant here. The possibility always remains, that the expressions cited above refer only to an 'ideal' pre-existence. When Metatron according to ch. 43 promises R. Išma'el to show him "the spirits of the righteous that have not yet been created" this need not necessarily imply the real pre-existence of these spirits; one might compare how acc. to ch. 45 Metatron is able to show R. Išma'el all future events and all coming generations, "their works and their doings". The greatest probability is, however, that an actual pre-existence is meant to be conveyed. The strongest evidence for this is the use of the Scripture expression "the souls I have made" to denote "the spirits of the righteous not yet created".

(4) On the supposition that the pre-existence of the spirit is taught in our book, it also follows that the spirit's "being created" means its entering its manifested existence, i.e. its being invested with a body (or perhaps rather with the image or model of the manifested body which determines the growth and appearance of the actual physical body¹). This Creation takes place in the Chamber of Creation, called 'Body' (Gūf). (Cf. note on ch. 43³: for the term Gūf, cf. TB. Yeb. 62 a, 'Ab. Zar. 5 a; Niddā, 13 b.)

(5) Further, on the same supposition, it follows that the character of the spirit is determined by the way in which it fulfils the tasks set for it in its manifested existence. The nēšāmā in its pre-existent state is pure or 'righteous'.² Through life earthly the spirit may become defiled or wholly corrupted (ch. 44^{5, 6}).

1 Cf. Abelson, Jewish Mysticism, p. 165; Wohlberg, Grundlinien, etc., p. 16.

2 Cf. 4 Macc. 18³³; TB. Šab. 32 b; Bāḥā Bāprā, 16 a; Ber. 60 b (prayer), Niddā, 30 b; Ecll. R. 127. Vide note on ch. 43³; Box, Ezra-Apocalypse, note on 7³² (p. 120); and R. Wohlberg, Grundlinien, etc., pp. 12, 13.

(6) The pre-existent spirits have their abode in the presence of the Throne of Glory.¹

Fate of the spirit after death:

(1) Immediately after death the spirit of man is judged and, according to its life on earth, it is registered among one of the three classes of (a) righteous, (b) intermediate, and (c) wicked.²

(2) The righteous forthwith return to their original abode in the presence of ('above') the Throne of Glory, ch. 43. In other contexts it is stated, that the righteous in the time to come (= after the second judgement?) will inherit the Garden of Eden and the Tree of Life, ch. 23^{18,3}.

(3) The intermediate, בְּנוֹנִיִּים or בְּנוֹנִיִּים, are brought to Še'ōl in order to go through a process of purification. When purified and wholly cleansed from the defilement caused by their sin they are, most probably, regarded as sharing the lot of the righteous, ch. 44^{3, 5}.

(4) The wicked are conducted to Gēhinnom to be punished in fire.

(5) The intermediate, no doubt, form the large majority.

The term rū^{ah} does not occur in 3 Enoch with reference to human beings. The term nafeš again occurs only once, viz. in ch. 16². It probably refers to the psychical processes, the 'mind', comprising the emotional affects. Nafeš generally denotes the vital force of the body. Possibly, however, the writer of ch. 16 is not conscious of any distinction between nafeš and nēšāmā or rū^{ah}.

Ch. 47.

A position by itself is taken up by ch. 47. This chapter pictures the nature of the angels somewhat in analogy with that of human beings. The underlying idea seems to be that angels and men are essentially ¹ By implication, since here is the abode of the spirits who have returned, scil. to their original abode. This agrees with TB. Hag. 12 b (and Gen. R. i. 26), but disagrees with TB. 'Aboḏā Zārā, 5 a (et al., vide above) in so far as the latter gives the abode of the unborn souls as the Guf.

² Righteous = undefiled, 'white'; intermediate = contaminated, 'grey'; wicked = wholly corrupt, 'black'. Cf. TB. Roš ha-š-Šānā, 16 b, 17 a, Sab. 33 b, 152 a; Ab. R. Nap. xli; Tos. Sanh. xiii. 3. On the conceptions of pre-existent spirits and their abode in Pseudepigrapha and Rabbinic, vide Charles, Eschatology, pp. 231 seqq., Box, Ezra-Apocalypse, pp. 26, 33, 37, 120; Billerbeck, in Strack-Billerbeck, Komm. z. N. Test. ii. 133 seqq. For Mandaitic parallels, cf. above, p. 76.

³ Similarly in TB. Šab. 152 ab: 'nišmōpān šəl šāddiqīm g'enūzōp tāhāp kisše hā-kKābōd' (under the Throne of Glory) but in TB. Baḥ. Meš. 114 b, Baḥ. Baḥ. 84 a, Ber. 12 b, the abode of the righteous is the Garden of Eden. Vide also Templer, Die Unsterblichkeitslehre, etc., pp. 18 seqq.; Wohlberg, op. cit. pp. 30, 31. There is not sufficient evidence in 3 En. for the view that the life of the righteous in the 'arabōš is a passing, preparatory, life in waiting for the time of the resurrection.

¹ The synonymy of nēšāmā and rūḥ^h is clearly brought out by the phrase (ch. 47³): “the souls of the angels and the spirits of the ministering servants”. Notice the similar juxtaposition in TB. Hag. 12 b: nismōpān šel šaddiqim v’rūhōp unēšāmōp še’apīd l’hibbār’op. Cf. 1 En. 22³: “the spirits of the souls of the dead”. In 1 Enoch the terms ‘spirit’ and ‘soul’ (nafes and manfas) interchange. In Mandaic literature the most frequent term is ‘spirit’ (ܢܝܫܡܬܐ), regularly when only one term is used. Quite often, however, the expression ‘spirit and soul’ or rather ‘soul and spirit’ (ܪܘܚܐ וܢܝܫܡܬܐ) is met with. Cf. Lidzbarski, Mandäische Liturgien, p. 12, n. 1: “רוחא ist die Lebenskraft des Körpers, נישמטה die beim Tode sich abtrennende dem Jenseits zustrebende Seele. Beim Tode werden רוחא נישמטה vom Körper getrennt, vgl. Qol. 28, 29. Nach 31, 17 wird die רוחא der נישמטה gleich gemacht und findet einen Platz im Haus des Lebens...”. Cf. also Reitzenstein, Mand. B. d. H. d. Grösse, p. 94, note 2.

Interesting passages on the relation between spirit and soul are:

GL. I ii 430²⁸⁻³¹ (9²¹⁻²²): אַמאַר נישטאָ מן רוהא ופּאָגרא זאָפּרא רוהא ופּאָגרא : ואַפּרא פּאַרשײגנאָ װא עהאַלעֶה על דְקִיִּים װאַמאַר נישטאָ מן רוהא ופּאָגרא זאָפּרא אַתּא . אַסְגִּיא שְׁחֵרוּי אַתּא “The spirit spoke with the soul and the stinking body but the soul and the stinking body gave it no answer. While it (the spirit) stood and spake with the soul and the stinking body, the liberator arrived, and stepped forth.”

אבא־תור....תִּקְרִיב וּמֵאֲלוּיָא רוּחָא מִן: $GL. I iv 45^{26,27}, 566^{36,37} (37^{8-10}, II 7^{15})$:

Strange is the way in which the analogy between angels and men is worked out with regard to the manifested existence. The angels are said to have a destructible part (47²), evidently corresponding to the physical body of human beings; and just as the manifested (physical) life of man is that in which his specific duties are to be discharged and during which he can fail and become corrupted, so also the angels carry out their duties (symbolized by the performance of the Q^eduššā) while in manifested existence, and may likewise fail in that state. Just as the spirits of the righteous return to their Creator after earthly life, so the spirits and souls of the angels are said to return to their Creator after the destruction of their perishable part in the N^ehar di Nur (fiery river); moreover, the parallelism implies that גִּישִׁיתָהָא . . . מַשְׁחִיחַ רוּחַ מִן גִּישִׁיתָהָא. "ʿAḅapūr... weighs and unites the soul with the spirit" . . . "tut den Geist mit der Seele zusammen" (Lidzbarski).

As an example of passages, where there seems to be no idea of a dichotomy of the non-physical part of man, one may refer to GL. III xvii 536/537 (97/98); being a dialogue between the spirit and the body, in similar terms, mutatis mutandis, as the dialogue between the spirit and the soul in GL. III xxxviii 566 (117). There are also frequent passages pointing to the idea of the spirit's possible corruption through its own doings during its life in 'the world of illusion': e.g. GL. III xxi 544 (102/103): "The Judge (after death) examines the Spirit on its sins and aberrations: 'what works have you done, O Spirit, in the world of illusion, where you have had your abode?' 'You are my witness, O Judge, that I have done no evil deed upon my own account...'"

To illustrate the workings of this idea of 'soul and spirit' in different circles, it may be allowable to point to the Coptic Apocalypse of Paul (edited, translated and commented upon by E. A. W. Budge in his Miscellaneous Coptic Texts, pp. clxii-clxxiii, 534-574, 1043-1084). In his summary of that book (op. cit. pp. clxii seqq.) Budge says: "The portions of [the 'Apocalypse of Paul'] that remain to us prove that it was full of ancient Egyptian beliefs and views about the spirit, and soul, and 'angel', of a man. . . . The first section begins with the description of the fate of a sinful soul on leaving the body. This soul was attended on earth by its angel and admonished by its spirit, which reported daily to God the sins which it committed. When its body died, its spirit reviled it for its wickedness, and its angel afflicted it, and then its spirit summoned it into the presence of the Judge of Truth, who is here Christ. . . . Then the soul was taken before God, and its angel and its spirit addressed God." The passages run: "Its spirit came forth from it, saying, 'O thou wretched soul, thou didst not give me rest during my little time which I passed in sojourning with thee. Or, O thou wretched soul, didst thou endure. . . or did thy heart turn? The breath of the breath of life of God was in thee. Let us [go] to the presence of the Judge of Truth. I will never forgive thee; and I have made myself a stranger unto thee this day, and do thou do likewise [to me]'. Thus the spirit of the soul abuseth it (i.e. the soul), and its angel afflicteth it" (pp. 556, 1043). "And they took away the soul to enable it to pay worship unto the God who created it in His own image and likeness. . . . And the spirit of the soul said, 'I am the spirit, the breath of life which sojourned with it (ⲕⲉ ⲁⲛⲟⲕ ⲛⲉ ⲛⲉⲛⲓⲁ ⲛⲓⲣⲉ ⲛ ⲱⲛⲉ ⲉⲧ ⲉⲗⲱⲟⲩ ⲉ ⲣⲟⲥ)', judge it according to its judgements" (pp. 558, 1045). Also here, as in the Mandaitic passages cited above, the soul is the subject of sin, whereas the Spirit is incorruptible, a Divine spark living within the soul and separating from it when it is corrupt. The terms used for 'spirit' and 'soul' are the Greek πνεῦμα [ⲛⲓⲁ ⲛⲛⲉⲣⲙⲁ] and ψυχή [ⲡⲱⲭⲏ] respectively. In other passages of the Apocalypse the soul alone [or the soul and its angel (ἄγγελος)] is spoken of, without any reference to the spirit. Cf. also W. Scott, Hermetica, ii. p. 265 (Corp. Herm. x. 16).

the spirits and souls of the angels are pre-existent (cf. note on ch. 47²). The spirits of the angels have bodily form as the spirits of men (ch. 47⁴).

Ch. 47 is evidently later than the rest of the section within which it appears. It quite clearly builds upon ch. 40, which latter speaks of the punishment of the angels by way of destruction, but knows nothing of any continued life for the punished angels. It also presupposes chh. 43 and 44 on which it is modelled, although inadvertently introducing the expression 'spirits and souls' instead of 'spirits'.

The underlying idea, already referred to, of ch. 47, viz. the identification in essence of the nature of men and angels, is, of course, old. This idea has been traced to Jewish-Alexandrian speculation: after taking over from Hellenistic thought the Platonic-Pythagorean conception of the pre-existence of the soul, the Jewish-Alexandrian philosophers arrived at the identification: ἄγγελος = δαίμων = ψυχή.¹

The identity in kind of human spirit and angelic nature is the necessary presupposition for the identity of Enoch and Metatron in the Enoch-Metatron pieces of our book. Also other representations of the transformation of a human being into an angel or celestial being imply the same notion (Elijah = Sandalfon, etc.). In the symbolical language of the earlier mystical literature the 'garment of glory' or 'garment of light' represents the higher celestial, angelic-spiritual nature. The garment of glory in these writings is attributed as well to angels as to the righteous spirits ascending into heaven. The difference between men and angels in such connections is only one of degree of perfection.

The originality of ch. 47 consists in its maintaining a manifested existence, in a perishable body, for the angels, similar to the earthly life of men.

In this connection it must be pointed out, that the conception of the pre-existence of the human spirit as met with in ch. 43 does not seem to be characteristic of the whole of 3 Enoch. Thus in the longer Enoch-Metatron piece Enoch-Metatron is called a Youth because he is a child in years compared with the angel-princes. It really would seem as if the conception of pre-existence belongs only to chh. 43 and 47 or, probably, to the section 41-48 A.

Acc. to Billerbeck² the doctrine of pre-existence was first introduced in Rabbinical literature in the middle of the third century A.D. and its first representatives in Palestine were R. Šemu'el bār Nāḥmān (about A.D. 260), R. 'Assi (about A.D. 300), R. Leṣi (about A.D. 300) and R. Yiṣḥāq (about A.D. 300).¹

¹ Vide Billerbeck in Strack-Billerbeck, Komm. z. N. Test. ii. 340, who quotes Schlatter, Das neuaufgefundene hebräische Stück des Sirach, pp. 180-186, and points to the 'Alexandrian-Gnostic (?) Apocryphon Prayer of Joseph', acc. to which the Patriarch Jacob is an archangel (angelic name: Israel) who has entered earthly life from his pre-existent state.

² Op. cit. pp. 341 seqq.

On the assumption that Billerbeck has rightly fixed the time of entrance of the ideas of pre-existence into Rabbinical circles, the presence in our book of the conception of pre-existent spirits would seem to indicate the terminus post quem of the collection of chh. 3-48 A as the middle of the third century A.D. It is, of course, possible, that the idea of pre-existence was known to Jewish mystical circles earlier than this. That Josephus² gives it as one of the tenets of the Essenes is well known. It is maintained by prominent scholars³ that it can be traced even in the Pseudepigrapha. Nevertheless it is significant that ch. 43 seems to introduce the idea as something new, and that it is not present in the rest of the book (chh. 3-40). From this might be concluded at least that the collection (redaction) of the main part of 3 Enoch (chh. 3-48 A) was made at about the time when the idea of pre-existence was just being introduced into the mystical circles in question. (Cf. above, p. 38.)

§ 17. THE DIVINE JUDGEMENT

THE Divine Judgement dealt with in chh. 28⁷-33² is a Judgement enacted daily, at an appointed time of the day. The Judgement is concerned

- (1) with the whole world;
- (2) with all the nations of the earth;
- (3) with the individual;
- (4) with the angelic world.

The Judgement, Din, involves regular Court proceedings in the ¹ On account of dicta attributed to those teachers in Midraš Tanḥumā, 26 a, 89 a, TB. Yeṿ. 62 a, Lev. R. 4, etc. "In Babylonia one identified—at least in later times—the pre-existent human souls with the Iranian Fravašis." So in TB. Sab. 145 b, speaking of the mazzāl (Aramaic st. d. mazzālā) of the proselytes as present at the law-giving at the mount of Sinai. Acc. to Billerbeck 'mazzāl' (=constellation, fate) here equals 'genius fravashi'.

Cf. R. Wohlberg, Grundlinien, etc. "ein weiterer wichtiger, und unumstösslich feststehender Satz der Talmudischen Lehre (ist) ersichtlich. Die Seele ist prä-existierend, ihre Präexistenz ist eine reale, individuelle, nicht etwa eine nur ideale als blosser Gedanke der Gottheit". Wohlberg, of course, bases on the completed Talmud (as it lies before us), and, on that basis with reserve for the expression 'die Talmudische Lehre', his thesis may be considered as well-founded. He quite rightly acknowledges the incongruity of the Talmudic dicta of different origin (op. cit. p. 9).

² Bellum Judaicum, ii. 8. 11.

³ E.g. Box, in Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 26, note on 4 Ez. 4¹².

Celestial Assize for each case, Divine decision, decrees with regard to the world, the nations and the individual, and, lastly, the execution of these decrees, as punishments or otherwise.

When acting as Judge the Holy One is presiding in the Great Bēḥ Din on high: he is assisted by the 'Irin and Qaddišin (ch. 28^{8, 9}) who stand before him "as court officers before the judge". Acc. to ch. 28⁹ these 'Irin and Qaddišin "argue, pass the sentence, make the requests, close the cases, establish the sentences below on earth". In the judgement of the nations of the world the 'Irin and Qaddišin (chh. 29, 30) are viewed as 'Princes of Kingdoms', and are headed by the Prince of the World "who pleads in favour of the totality of the nations".

Acc. to another picture, now with reference to the Judgement of the individual, the Holy One has by him the three hypostasized Attributes, JUSTICE, MERCY, and TRUTH. The MERCY supports man by sending him a staff of its own splendour, on which to support himself when standing before the Divine Judge (ch. 31^{1, 2}).¹ The same idea is expressed in the form of "Angels of JUSTICE, MERCY, and PEACE" surrounding the Most High, when seated on the Judgement Throne (ch. 33).

The proceedings in the Divine Court and the final decrees are based upon the recordings contained in the Books of Judgement, chh. 18²⁴, 27^{1, 2}, 28⁷, 30², 32¹, 44⁹.

These books are called "the Books of the Living and the Books of the Dead" (chh. 18²⁴, 28⁷), the "Book of Records" and the "Books of Judgement" (ch. 27^{1, 2}), the "Book in which are recorded all the doings of the world" (ch. 30²), the "Book of fire and flame" (ch. 32¹), and the "Books of Records" (44⁹).

The Books of Judgement contain (a) the records of men's deeds, good and evil, and also of various events in the whole Universe; (b) the Divine decisions and decrees. The books are in the keeping of the Scribes (chh. 27, 33²).

The executors of the Divine decisions are in general matters the 'Irin and Qaddišin (ch. 28⁹), who represent the Divine rulership over or government of the world, as do the 'Princes of Kingdoms' (ch. 48 c⁹) with which they are identified (chh. 29, 30). They also sanctify the body and spirit of the man who has undergone judgement. But the execution of the special decrees which involve 'punishment' either on the world at large (ch. 32) or on the individual (chh. 31², 33¹) is reserved for a special class of angels existing for this purpose, viz. the 'ANGELS OF DESTRUCTION' (māl^akē ḥābbālā). When executing the punishments on the world the angels of destruction are given the 'Sword of God' to be used by them as an instrument of punishment and vengeance (ch. 32¹, 2).

حتى اذا انا بملك الكرسي استقبلني ومعه عمود من نور فسلم علي ثم قال خذ العمود فآخذته

The 'Angels of Destruction' correspond to the 'Angels of Punishment' of 1 En. 53³, 56¹, 62¹¹, 63¹; 2 En. 10³ (42¹); Ap. Petri, 6, 8; Test. Abrah. 12, 13 (ed. G. H. Box, pp. 19 seqq.). See note on ch. 31².

On the details in the representation of the daily Judgement see the notes on chh. 28⁷–33².

The execution of the judgement on the intermediate (the large majority, called bēnōn[iyy]im) and the perfectly wicked, having been judged immediately after death, is described in ch. 44 (in dealing with the fate of souls and spirits). Also here the angelic executors are the angels of destruction, of which only two are mentioned, viz. the chiefs appointed over the bēnōn[iyy]im and the wicked respectively; it is noteworthy that the chief 'angel of destruction' set over the bēnōn[iyy]im has the function of supporting, helping, purifying them, hence also called by the significant name SIMKIEL (from סמך). The Divine attitude towards the bēnōn[iyy]im is that of Support, Help, Mercy, Encouragement.¹ In contrast hereto, the angel of destruction appointed to deal with the wicked is called ZA'AFIEL (the Wrath of God, זעף). The wicked are to be cast out from the Divine Presence without Mercy, to be punished in Gehenna.

Also upon the angels punishment is executed, chh. 40³, 47.

When the song-uttering angels fail to perform the Q'ēduššā in the right time and order they are consumed by fire. Acc. to ch. 47 this destruction by fire refers to their 'bodies', i.e. to their existence as individual members in the song-uttering companies. The bodies of the song-uttering angels who have failed in the discharge of their duties are sent back into the fiery river from which they were once created and in the fiery river the multitudes of angels thus punished form a congeries of fiery substances: "mountains of burning coal" as the expression is in ch. 47², using the simile traditional since 1 En. 21³ ("like great mountains and burning with fire").

1 Similarly in Seṭṭar Gan 'Eden an angel is introduced whose duty it is to save those of 'middle merit' or 'the unstable' from the angels of destruction; that angel is called עזריאל, from עזר (help): (של מלאכי חבלה): הוא בא ואוחז בהם ומציל אותם מידם (אין מתקיימים כראוי ביראת ה'). Among the unstable are reckoned the proselytes who

§ 18. THE PERFORMANCE OF THE CELESTIAL SONGS, ESPECIALLY THE Q^EĀDUŠŠĀ

AN entire section of the present book is devoted to the description of the performance of the celestial songs and hymns of praise. The section, comprising chh. 35-40, enlarges on the hosts of angels engaged in the chanting of the Song, their number, arrangement, preparation, purification before intoning, the attitude or rôles played by the other parts of the Celestial community, etc.

Apart from this section the performance of the celestial songs is mentioned in various connections, especially in the sections dealing with angelology.

A. The character of the songs.

Different terms occur partly denoting various kinds of songs, partly being merely synonyms. Thus, in ch 1¹¹, there are mentioned: Song (Širā) Trisagion (Q^Eāduššā), Chant (N^Eimā); ib. vs. 12: Psalm (T^Ehillā), Song of Praise (Šəbāḥ), Song of Rejoicing (Rinnā), Thanksgiving (Tōdā), Exultation (Zimrā), Glorification (Pā'ēr), Hymn (Na'quā) and Eulogy (Oz). This is, however, in the introductory chapters which are later than the main part of the book. In the angelological section A 1 we find, e.g. ch. 20², reference made to Praise, Glory and Rejoicing (T^Ehillā, Šəbāḥ, R^Enānā). Nowhere is there any parallel to the extravagant indulgence in enumerations of synonyms for 'song' and 'praise' met with in the Heḳāloḥ Rabbāpī, ch. 24.

The songs consist of Scripture verses, chh. 19⁷, 46⁴, 2⁴, 45⁶.

Ch. 19⁷. The Galgallim, Kerubim, Hayyop, Serāfim are represented as singing, in the form of a mutual exhortation, the fifth verse of Ps. 68: "Extol Him that rideth in ^Arāboḥ, by His name Yāh, and rejoice before Him".

Ch. 46⁴. The song uttered by the planets (or heavenly bodies in general) is Ps. 8⁴: "When I consider Thy heavens, etc."

Ch. 2⁴. On the occasion of R. Išma'el's admission to enter and behold the Mərkābā, the angels exclaim: "Happy is the people that is in such a case!" (Ps. 144¹⁵).

Ch. 45⁶. "O YHWH, how manifold are thy works! The King's word hath power and who may say unto him, What doest thou? Whoso keepeth the commandments shall know no evil thing" (Ps. 104²⁴; Eccl. 8⁴).

3 Enoch dwells exclusively upon the celestial hymns, songs and praises, omitting all references to the terrestrial Q^eđuššā or other songs, chanted by men on earth, e.g. by the congregation of Israel.

The whole conception of celestial songs is of course framed by analogy to the songs on earth, but there is no hint of an interdependence between terrestrial and celestial songs. This is in marked contrast to the ideas of e.g. TB. Haḡ. 12 b ("the ministering angels say the song by night but are silent during the day for the sake of the glory of Israel": the preference is accorded the chanting performed by the congregation of Israel) or of the Hekāloš Rabbāḥi, where acc. to ch. 9_{2, 3} superimportance is assigned to the Trisagion performed by Israel ("When Israel says the Holy, Holy, Holy, the Most High has no pleasure in all the glories of the heavens with their song-uttering companies, but his attention and his joy are fixed upon the congregation of Israel alone"). In 3 Enoch, on the contrary, as the central event in the heavens—and in the whole universe—is contemplated the performance of the Song by the companies of angels (chh. 35^{5, 6}, 36, 38). In this respect 3 Enoch accords perfectly with the earlier Enoch literature, especially 2 Enoch.

The song κατ' ἐξοχῆν is, however, the Q^eđuššā. The Q^eđuššā as recorded in 3 Enoch is of the simplest form known, viz. the Thrice Holy (Isa. 6³), "Holy, Holy, Holy, is ʏḥṡḥ š^ēḇā'op: the whole earth is full of his glory" and the response "Blessed".

The response "Blessed" is referred to in two different forms, viz.

(a) "Blessed be the Glory of ʏḥṡḥ from His place" and

(b) "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom for ever and ever".

(a) is attested in chh. 1¹², 20²; (b) in chh. 39² and 48 B¹ (K), B².

The Yimloḥ ("ʏḥṡḥ shall reign for ever, etc.") is not mentioned in the present book.

In exhibiting this simple form of the Q^eđuššā 3 Enoch accords with 1 En. ch. 39^{12, 13} which also gives the Q^eđuššā in the form of the Thrice Holy and the response "Blessed":

"Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of Spirits: He filleth the earth with spirits". The "Blessed" is two-fold: "Blessed be Thou, and blessed be the name of the Lord for ever and ever". On the change in the Trisagion here see Charles, 1 Enoch, note on ch. 39¹² (p. 76), and Dillmann, Das Buch Henoch, p. 145, note on 39¹².

In 2 Enoch only the Thrice Holy is preserved, ch. 21¹ (A); cf. Rev. 4⁸.

This simple form of the Q^eđuššā is strong evidence of the early time of the Q^eḏuššā-section of 3 Enoch. It is to be noted, by the way, that the term 'Q^eḏuššā', in the main part of the whole book, is as yet unknown as denoting the Trisagion and the response. It appears only in the later introductory ch. 1¹¹. Uncertain is 26⁸, כָּל מִינֵי שֶׁבַח, וְקוֹרְאָה.¹

B. The performers of the Q^eḏuššā.

(1) Angels specially appointed for the sole purpose of chanting the Q^eḏuššā. These may be called "the song-uttering angels".

The song-uttering angels are called simply 'ministering angels' or 'camps of angels', 'camp(s) of Šekinā.' Vide above on Angelology, D. There are 506 thousand myriads of camps, each camp counting 496,000 angels (chh. 35¹, 40³; cf. 17²). The numbers 496 and 506 are symbolical of the Kingdom of Heaven. Vide above on Angelology, ib.

The camps are arranged in four šuroḅ (chh. 35³, 36²), at the head of each there being a "Prince of the Army". These four šuroḅ are also called "the four camps of Šekinā" (chh. 18⁴, 37¹). Acc. to ch. 18⁵ TAG'AS is the leader of all the song-uttering angels, in rank above the four princes.

(2) Besides these hosts of angels whose special duty is the performance of the Q^eḏuššā, the Song is chanted also by the Mærkābā-angels, the great Princes, the heavenly bodies and by the Mærkābā-seer (chh. 20², 22¹², 22 B⁸, 25⁵, 26⁸, 27³, 46⁴, 45⁶).

C. The time appointed for the celestial Q^eḏuššā.

There is a time fixed every day for the performance of the Q^eḏuššā. The relation of this appointed time to the quarters of the day or night on earth is not defined in 3 Enoch. (Cf. TB. Hullin, 91 b: "The angels recite the Song only once a day, some say 'only once a week', etc.")

Contrast Apocalypse of Abraham, ch. 10: "I (Yaoel)... teach those who carry Him (i.e. the Ḥayyōḅ) the song of the seventh hour of the night of man".²

² Ed. by Box, 1919 (TED.), p. 47. Prof. Box, in note 7 ib., points to the parallel in TB. 'Abodā Zārā, 3 b: "God sits (at night) and listens to the song of the Ḥayyōḅ" and TB. Hag. 12 b, referred to above, p. 184. Cf. also Test. of Abr., ed. Box, p. 37.

The time of the performance of the Q'ḏuṣṣā is, acc. to our book, the central event of the heavenly 'day'. For the 'Time appointed' see chh. 18⁷, 19⁶, 27³, 35⁵, 36¹, 38¹, 39¹.

D. The arrangement of the Q'ḏuṣṣā and its performance.

The "Blessed" is considered a response to the Thrice Holy. Hence there are some of the song-uttering angels who have for exclusive object the chanting of the "Holy, Holy, Holy, etc." whereas others are entirely devoted to responding with the "Blessed": chh. 24², 35⁴. The Thrice Holy is performed in three parts, viz. (1) "Holy"; (2) "Holy, Holy"; and (3) "Holy, Holy, Holy, is ַחַדָּשׁ שְׁבָא'ֹפ, the whole earth is full of His Glory", ch. 40². (Cf. TB. Hullin, 91 b: "three different companies of angels say the Song every day; one says 'Holy', one 'Holy, Holy' and one 'Holy, Holy, Holy is ה'שְׁבָא'ֹפ'" i.e. in the manner of the chanting in Jewish congregations, vide note on 40².)

E. The import of the Q'ḏuṣṣā.

The significance of the celestial Q'ḏuṣṣā is indicated by the stress laid on its performance at the right time and in the right order, in perfect unity and consonance, and its explicit and implicit connection with the idea of the Kingdom of Heaven. It is the symbol of, and, at the same time, the actual realization of the Kingdom of Heaven in the celestial spheres.

The angels and the four princes at the head of them are rewarded with crowns when they chant the Q'ḏuṣṣā at the right time but punished by extinction if they do not, chh. 40¹⁻³, 47. The chanting of the Q'ḏuṣṣā בְּרִיקוֹנוֹ brings about the unity and harmony which in itself actualizes the existence of the song-uttering companies, ch. 35^{5, 6}. The Q'ḏuṣṣā is the means of the realization of God's sovereignty among the angelic hosts, their conforming to the law of the Kingdom; hence the singing of the Q'ḏuṣṣā by the angels is termed "taking upon themselves the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven", ch. 35⁶.

The realization in the Q'ḏuṣṣā of the Kingdom of Heaven among the angelic orders is implicitly indicated by the numbers 496 and 506, used in ch. 35¹ with reference to the companies of song-uttering angels; 496 and 506 are the numerical equivalents of Malḳuṣ (Kingdom) and Malḳuyyop (Kingdoms) respectively. All the celestial kingdoms are made one whole, the Kingdom of Heaven, whose sovereign is the King of Kings of Kings.

The realization of the Kingdom of Heaven among the angels extends its effects to the physical aspects of the heavens and to the outer realms of the Universe.

"At the time when the ministering angels utter the 'Holy' all the pillars of the heavens and their sockets tremble, the gates of the Halls are shaken, the foundations of the Universe are moved, all the orders of *Rāqīa*⁴, the constellations and the planets, are dismayed, and the globe of the sun and the moon haste away, etc.", ch. 38¹.

This trembling of the planetary regions of the heavens is their expression of acquiescence in the Divine sovereignty, and hence considered as their 'Song' (a sort of spherical harmony), to judge from the quotation in this connection (ch. 38³) of the Scripture passage Job 38⁷: "When the morning stars sang together and all the children of heaven shouted for joy".

The Q^eĎuššā is naturally addressed to "the Holy One, blessed be He". Ch. 48 B² presents a picture of the angels singing the Trisagion and the "Blessed" before the self-existent Divine Names, when these go forth from the Throne of Glory. In ch. 39, on the other hand, the Names are said to go forth from the Throne of Glory at the time of the angelic performance of the Q^eĎuššā as a sort of response from the side of the Divine manifestation to the angels' acknowledgement of His sovereignty. A quotation from "the Book of Enoch" by Moses de Leon represents the Names as themselves chanting the "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom for ever and ever".¹

The notarigons of the Trisagion and the "Blessed" (i.e. קק"ץ and בשכמל') are in ch. 48 B¹ given as Divine Names. This is quite natural from the conception of the Divine Letters and Names obtaining there. See above on "The quasi-physical aspects of the Mærkābā, etc."

In later literature there are frequent speculations on the Divine Names קק"ץ and בשכמל'. See e.g. Šiyyuni, Par. Ha'azinu, S. Midraš Talpiyyoḥ, 78 a.

In the additional ch. 15 B³ the Š^ema' (Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord) is introduced as a Celestial Song. This reflects a later time than the rest of the book, where the Š^ema' is never referred or alluded to. See above on "the origin and date of composition of 3 Enoch", end. And cf. TB. Hullin, 91 b, where the קדוש and the שמע are co-ordinated. (Vide Elbogen, *Jüd. Gottesd.*² p. 63 seq.; L. Ginzberg, Geonica, ii. pp. 78 seqq., 129.)

APPENDIX I

Attempt at a reconstruction of the earliest fragments of the Enoch-Metatron pieces

IT has been hinted above (pp. 42, 79 and 83) that some fragments of a writing or writings on Metatron, representing a stage before the inclusion of the Metatron ideas in the Enoch Literature and the identification of Metatron with Enoch, may be traced in the Enoch-Metatron pieces. Some conjectures concerning the actual passages where such fragments occur may be proffered here.

Almost certain is it that these fragments contained a representation of Metatron as a primordial being. It is suggestive that this idea has been obscured by Metatron's identification with Enoch (cf. p. 78). Hence the functions which in the original traditions were represented as belonging to Metatron (or conferred upon him) from the beginning, are, by the Enoch-Metatron traditions, represented as being conferred upon Enoch, successively, on the occasion of his elevation into a high, celestial being.

Now it may be noticed that chh. 9²-13, if taken out of their context, and relieved of obvious additions, could easily be interpreted as referring to Metatron alone (not to Enoch) as a Celestial being, existing at or before the Creation. Considered by themselves, these chapters contain remarkably prominent references to the cosmical functions and attributes of Metatron. He is coextensive with the whole world (an established feature of the Primordial Man idea), ch. 9; he carries the cosmical letters, ch. 13. It is noticeable, further, that ch. 11 dates the revealing of all secrets to Metatron by the use of the word mē'āz, which, considered by itself, is most naturally translated 'from the beginning' (not 'henceforth', as the redactor of the Enoch-Metatron piece evidently understands it). It need not be said that chh. 10 (the definition of Metatron) and 12 (the promulgation of the little YHWH) fall in naturally with the same representation. From the mutual relation of chh. 10 and 12 it would appear that the word Metatron is a metonym for the real name of the Being in question, viz. the little YHWH. It may hence be surmised that the main part of chh. 9-13 represents a fragment of an original writing on Metatron—the little YHWH.

In 48 c the foisting on to an original tradition on Metatron of the idea of the elevation of Enoch is apparent (cf. above, p. 83). Original Metatron-fragments may perhaps be detected also in 48 c³, 5, 7-9.

These fragments would thus represent the earliest and most important parts of 1 Enoch, from a time not later than the first century A.D. (cf. above, p. 79).

APPENDIX II

The Gnostic references to the 'little-Yao', the possessor of the Divine Name,¹ and the 'Youth'

ON pp. 82, 123 and 141 reference has been made to the occurrence of the expression 'the little Yao' in Pistis Sophia. It will be apposite to reproduce here in full the passage where this expression occurs. We follow Horner's literal translation¹ (Jesus speaks of his first descent from the highest, inmost, celestial realm, the 'first mystery', to the earth):

"... It happened therefore, having come unto the midst of the Rulers of the Æons, I looked down unto the World of the mankind by the command of the First Mystery, I found Elisabet the mother of Iohannes, the baptist, before that that (woman) yet conceived him, I sowed a power into her, this which I received from the little Iao, the good, he who (is) in the middle, that he should prevail to preach in front of us, and prepare my road and baptise in water for forgiving sin. That power therefore, that (is) that which becometh in the body of Iohannes, and also in the Place of the soul of the Rulers, destined to receive it, I found the sound of Helias [i.e. Elijah] the prophet in the Æons of the Sphere, and I took him in, and I took his soul also, I brought it to the Virgin of the Light and she gave it to her Receivers, they brought it unto the Sphere of the Rulers and they cast it into the womb of Elisabet. But the power of the little Iao, he of the middle, and the soul of Helias the prophet, they (are) those which are bound in the body of Iohannes the baptist."

Behind this obscure passage one may easily recognize the idea of the little Yao as a spiritual essence present in the prophet of his age, or in the outstanding saint. The same idea is attested of Metatron in Jewish mystical writings (cf. above, pp. 102 and 123); of the original Man-Saviour-Messenger, also called the 'one-born', the 'unique', the 'beloved Son', in Mandaic Literature, and of the Primal Man—the Spirit of Adam in the Pseudo-Clementine writings and in the systems of the Ebionites and Elxaites (cf. above, p. 123, note 1).

Although the received text of the cited passage seems to speak of 'the power of the little Yao' and 'the soul of Helias' as two different spiritual entities incarnated in John the Baptist, there should scarcely be any doubt that the passage in reality bases upon a tradition, according to which the celestial being possessing the Divine Name and called the 'little' to denote him as an emanation from the inscrutable Deity, is present in, and is the power of, the prophets of the different ages, last present in the prophet Elijah, and then maintained to have again appeared in John the Baptist. The epithet 'little' evidently is meant to denote this being as the lesser manifestation of, the second to, the Deity (the First Mystery).

There are some other instances of the speculations of this figure which show the existence of ideas closely related to the conceptions of the little ΥΗΥΗ-Metatron, the possessor of the Divine Name. These are found in the representations of 'Yao' and 'Yeu'.

1. Yao-Yeu is the Primal Man, the First or 'Great' Man.

Thus says the Second Book of Yeu according to the German translation by Schmidt (Pistis Sophia etc. p. 318):

"Wiederum (πάλιν) werdet ihr in ihr Inneres (referring to the Inmost Recesses or Mysteries) bis zu der Ordnung (τάξις) der Vorhänge (καταπέτασματα), die vor den grossen König des Lichtschatzes (-θησαυρός) gezogen sind, hineinwandern. Sie werden euch ihr grosses Mysterium (μυστήριον), ihr Siegel (σφραγίς) und den grossen Namen des Lichtschatzes (-θησαυρός) geben und sich zurückziehen, bis ihr hineinsetzt und sie durchwandert, und bis ihr zu dem grossen Menschen gelangt, d.h. zu dem König dieses ganzen Lichtschatzes¹ (-θησαυρός), dessen Name 'Yeu' ist... (p. 319)... Dann wird sich Jeû, der Vater des Lichtschatzes (-θησαυρός), über euch freuen etc."

1 Pp. 6, 7, ed. Schmidt, pp. 7, 8; ed. Mead, pp. 9, 10.

2. Yao-Yeû, the First Man, has authority over those who execute judgement and punishment on the spirit of man.

Pistis Sophia, III, ch. 111 (ed. Schmidt, pp. 184, 185; ed. Mead, p. 238; ed. Horner, p. 143):

"... Whenever therefore it should happen, whenever should be completed the time of the punishment of that soul in the judgments of the Rulers of the Middle, is wont the counterfeit spirit (ἀντίμιμον πνεῦμα), it is wont to bring the soul up from all the Places of the Rulers of the Middle, it is wont to take her up before the light of the sun according to the commandment of the first man Ieou: and it is wont to take her (close) to the judge..."

3. Besides supreme judge Yeu, the first man, is called Messenger, Legate, of the First Commandment, and the overseer of the Light.

In Pistis Sophia, III, chh. 126 and 130, in contexts treating of the fate of souls and the places of punishment, the following passages occur:

III, ch. 126 (ed. Schmidt, p. 208; ed. Horner, p. 161):

"These Rulers (ἄρχοντες) therefore of these twelve chambers being within the Dragon of the Darkness... there being a door to every chamber... And there is an Angel of the Height being vigilant unto each of the doors of the chambers. These who Ieou the first man, the overseer (ἐπίσκοπος) of the Light, the Legate (πρεσβευτής) of the First precept, he is he who put them being vigilant unto the dragon that he should not be disorderly with all the Rulers of his chambers which are in him."

III, ch. 130 (ed. Schmidt, pp. 215, 216; ed. Mead, pp. 275, 276; ed. Horner, p. 167):

"And whenever the Ruler should cast out the souls, are wont the Angels of Ieou, the first man, these who are vigilant unto the chambers of that Place, he is wont to hasten immediately and to carry off that soul until he bringeth her (close) to Ieou, the first man, the Legate of the First precept. And is wont Ieou, the first man, he is wont to see the souls and to prove them... But if should prove them Ieou, and find them having completed their cycle... and is wont to have mercy on them Ieou."

In this connection one may recall that, according to 3 Enoch 15 B², Metatron is the head of the defending angels, and, that in Hek. R. 26₈, Metatron is called 'Long-suffering and abundant in Goodness'. Further Ieou, as the Overseer of Light and the Ruler of the Rulers, corresponds to Metatron as the Ruler over all the celestial treasures and over the 70 princes (= ἄρχοντες).

4. The references to Yeu-Yao as the leader or ruler over ἄρχοντες are frequent. Just as Metatron in some Jewish mystical contexts is called 'The Great (one)', so the ἄρχοντες, in this connection, speak of Yao, their leader, as the 'great Yao'. The 'great Yao', hence, is not the unmanifested Deity, but identical, in fact, with the 'little Yao'.

1 This does not refer to the Ineffable Deity, who, whoever in other contexts is represented as the Makranthropos, cf. Leisegang, Die Gnosis, p. 360.

Pistis Sophia, II, ch. 86 (ed. Schmidt, p. 126; ed. Mead, p. 163; ed. Horner, p. 97): "And the Virgin of the Light with the great Captain of the Middle, this who were wont the Rulers of the Æons to call, The great Iao, according to the name of a great Ruler who (is) in their Place".

5. A somewhat different nomenclature is used in some passages, speaking of the 'little Sabaoth', put in relation either to the 'great Sabaoth', or to the 'great Yao'. Also here we have to do with the conception of a second Divine manifestation, a possessor of the Divine Essence. This conception is clearly to be distinguished from the ideas connected with the names Sabaoth, Sabaoth Adamas etc. The term 'the little Sabaoth' is evidently evolved on analogy with the 'little Yao'. Vide especially Pistis Sophia, II, ch. 63 (ed. Schmidt, p. 82; ed. Mead, pp. 103, 104; ed. Horner, p. 63) and Pistis Sophia, IV (v), ch. 140 (ed. Schmidt, p. 241; ed. Mead, pp. 302, 303; ed. Horner, p. 187).¹

It has been recounted above that the (little) Yao-Yeu was represented as the Second Manifestation, also as the Primal or Great Man and the Overseer. It now remains to point out some further epithets of the Second Manifestation.

The Unknown Early Gnostic Work (Unbekanntes altgnostisches Werk), edited by Schmidt (Pistis Sophia etc. pp. 335 seqq.) runs, according to Schmidt's translation:

Ch. 2. "Der zweite Ort (τόπος) ist entstanden, welcher Demiurg (δημιουργός) und Vater und Logos (λόγος) and Quelle (πηγή) und Verstand (νοῦς) und Mensch und Ewiger (αἰδώς) und Unendlicher (ἀπέραντος) genannt werden wird. Dieser ist die Säule (cf. Metatron as 'ammūdā d^a-æmṣā'ipā, above, pp. 122, 123), dieser ist der Aufseher". Ibidem, p. 338, this 'Overseer' is also called 'the Youth'. Thus we have here a similar use of the epithet 'Youth' as in the Jewish mystical works (the Youth Metatron) and in Mandæan sources (Rābā Talya etc., above, p. 68, 69).

6. Lastly attention must be called to the fact that in Pistis Sophia we meet with the same salvation-mystery that we have traced as underlying the representations of Enoch-Metatron, although here not expressed in terms quite as closely resembling 3 Enoch as are those met with in the Mandæan Literature. It may be allowed to quote an elucidating passage, viz. Pistis Sophia, II, ch. 96 (ed. Schmidt, pp. 146 seq.; ed. Horner, pp. 114 seqq.):

1 The original import of these celestial figures cannot be obscured by the systematizations, by which they have been accorded definite positions in various regions of the Universe. Such a system is the following, proceeding from the Inmost or Highest to the lowest regions: (1) the ineffable Deity—Makranthropos, (2) the First Mystery—Logos with the Apatores, Hypertripneumatoi, Protripneumatoi, Tripneumatoi etc., (3) Celestial Beings called 'the 24 mysteries', (4) the Treasury of the Light or the Land of the Light with 12 Saviours and 9 Watchers, (5) the Place of those of the Right under Yeû, Melchisedek, Sabaoth the Great and Good, (6) the Place of the Middle under the Great Yao, the Little Yao, the little Sabaoth and the Virgin of the Light, (7) the Place of the Left, (8) the 12 Æons, (9) the Sphere of Heimarmene, (10) the Terrestrial world; cf. Leisegang, Die Gnosis, pp. 360-363.

"Now therefore also, Amen I (Jesus) say to you, Every man who will receive that mystery of the Ineffable and is complete or fulfilleth (it) in all its types with all its figures, is a man being in the World, but he excelleth all Angels and he will excel more than they all, he is a man being upon the World, but he excelleth all the Archangels, and he will excel more than they all. He is a man being upon the world, but he excelleth all the Tyrants, and he will be exalted over them all. He is a man being upon the World, but he excelleth all the Lords, and he will be exalted over them all. He is a man being upon the World, but he excelleth all the Gods... all the luminaries... all the pure (lights)... all the Triple powers... all the Forefathers... all the Invisibles... the great Forefather Invisible... all those of the Middle... the emanations of the Treasury of the Light... the Confusion... the whole Place of the Treasury and he will be exalted over them all. He is a man being upon the World, but he will become King with me in my kingdom. He is a man being upon the World, but he becometh King in the Light. He is a man being upon the world, but not one (out) of the World is he, and Amen I say to you, That man is I and I am that man..."¹

7. The above is enough to show that the central ideas and figures of the mysticism represented in 3 Enoch and known to the circle behind it has penetrated into the Pistis Sophia and related writings.² This confirms the general conclusions arrived at in the Introduction as to the age and dispersion of the ideas in question. It is noticeable, however, that the name 'Metatron' never occurs in non-Jewish sources, although the conception is clearly attested. This fact renders more weight to the hypothesis put forward above, that the name Metatron actually originated in Jewish circles and should be regarded as a pure Jewish invention, viz. a metonym for the term the 'little $\Upsilon\eta\mu\eta$ '.

8. An explicit allusion to an Enoch Literature, containing speculations on the Divine Name Yao-Yeu (or the possessor of the name (little) Yao-Yeu) is actually found in Pistis Sophia. Thus we read in Pistis Sophia, IV ch. 134 (ed. Horner, p. 178, ed. Schmidt, p. 228, ed. Mead, p. 292; cf. II, ch. 99, ed. Schmidt, p. 158, ed. Horner, p. 123):

"Now, therefore, for the sake of sinners have I rent myself asunder and am come into the world, that I may save them. For even for the righteous, who have never done any evil and have not sinned at all, it is necessary that they should find the mysteries which are in the Books of Yeu, which I have made Enoch write in Paradise, discoursing with him out of the tree of the Gnosis and out of the tree of the Life. And I made him deposit them in the rock Ararad, and set the ruler Kalapataurôth, who is over Skemmut, on whose head is the foot of Yeu, and who surroundeth all æons and Fates—I set up that ruler as watcher over the Books of Yeu on account of the flood,³ and in order that none of the rulers may be envious of them and destroy them..."⁴

² Cf. Irenæus, Adv. Hær. I, 4-8, 30. 5 seqq.

³ Cf. 2 En. rec. B, ch. 33⁸⁻¹² "And give them the books of thy (Enoch) handwriting... as mediator, Enoch, of my general Michael, because thy handwriting and the handwriting of thy fathers... shall not be destroyed till the end of time, and have commanded my angels Orioch and Marioch... and ordered that it perish not in the deluge".

TRANSLATION WITH NOTES

BOOK OF ENOCH BY R. ISHMAEL BEN ELISHA THE HIGH PRIEST

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION: R. Ishmael ascends to heaven to behold the vision of the Merkaba and is given in charge to Metatron

AND ENOCH WALKED WITH GOD: AND HE WAS NOT; FOR GOD TOOK HIM
(Gen. v. 24)

Rabbi Ishmael said:

(1) When I ascended on high to behold ¹the vision of the *Merkaba*¹ and had entered the six Halls, one within the other: (2) as soon as I reached the door of the seventh Hall I stood still in prayer before the Holy One, blessed be He, and, lifting up my eyes on high (i.e. towards the Divine Majesty), I said: (3) "Lord of the Universe, I pray

1-1 so DE. A. 'in my vision the Merkaba'

Chh. i and ii. (Additional, see Introduction, section 7.) Chh. i and ii; which are not extant in BCL, form an introduction to the book, supplying the explanation of the frame of chh. iii-xlviii A, purporting to be revelations and communications given to R. Ishmael by Metatron-Enoch. By the present introductory chapters is indicated that the occasion of these revelations was Rabbi Ishmael's ascent to behold the vision of the Merkaba (the Divine Chariot). R. Ishmael's ascension to heaven and intercourse with Metatron, or the Prince of the Presence, forms an intrinsic part of the Legend of the Ten Martyrs, including the so-called Apocalyptic Fragment (BH. v. 167-169, vi. 19-35; Siddur R. 'Anram Gaon, 3 b, 12 b-13 a; Gaster, RAS's Journal, 1893, pp. 609 seqq.). The R. Ishmael version of Shi'ur Qoma is also framed as a revelation to R. Ishmael from Metatron. See further Introduction, sections 7 c and 10. The 'R. Ishmael' introduced in these writings is, acc. to them, one of the ten martyrs, contemporary with R. 'Aqiba, also one of these martyrs with whom he exchanged opinions and contended teachings on mystical subjects, was a High Priest and the son of a High Priest, hence in possession of the Great Divine Name, by force of which he was able to ascend to heaven. The time of the martyrdom was the beginning of the second century.

Behold the vision of the Merkaba. Identical expression: Hek. R. BH. iii. 83. entered the six Halls etc. For the conception of the seven Halls cf. note on ch. xviii. 3 and chh. x. 2, xvi. 1, xxxvii. 1, xxxviii. 1, xlviii c 8 and esp. Hek. R. The Halls are situated in the highest of the seven heavens. The Merkaba and the Throne of Glory are, acc. to the earlier conceptions represented here, located to the seventh Hall. For later developed conceptions cf. Zohar, i. 38 a-45 b, ii. 245 a-269 a; Pardes Rimonim, Gate xxiv, and Intr. R. 'Aqiba also narrates his ascent to the seven Halls, in Pirge R. Ishmael, ch. xviii (Bodl. MICH. 175, foll. 20 a seq.). one within the other, lit. 'chamber within chamber', the Halls being arranged in concentric circles. Cf. Mass. Hek. iv ("the seven Halls, one within the other").

thee, that the merit of Aaron, the son of Amram, the lover of peace and pursuer of peace, who received the crown of priesthood from Thy Glory on the mount of Sinai, be valid for me in this hour, so that *Qafsiel*², the prince, and the angels with him may not get power over me nor throw me down from the heavens”.

(4) Forthwith the Holy One, blessed be He, sent to me Metatron, his Servant (Ebed) the angel, the Prince of the Presence, and he, spreading his wings, with great joy came to meet me so as to save me from their hand.

(5) And he took me by his hand in their sight, saying to me: “Enter in peace before the high and exalted King³ and behold the picture of the Merkaba”.

(6) Then I entered the seventh⁴ Hall, and he led me to the camp(s)⁵ of Shekina and placed me before ⁶the Holy One, blessed be He⁶, to behold the Merkaba.

(7) As soon as the princes of the Merkaba and the flaming Seraphim perceived me, they fixed their eyes upon me. Instantly trembling and shuddering seized me and I fell down⁷ and was benumbed by the radiant image of their eyes and the splendid appearance of their faces; until the Holy One, blessed be He, rebuked them, saying:

(8) “My servants, my Seraphim, my Kerubim and my Ophannim! Cover ye your eyes before Ishmael,⁸ my son,⁸ my friend, my beloved one and my glory, that he tremble not nor shudder!” (9) Forthwith Metatron the Prince of the Presence, came and restored my spirit

The forms Qafsiel and Qaspiel interchange. Qaspiel is one of the guardians of the seventh Hall acc. to Hek. R. xx. Cf. ib. xv and xix. Zohar, ii. 248 b. The form Qafsiel is attested in Zohar, iii. 3 b and S. Razel, 4 b. For the guardians of the Halls, see ch. xviii. 3. The highest class of the Merkaba-angels is possibly, acc. to the present representation, the Chayyoth ‘beneath and above the Throne’ of vs. 12. Cover ye your eyes. Cf. ch. xxii v 5 seq.

(9) Cf. Ap. Abrah. x (ed. box): “Go, Jaol, and by means of my ineffable Name raise me yonder man and strengthen him from his trembling”.

and put me upon my feet. (10) After that (moment) there was not in me strength enough to say a song before the Throne of Glory of the glorious King, the mightiest of all kings, the most excellent of all princes, until after the hour had passed.

(11) After one hour (had passed) the Holy One, blessed be He, opened to me the gates of Shekina, the gates of Peace, the gates of Wisdom, the gates of Strength, the gates of Power, the gates of Speech (Dibbur), the gates of Song, the gates of Qēdushsha, the gates of Chant.

(12) And he enlightened my eyes and my heart by words of psalm, song, praise, exaltation, thanksgiving, extolment, glorification, hymn and eulogy⁹. And as I opened my mouth, uttering a song before ¹⁰the Holy One, blessed be He¹⁰, the Holy Chayyoth beneath and above the Throne of Glory answered and said: "HOLY" and "BLESSED BE THE GLORY OF YHWH FROM HIS PLACE!" (i.e. chanted the Qēdushsha).

CHAPTER II

The highest classes of angels make inquiries about R. Ishmael, which are answered by Metatron

(1) the eagles of the Merkaba. One of the four Chayyoth is described as 'Eagle' in accordance with Ezek. i. 10, x. 14. The plural 'eagles' can be accounted for on the assumption that the tradition here represented holds the view that there existed two (or several) classes of Chayyoth. This may perhaps be hinted at in the preceding chapter, vs. 12: 'the Chayyoth beneath and above the Throne'. "The higher and the lower Chayyoth": Zohar frequ. "Two eagles": Zohar, iii. 170 b.

"Indeed, this one is worthy to behold the Merkaba". ⁵And they said⁵: "Happy is the people that is in such a case!" (Ps. cxliv. 15).

Chh. iii-xvi. The 'Enoch-Metatron piece'. See Introduction, sections 5 and 8.

Ch. iii, while stating that Metatron has seventy names 'corresponding to (the number of) nations of the world' gives the distinction to the name 'Youth' (Na'ar) as being that by which he is called by his 'King', the Holy One. Hereby it forms the introduction to the following chapter which is framed as an explanation of this name as applied to Metatron—the explanation being acc. to that chapter, vs. 10, that Metatron, as identical with Enoch, the son of Jared (Gen. v. 18, 21-24) who was taken up to the heavens and made an angel-prince, is as 'a youngster and a youth among the other angels and princes (existent from the days of Creation) in days months and years'.

(2) I have seventy names corresponding to the seventy tongues (BCL: nations) of the world. The statement ascribing seventy names to Metatron, occurs also ch. xlviii. D 1, 9 et frequ. (cf. ch. xxix). The seventy names of Metatron are here connected with the seventy tongues (nations) of the world which represent the world in its entirety, i.e. their reason of existence is conceived of as founded on Metatron's functions as concerned with the nations of the world or with the affairs of the world as a whole. Hence the passage reflects the tradition of Metatron being the Prince of the World. Since the seventy nations are represented in heaven and all of them ⁴are based upon⁴ the name ⁵Metatron, angel of the Presence⁵; but ⁶my King⁶ calls me 'Youth' (Na'ar)".

4-4 BCL: 'are similar to' 'are a reflection of' 5-5 B: 'of my King and my Creator' C: 'my King, the Holy One, blessed be He' DE: 'the King of the Kings of kings' L: 'kings' (corr. for 'my king') 6-6 L: 'kings' (corr. for 'my king') by the seventy (or seventy-two) 'princes of kingdoms' (cf. on chh. xvii. 8 and xxx. 2), the Prince of the World is depicted as the prince and ruler of these (see ch. xxx) and this function is also assigned to Metatron: chh. x. 3, xvi. 2, xlviii c 9 (cf. notes ad loca). In the last-mentioned passage, ch. xlviii c 9, Metatron's rulership over the seventy princes is expressly connected with his character of bearer of seventy names and he is there also pictured as wielding executive and governing power over the world and the nations through the seventy princes as agencies. Cf. YR. i. 57 b (quotation from Emeq ha-mMelek): "Metatron is the Prince of the World, for he distributes maintenance to the princes of the nations of the world". In the rest of the present book Metatron's rulership is mainly presented in its celestial aspect; he is the prince, ruler and judge of the children of heaven, only implicitly brought into connection with the things terrestrial. Nowhere in this book is he definitely stated to be 'the Prince of the World'. This term is not used by the present Enoch-Metatron section and in the latter part of the book the 'Prince of the World' appears as different from Metatron (see chh. xxx. 2 and xxxviii. 3 and notes).

all of them are based upon the name of my King, the Holy One (acc. to the readings of BCDE[L] and the reading implied by the opening words of ch. iv: 'Why art thou called by the name of thy Creator, by seventy names?'). This is another aspect of the origin and import of Metatron's seventy names: they are a reflection of the seventy names of the Most High (cf. the reading of BCL). The same is stated in chh. xlviii c 9, xlviii d 1, 5, appearing also in the form of the dictum 'called by the name of His Master, for "my name is in him" (Ex. xxiii. 21)' and in the ascribing to Metatron of the name 'the lesser YHWH': chh. xii. 5, xlviii d 1. There are two lines of ideas to be distinguished here: (1) Metatron's names are conceived of as 'based upon' the Divine Name κατ' ἑξοχὴν, the Tetragrammaton, which simply means that the different names contain the YHWH or YaH as component part. This is not a trait exclusive to the Metatron-conception, but applied to various other high princes and angels, cf. ch. x. 3 and esp. ch. xxix. 1. (2) Acc. to the other line of thought the seventy names of Metatron are actually one by one the counterparts, images, reflections of the seventy names of the Godhead (cf. ch. xlviii d 5: 'seventy names of His by which they call the King of Kings of kings in the high heavens'). This is an exclusive feature of the Metatron-picture, as is also the name 'the Lesser YHWH'.

based upon the name Metatron. This strange expression which is attested only in A occurs also Hek. Zot. Bodd. MICH. 9, fol. 69 b, where it signifies that the divers names are to be understood as referring to the angel-prince known as 'Metatron' (the names given there are such as nos. 6, 46, 84 of ch. xlviii d 1 and 'Pisqon, Sigron, Zebodiel etc.'). The expression might, however, also refer to variants of the name 'Metatron', e.g. Mitatron, Mittron, Mitton, Mitmon, 'Atmon', 'Otron', etc.; cf. ch. xlviii d 1 and Yalqut Re'ubeni, 56 b. The reading of BCDE is presumably correct here. Cf. above.

my King calls me Youth (Na'ar). The name Na'ar is regularly ascribed to Metatron; cf. on ch. xlviii d 1. It is also applied to the Prince of the World, TB. Yeb. 16 b. The derivations and explanations of the name differ. The present section (cf. iv. 1, 10), as has already been pointed out, explains it from Metatron's identity with Enoch. In TB. Yeb. ib. the name 'Na'ar, Youth' is deduced from Ps. xxxvii. 25: "I have been a youth and now am old", which is made to refer to the Prince of the World (who was young in the days of Creation). The Tosaphoth on Metatron is identical with Enoch who was translated to heaven at the time of the Deluge

R. Ishmael said:

(1) I asked Metatron and said to him: “¹Why art thou called¹ by the name of thy Creator, by seventy names? Thou art greater than all the princes, higher than all the angels, beloved more than all the servants, honoured above all the mighty ones in kingship, greatness and glory: why do they call thee ‘Youth’ in the high heavens?”

(2) He answered and said to me: “²Because I am² Enoch, the son of Jared. (3) For when the generation of the flood sinned and were this passage state that Enoch-Metatron and the Prince of the World are both called Na’ar, yet they must not, acc. to the Tosaphists, be identified: Ps. xxxvii. 25 refers to the Prince of the World only, not to Enoch-Metatron. This of course implies that the verse in question was acc. to one tradition referred to Metatron (in fact Metatron is, apparently with reference to Ps. xxxvii. 25, described both as ‘Na’ar, Youth’ and ‘Zāqēn, Old, Eldest’; cf. Yalquṭ Re’ubeni, i. 60 a). See further the Introduction.

In Zohar, i. fol. 223 b et al. the appellation Na’ar as given to Enoch-Metatron is derived from Prov. xxii. 6, ‘Chānōk la-nNa’ar’, which is interpreted: ‘Enoch was made (the) Na’ar’. The present verse is quoted in Zohar, i. 37 b, from ‘Book of Enoch’.

Ch. iv. This chapter is framed as an explanation of the name ‘Na’ar, Youth’ as applied to Metatron. It relates how Metatron is Enoch of Gen. v who was removed to heaven and there made into an angel-prince. The reason of his translation was the sinfulness of the generation of the Flood to which he was to bear witness to future generations and in the world to come. His testimony was to justify the destruction of all living beings in that generation through the Flood. The high angels ‘Azza, ‘Uzza and ‘Azzael enter protest against Enoch’s translation, but God rebukes them and elevates Enoch into a ruler and prince over them.

(1) Why art thou called by the name of thy Creator etc. This part of the question is not answered in the chapter. It is to be considered merely as a repetition of the statement of the foregoing chapter. The real question is: Why do they call thee ‘Youth’ in the high heavens?

(2) Because I am Enoch the son of Jared. The identity of Enoch and Metatron is proclaimed in Targ. Yer. in the well-known passage to Gen. v. 24. There the ground for identification seems to have been the function of Scribe assigned both to Enoch and Metatron. For Enoch as Scribe cf. e.g. Yub. iv. 23, 2 En. liii. 2; for Metatron, TB. Chag. 15 a. This function of Enoch-Metatron is not emphasized in the present book, although the office of ‘witness’ of the sins of the generation in its original conception is probably connected with that of ‘scribe’; see the next verse.

(3) when the generation of the flood sinned and were confounded in their deeds, saying unto God: Depart from us. . . (Job xxi. 14). The sins of the generation of the Deluge are not defined as to their nature, except as a rebellion. Acc.

confounded in their deeds, saying unto God: 'Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways (Job xxi. 14)', then the Holy One, blessed be He, removed me from their midst to be a witness against them in the high heavens to all the inhabitants of the world, that ³they may not say: 'The Merciful One is cruel³'.

to chh. v, vi the sin of the generation that caused the removal of the Shekina and with the Shekina, of Enoch, was idolatry; cf. on ch. v. 6. The expression 'Depart from us etc. (Job xxi. 14)' is used already in Jub. xi. 6 in connection with the idolatry of the early times (the name 'Seroh = Suru: depart' or saru). Cf. Gen. R. xxxi. 6: the 'chamas (violence)' of which the earth was filled in the time of the Flood acc. to Gen. vi. 13, comprised the three cardinal sins, adultery, idolatry and bloodshed. to be a witness against them. The idea of Enoch's removal to heaven in order to be a witness against the sins of mankind is attested in Jub. iv. 21 seqq. His function of witness is there made the essential part of his office as Scribe: "(22) And he (Enoch) testified to the Watchers who had sinned with the daughters of men... And Enoch testified against them all. (23) And he was taken from amongst the children of men, ... into the Garden of Eden... and behold there he writes down the condemnation and the judgement of the world, and all the wickedness of the children of men. (24) And on account of it God brought the waters of the flood upon all the land". (Enoch's testimony brings about the decree of destruction, contrast the present chapter.) The same idea of Enoch as witness in heaven against man's sin persists in later traditions; cf. YR. i. 57 a (perhaps dependent upon the present fragment): "'When the generation of the flood sinned God took him (Enoch) to be a witness against them': (so that if anyone might say:) if man sinned that was because he was created from the four elements or because his generation were wicked men, God would answer: Behold, Enoch was also in a generation of wicked men, and he also was created of the four elements (scil. yet he did not sin)".

that they may not say: 'The Merciful One is cruel. (4) What sinned all those multitudes etc.' Enoch-Metatron is to bear witness to the justice of God's decree of destroying not only mankind, but all living beings, including the cattle and the wild beasts, in the waters of the Flood. How Enoch's testimony was to refute the charge of cruelty that might otherwise be raised against God is not further explained. No answer is given to the question: 'What did the cattle, beasts and birds sin?' The answer is probably to be understood thus: even the animals were implicated in the wickedness of the generation. The question is noted in Rabbinic. Cf. Gen. R. xxviii. 8, where it is stated that in the generation of the Flood even the animals sinned: "as it is written (Gen. vi. 12): 'all flesh had corrupted its way upon the earth'. 'All men' is not written here, but 'all flesh' Yochanan): “‘all flesh had corrupted its way upon the earth’; this means to say, that the cattle defiled themselves with the beasts and the beasts with the cattle and all of them with men and men with all of them”. Parallel is Pirke de R. El’ezer, ch. xiv: “(with reference to the curse put upon the earth on account of Adam’s sin) If Adam sinned, what was the sin of the earth? Only this, that the earth did not denounce the evil doings of man”. In other connections we find the very question repudiated as an undue criticism of God’s ways; so with reference to the narrative of 1 Sam. xv. 3 and Deut. xxi. 4 in TB. Yoma, 22 b and Eccl. R. vii. 33: “(in the former case) If the men had sinned, what were the sins of the women, what the sins of the infants, the cattle, oxen and asses? (and in the latter case) If man sinned, what was the sin of the cattle?” No answer is given but a quotation by Bath Qōl of Eccl. vii. 16, “Be not righteous over much”, explained thus: “Do not think that thou canst judge about what is just and unjust better than thy Creator!” Cf. also TB. Shabb. 54 b, 55 a.

(6) three of the ministering angels, ‘Uzza, ‘Azza and ‘Azrael. The three angels, ‘Azza, ‘Uzza and ‘Azrael are in the present chapter represented as belonging to the order of ministering angels, inhabitants of the high heavens, whereas acc. to ch. v they are evil agencies, inspirers of idolatry. They are usually mentioned as two only (‘Azza and ‘Azrael, ‘Uzza and ‘Azziel, etc.), not as three. (The readings of CE and YR, in fact, have ‘Azza and ‘Azrael only.) Cf. however 2 En. xviii. 4 and note on v. 9 (important parallel).

The names are in all probability of an early origin: they can be traced to 1 En., to gnostic works (see Introduction) and in Talmud. The meaning of the words is pellucid: Strength, Might-God, Divine Power. Most of the preserved traditions represent them as fallen angels. They are attached to the speculations centring round the mystical piece Gen. vi. 1-4. In 1 En. vi. 7 ‘Asael’ is one of the leaders of the angels who fell and led mankind astray into fornication and idolatry. The heavens, saying before the Holy One, blessed be He: "9 Said not the Ancient Ones (First Ones) rightly before Thee: 10 'Do not create man! '10" 11 The Holy One, blessed be He, answered and said unto conception of 'Azza and 'Azrael as fallen angels evidently underlies the dictum, attributed to the school of R. Ishmael, recorded in TB. Yoma, 67 a, acc. to which 'Azazel of Lev. xvi. is to be considered as a composition of 'Azza and 'Azrael, 'for Azazel atoned for the sins of these'. Rashi, ad locum, connects 'Azza and 'Azrael with 'the sons of God' in Gen. vi. 2 (cf. 1 En. vi and Charles' note on 1 En. vi. 6).

In Zohar the same view is repeatedly set forth. See vol. i. 19 b, 23 a, 25 a b, 37 a with Tosefta, 55 a, 58 a, 126 a, vol. iii. 194 a, 208 a and 'Idra Rabba. 'Azza and 'Azrael (in this form they are always referred to in Zohar) are the angels who had been thrown down from heaven 'from their state of holiness', and after that went astray with the daughters of men (Nd'amah, Gen. iv. 22) and also taught mankind sorceries (cf. ch. v. 9)—being now definitely unable to leave the lower regions (ctr. the present verse). A slightly modified version of the idea is found in 'Idra Rabba: "'Azza and 'Azrael are the 'giants' (Gen. vi. 6), not the sons of God (ib. 2)"—this is perhaps a reminiscence of the distinction emphasized in the Book of Jubilees between the sons of Elohim and the demons, the sons of the sons of the Elohim—"for the sons of God were not on earth but Azza and Azrael were on earth". The same is quoted from Midrash Ruth by Siuni, in YR, i. 61 b.

BH. iv. 127-8, instead of 'Azza and 'Azrael', has 'Shamchazai and 'Azrael'. Shamchazai is of course identical with the Semiazaz or Semjaza of 1 En. vi. 7, viii. 3 (cf. Charles, ad loca).

In the present chapter 'Azza, 'Uzza and 'Azrael are represented as high angels, accusing man before God on account of his sin: 'Said not the first ones rightly before Thee, Create thou not man?' One of the traditional statements about 'Azza and 'Azrael in the adduced references, in fact, reveals the view that the fall of these angels was caused by their accusing man before God. Thus e.g. in a citation in Yalqut Re'ubeni, i. 61 a, with reference to Gen. vi. 2: "the 'sons of God' are 'Azza and 'Azza'el who laid accusations (against man) before their Master and he threw them down from the holy place on high... and they defiled themselves with the daughters of men", and ib. (from Kanfe Yona), also with reference to Gen. vi. 2: "'Azza and 'Azrael are the angels that laid accusations against man and said: 'Why didst Thou create him? For he is going to sin and to provoke Thee'. The Holy One, blessed be He, said to them: 'Behold! If ye go down to the lower world, ye will sin as he', and He cast them down. And they are the 'sons of God' who took themselves wives from among the daughters of men... and after they had fallen into sin... they were no longer angels" and when they desired to return to their former place, they were unable to do so. Essentially the same is found in Zohar, i. 23 a, 37 a Tosefta. In Zohar they are even identified with 'the first ones' who opposed man's creation in the beginning.

This tradition harmonizes the two views represented in chh. iv and v respectively: the one regarding these angels as belonging to the celestial household, the other as evil agencies, demons inspiring idolatry. In their present setting the two views cannot, however, be harmonized: acc. to ch. v 'Azza, 'Uzza and 'Azrael are evil agencies (that is, acc. to the harmonizing view, fallen angels) before Enoch's translation to the heavens, acc. to ch. iv, on the other hand, they are still high angels in the presence of the Holy One, at the time when Enoch is taken up to heaven. Furthermore, the writer of ch. iv evidently does not think of the angels in question as fallen angels at all, to judge from the following expression: "he (Enoch-Metatron) them: "I have made and I will bear, yea, I will carry and will deliver". (Is. xlv. 4.)

(7) As soon as they saw me, they said before Him: "Lord of the Universe! What is this one that he should ascend to the height of heights? Is not he one from among the sons of [the sons of] those who perished in the days¹² of the Flood? ¹³"What doeth he in the Rasia?"¹³

(8) Again, the Holy One, blessed be He, answered and said to them: "What are ye, that ye enter and speak in my presence? I delight in this one more than in all of you, and hence he shall be a shall be a prince and a ruler over you in the high heavens", and from the representation in vs. 9: the angels yield and pay Enoch-Metatron due homage.

There are instances of traditions according with the view of the present chapter, representing 'Azza, 'Uzza or 'Azzael ('Azziel) as high angels and princes, with permanent membership in the Celestial Court. They are then often connected with the proceedings of Judgement. Thus acc. to Sib. Or. ii. 217, 'Azziel is one of five angels who lead the souls of men to judgement. Acc. to S. ha-Chesheq (Add. 27120), fol. 12 b, 'Azzael is one of the "10 heads of the Great Sanhedrin in heaven". Acc. to a quotation from "a commentary on Ma'areketh ha-'Elohuth" in Yalqut Re'ubeni, i. 55 a, 'Azza is the head of the angels of Justice, 'Uzziel the head of the angels of Mercy (cf. ch. xxxiii), but both under the authority of Metatron. S. Razi'el, 40 a represents 'Azzael as one of the seven angels near God's Throne, cf. ib. 40 b, and Hek. R. BH. iii. 96, 99, introduces 'Uzziel as one of the guardians of the fifth Hall. Cf. S. Razi'el, 27 b.

Said not the First Ones rightly before Thee: Do not create man! For the angels as opposing man's creation cf. e.g. Gen. R. viii. 5. Striking is here the parallel TB. Sanhedrin, 38 a: when God was about to create man, he first created a company of angels whom he asked whether they consented to man's creation or not. Upon being told of man's future deeds, they said "Let not man be created"—and were consequently consumed by the Divine Fire. The same happened with another company that God called into being immediately after. But the third acquiesced and remained in life. However, as soon as they "came to the men of the generation of the flood and of the generation of the dispersion whose deeds were confounded (cf. vs. 3) they said before him: 'Master of the World! Said not the first ones rightly before Thee: Create thou not man?' whereupon God answered with the first part of the scriptural verse laid in God's mouth also here: Is. xlv. 4". The same narrative is echoed in Ma'yan Chokma, BH. i. 60 seq. in God's rebuke of Hadarniel. In the quoted Talmud-passage the expression 'first ones' naturally refers to the first created company of angels, here it simply means the angels present at man's Creation and opposing it. For the expression 'first ones' used of certain angels cf. also TB. Ber. 5 a (of Mikael).

(7) Is not he one from among the sons of those who perished in the days of the Flood? This seems to imply, not only that Enoch was counted as one of the men of the generation of the Flood, but even as living after the Flood or in the days of the Flood, a view which of course entirely disagrees with the chronological system of Gen. v, vii. 11, acc. to which Enoch disappeared from earth more than 600 years (669) before the Flood.

(8) What are ye etc. God's answer in the same expressions as those of the angels. that ye enter and speak. Even the highest angels are not allowed to enter before God's presence, with some distinguished exceptions (cf. the conception prince and a ruler over you in the high heavens." (9) Forthwith all stood up and went out to meet me, prostrated themselves before me and said: "Happy art thou and happy is thy father¹⁴ for thy Creator doth favour thee".

This probably is meant to refer not only to 'Azza, 'Uzza and 'Azrael, but to the ministering angels with them or else their suite of angels. Notice how CE in vs. 6 represents 'Azza and 'Azrael not as individual angels but as an order of angels, just as in the old tradition of 1 En. vi seqq. Asael was only one of the leaders of a multitude of angels. Metatron a ruler over 'Azza and 'Azrael: cf. quotation Yalqut Re'ubeni, i. 55 a, referred to above, a ruler over the princes and angels in general: cf. ch. x. 3, 4.

(9) Happy art thou and happy is thy father. This beatitude echoes the conception of "the Zakut of a Pious Posterity" (Schechter's expression, Aspects, pp. 195 seqq.). The merits of the sons retroact upon and determine the fate of the fathers.

(10) because I am small and a youth among them. This is the answer to the opening question of the present chapter. Cf. note ib. The angels are existent from the days of Creation. Cf. above.

Ch. v. This chapter treats of the removal of Shekina from earth on account of the idolatry of Enosh and his generation. It contains no definite reference to the subject proper of the present section: Enoch(-Metatron) and his translation to heaven. Furthermore, it represents a different tradition from that of ch. iv as to the nature of the angels 'Azza, 'Uzza and 'Azrael. The connection with the context is, however, established by ch. vi. 1, 3, which associate the translation of Enoch to heaven with the removal of Shekina from earth. The chapter may therefore in its present position be considered as an introduction to ch. vi, offering a preparatory explanation of the reason and circumstances of the removal of Shekina, there alluded to. As regards the relationship between ch. iv on one hand and chh. v and vi on the other, it might be safe to assume that they represent respectively two different lines of tradition as to the translation of Enoch: one (ch. iv) connecting it with the sins of the generation of the flood of which he was to bear testimony to coming generations, the other (chh. v, vi) holding the view that Enoch—as the the first Adam from the Garden of Eden (and onwards), Shekina was dwelling upon a Kerub under the Tree of Life.

(2) And the ministering angels ²were gathering together² and going down from heaven in parties, ³from the Raqia' in companies and from the heavens in camps³ ⁴to do His will in⁴ the whole world.

(3) And the first man and ⁵his generation⁵ were sitting outside the gate of the Garden to behold the radiant appearance of the Shekina.

2-2 B: 'were entering' CL: 'were assembling' DE: 'were leaping' 3-3 BCL: 'and in companies and camps from Raqia'' E om. 4-4 DE: 'to roam, to fly over' 5-5 EL: 'and Eve' only righteous man of his generation—was taken up on the occasion of Shekina's return to the heavens. The object of Enoch's translation, acc. to the latter view, was apparently not his function of witness, but is expressed by the last words of ch. vi: 'I have taken him as a tribute from my world' or 'as my only reward for all my labour with the first generations of the world'.

(1) From the day...Shekina was dwelling etc. This represents the frequently attested idea that the original abode of the Shekina was among the 'terrestrials, ha-tachtonim' (Cant. R. vi, Num. R. xii. 5; cf. Abelson, Immanence of God in Rabbinical Literature, pp. 117-139). The specific view of the present passage is, that Shekina remained on earth after the first Adam's fall until the rise of idolatry in the generation of Enosh. Acc. to Cant. R. vi (see Abelson, op. cit. p. 136) Shekina was removed from earth already with Adam's sin; to the first heaven, and then in six subsequent stages corresponding to the six following epochs of men's degradation from heaven to heaven (the epochs are acc. to that passage: the sins of Cain, of the generation of Enoch, of the generation of the Flood, of the Dispersion, of the Sodomites and of the Egyptians in the days of Abraham). Acc. to Num. R. xii. 5 (in a dictum attributed to R. Simeon ben Yochai) the Shekina was dwelling on earth in the beginning, was removed with the sin of Adam, and returned with the erection of the Tabernacle. Ib. (acc. to Rab) the Shekina is also said never to have taken up its abode on earth until the erection of the Tabernacle. Cf. on vs. 13. The Shekina here stands for the manifestation of God, to all intents and purposes identical with the manifestation on 'the Throne of Glory': when on earth Shekina is no longer in heaven, see vs. 11.

upon a Kerub. Cf. chh. xxii. 12, 16, xxiv. 1, 17. upon a Kerub under the Tree of Life. Cf. Apoc. Mosis, xxii. 3, 4: "When God appeared in Paradise mounted on the chariot of His Cherubim with the angels proceeding before him... And the Throne of God was fixed where the Tree of Life was". Here the Kerub takes the place of the Throne of Glory which is left in the highest of the heavens, acc. to vs. 11.

(2) And the ministering angels were... going down from heaven in companies etc. Cf. Apoc. Mosis, xvii. 1, xxii. 3 seq. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter 'Aleph': "when the first Adam beheld the Sabbath, he opened his mouth in praise of the Holy One: then the ministering angels went down from heaven in companies..."; ib.: (in the world to come) "the angels will come down in companies from heaven to the Garden of Eden". And ib. BH. iii. 60: "(when God had created Eve and brought her to Adam) all the heavenly household went down... to the Garden of Eden". Cf. Yer. Chag. 77 a, 4 Ex. vi. 3.

(3) the first man and his generation were sitting outside the gate of the Garden to behold the radiant appearance of the Shekina. Although expelled from the Garden of Eden Adam and his generation still partake of the splendour of Shekina. Cf. TB. Ber. 17 a: "(in the world to come) the righteous will be sitting with crowns

✓(4) For the splendour of the Shekina traversed the world from one end to the other ⁶(with a splendour) 365,000 times (that) of the globe of the sun⁶. And everyone who ⁷made use of⁷ the splendour of the Shekina, on him no flies and no gnats did rest, neither was he ill nor suffered he any pain. No demons got power over him, neither were they able to injure him.

(5) When the Holy One, blessed be He, went out and went in: ⁸from the Garden to Eden, from Eden to the Garden, from the Garden to Raqia' and from Raqia' to the Garden of Eden⁸ then all and everyone beheld the splendour⁹ of His Shekina and they on their heads and enjoy the splendour of the Shekina". The idea of the radiance of Shekina is closely related to that of the heavenly light, of which the light created on the first day was an emanation and which is reserved for the righteous in the world to come. Cf. next vs.

(4) The splendour of the Shekina traversed the world from one end to the other... And everyone who made use of the splendour of the Shekina... No demons got power over him. For a discussion of the conception of the 'splendour (ziw) of the Shekina' see Abelson, op. cit. pp. 85-89. [The splendour of the Shekina is here apparently conceived of as a light-substance protecting from illnesses, from the power of demons and from everything evil and unclean.] For the idea of the splendour of Shekina as protecting from demons cf. Num. R. xii. 3. It is also conceived of as a sustaining substance, a spiritual food, both for the angels and the saints. TB. Ber. 17 a (see Abelson, op. cit. p. 87; Kohler, Jewish Theology, p. 198). Yalqut on Ps. viii (TB. Shabbat, 88 a): "when God spread the splendour of Shekina over Moses the angels could not burn him". Yalqut on Ps. xlv: "the righteous will feed on the splendour of Shekina and... they will receive no injury". 'The splendour of Shekina' is further used as an attribute of honour and glorification for the highest angels; cf. ch. xxii. 7, 13. Cf. 4 Ex. vii. 42, 122, Rev. xxi. 23 (notes in box, Ezra-Apocalypse, pp. 85, 127, 161). [The conception of the splendour of the Shekina is sometimes seen under the aspect of the 'first light of Creation' or as 'the uncreated light of the Divine Presence' of which the first light is an emanation: this light is referred to in similar terms as those used of 'the splendour of the Shekina'.] Cf. in the present connection Gen. R. xi. 2, xii. 5: "in the light which God created on the first day (so Gen. R. xi. 2; ib. xii. 5: the light by which the world was created) the first Adam saw from one end of the world to the other... but as soon as the Holy One, blessed be He, beheld the deeds of the generation of Enosh, of the Deluge and of the Dispersion he took it away and treasured it... for the righteous in the world to come". Sim. TB. Chag. 12 a.

(5) went out and went in: from the Garden to Eden. The Garden of Eden is the greater whole of which Eden is a part: Gen. R. xv, the Garden and Eden are two distinct things: TB. Ber. 34 b. For the expression 'went out and went in etc.' cf. the account of Shekina's ten different journeys in the Temple in Lam. R. Pröem. 25. The idea is probably deduced from Gen. iii. 8 ("and they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the Garden"): the passage is interpreted in this sense in Num. R. xiii. 4 (although there God's Shekina is said to have had its permanent abode in heaven, from where it went down and went up again).

¹⁰were not injured¹⁰; (6) until ¹¹the time of¹¹ the generation of Enosh ¹²who was the head of all idol worshippers of the world¹². (7) And ¹³what did the generation of Enosh do?¹³ They went from one end of the world to the other, and each one brought silver, gold, precious stones and pearls in ¹⁴heaps like unto mountains and hills¹⁴ making idols out of them throughout all the world. And they erected the idols in every quarter of the world: the size of each idol was 1000 parasangs. (8) And they brought down the sun, the moon, planets and constellations, and placed them before the idols on their right hand and on their left, to attend them even as they attend¹⁵ the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is written (1 Kings xxii. 19): "And all the host of heaven was standing by him on his right hand and on his left".

(9) What power was in them that they were able to bring them down? They would not have been able to bring them down but for ¹⁶'UZZA, 'AZZA and 'AZZIEL¹⁶ who taught them ¹⁷sorceries whereby they brought them down and made use of them¹⁷.

(6) until the time of the generation of Enosh who was the head of all idol worshippers of the world. The generation of Enosh is here specifically connected with idolatry. In Rabbinic the cardinal sins of idolatry, adultery and bloodshed (and the calling of God's name in vain and sorceries) are often promiscuously referred to the generations of Enosh, of the Deluge and of the Dispersion. But cf. Lam. R. Prēm. 24: "the generation of Enosh who were the heads of idol-worshippers".

(7) And they erected the idols in every quarter of the world: the size of each idol was 1000 parasangs. This as well as the following vs. seems to presuppose the view of the men of this generation as being of immeasurably higher stature than those of later generations, an idea occasionally met with in Rabbinic.

(8) And they brought down the sun, the moon, planets and constellations. There is perhaps here a covert trace of an original representation of the generation of Enosh as worshippers of the sun and the planets. In the present form the heavenly bodies are made the attendants of the idols: they placed them before the idols to attend them like as they attend the Holy One, blessed be He. The idea is to illustrate how man put the idols in all respects in the same place as that which rightly belonged to God alone. Yalqut to Gen. iv. 26 quotes an account of the deeds of the generation of Enosh of a similar character as vs. 7 and 8 here (idols of copper, brass, iron, wood, stone).

(9) What power was in them. . . 'Uzza, 'Azza and 'Azziel who taught them sorceries, whereby they brought them down. The quotation Šūmī, Yalqut Re'ubenī, i. 53 a, has 'Shemchazai and Azzael' (so also BH. iv. 127-128, Yalq. Šīm. Gen. xlv; cf. on the following vs.). On 'Azza, 'Uzza and 'Azzael see on ch. iv. 6. Here they are represented as evil agencies, teaching men sorceries and thereby supporting or rather inspiring the idolatry. The tradition here set forth is of course

(10) In that time the ministering angels brought charges (against them) before the Holy One, blessed be He, saying before him: "Master of the World! What hast thou to do with the children of men? As it is written (Ps. viii. 4) 'What is man (Enosh) that thou art mindful of him?' 'Mah Adam' is not written here, but 'Mah Enosh', for he (Enosh) is the head of the idol worshippers. (11) Why hast thou left a direct descendant of that which has found expression in the pseudepigraphal writings, esp. 1 En. vi, vii, viii: Šemiazaz and Asael among other leaders of the fallen angels who corrupted mankind. vii. 1: "they began to...defile themselves with them, and they taught them charms and enchantments". viii. 1: "Azazel taught men...and made known to them the metals (cf. 'gold, silver etc.' here)...and all kinds of costly stones (cf. here)... (3) Semjaza taught enchantments... Baraqijal astrology. Kokabel the constellations,... Shamsiel the signs of the sun, Sariel the course of the moon", vide Charles, ad loca. Add Jub. iv. 22, v. 1, xi. 4 seqq.: "they made for themselves molten images, and they worshipped each their idol... and malignant spirits assisted and seduced them into committing transgression and uncleanness". 2 En. vii, xviii. 2 En. xviii. 4 is of special interest in the present connection, since it shows that already at an early time a tradition obtained that had fixed the number of these angels as three—as against the tradition of the passages quoted in 1 En. representing them as a large number: "and of them (Grigori = Watchers) there went three to the earth from the Throne of God to the place Ermon. And they entered into dealings etc." Later the number is further reduced to two, so always in Zohar; cf. on vs. 6 of ch. iv. Cf. Midrash Peḡirath Moshe, BH. i. 129: "the angels 'Azza and 'Azza'el went down from the heavens and became corrupt in their ways".

(10) At that time the ministering angels brought charges against man before God etc. 'What is man etc.' This verse, Ps. viii. 4, is traditionally made to express the animosity of the angels against man, and rather suitably. See Tanchuma, Par. Bechuggothai (Lev. xxvi); Gen. R. viii. 5 (in connection with the creations of man); P. R. 'El. xiii uses the similar passage Ps. cxliv. 3, 4 ("The ministering angels said before the Holy One, blessed be He: 'Lord of all the World, what is man that thou takest knowledge of him or the son of man that thou takest account of him'"). Cf. Jerachmeel, xxii. 1, and Ma'yan Chokma, BH. i. 58. But the form of accusation here recorded is also, in particular, attributed to the angels 'Azza and 'Azrael. Thus in Zohar several times, 'Azza and 'Azrael are said to have used this argument when opposing man's Creation, Zohar, i. 23 a, and another quotation in YR, i. 60 a. A strange similarity with the present chapter is exhibited by the fragment quoted in Yalqut on Gen. vi. 2 (from Midrash Abkir): "the disciples of R. Yoseph asked him: what is 'Azrael? he answered them: as soon as the generation of the flood (cf. ch. iv) stood up and worshipped idols (cf. the present chapter) the Holy One was sorely grieved. Then forthwith came the two angels Shemchazai and 'Azza'el and said before him: Master of the World! Did we not say before thee when thou didst create thy world: what is man that thou art mindful of him. He answered them: if ye were to go down to earth, the evil impulse would get power over you more than over man.... Let us go down.... He said: Go down and dwell with them. As soon as they were on earth, they corrupted their ways with the daughters of men....". In that passage almost all the different statements about 'Azza and 'Azrael are woven together. Cf. on ch. iv. 6.

(11) Why hast thou left the highest of the high heavens etc. This presupposes that when Shekina was dwelling on earth it was absent from the 'Araboth Raqia'.

and art gone and dwellest with the children of men who worship idols and equal thee to the idols. (12) ¹⁸Now thou art on earth and the idols likewise. What hast thou to do with ¹⁹the inhabitants of the earth ¹⁹who worship idols? ¹⁸ (13) Forthwith the Holy One, blessed be He, lifted up His Shekina from the earth, from their midst²⁰.

(14) In that moment came the ministering angels, the troops of hosts and the armies of 'Araboth in thousand camps and ten thousand hosts: they fetched trumpets and took the horns in their hands and surrounded the Shekina with all kinds of songs. ²¹And He ascended²¹ to the high heavens, as it is written (Ps. xlvii. 5): "God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet".

18-18 B om. C: 'now that thou art on earth, thou art become in condition like as the inhabitants of the earth who worship idols' 19-19 L: 'those who go down to earth and are idol-worshippers' 20 C adds: 'and the Shekina ascended to heaven' 21-21 BCDEL om.

(13) Forthwith the Holy One... lifted up His Shekina from the earth... and he ascended to the high heavens. 'The Holy One' and 'Shekina' are here practically synonymous. The idolatry is one of the main causes of the disappearance of the Shekina from on earth. Cf. Sifre (ed. Friedmann), 104 a, Mekilta, 72 a, Tanchuma Lev., Par. behar (Schechter, Aspects, p. 223, Abelson, op. cit. p. 101). The idol erected in the Holy of Holies by Manasse, by its presence, its "face" drives out the Shekina from the Temple. The Shekina and the idols cannot remain in the same place: this is the burden of the remonstrances of the angels acc. to vs. 12. Cf. Cant. R. vi, Num. R. xii. 5, already referred to, note on vs. 1. Cf. also Lam. R. Prohem. 24 (in connection with the destruction of the Temple): "I have no abode on earth. I will remove my Shekina from earth and take it up to my former place".

(14) And he ascended to the high heavens etc. Already acc. to ch. xlviii c the narrative about Shekina's removal from on earth is connected with the taking up of Enoch as can be seen from the parallel to the present chapter found ib. (i.e. ch. xlviii c) vs. 1: "When I beheld the men of the generation of the flood (ctr. here and cf. ch. iv) that they were corrupt, then I went and removed my Shekina from among them. And I lifted it up on high with the sound of a trumpet and with a shout as it is written (Ps. xlvii. 5) 'God is gone up with a shout etc.'"

CHAPTER VI

Enoch lifted up to heaven together with the Shekina.

Angels' protests answered by God

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) When the Holy One, blessed be He, desired¹ to lift me up on high, He first sent 'Anaphiel H (H = Tetragrammaton), the Prince, [and he took me from their midst in their sight and carried² me³ in great glory³ upon^{3a} a fiery chariot with fiery horses, servants⁴ of glory.] And he lifted me up to the high heavens together with the Shekina.

Chh. vi seqq. The translation of Enoch. On the affinities of the representations of Enoch's translation in 1 En., 2 En., and 3 En. vide Introduction, 7 (a) and (b).

Ch. vi. According to this chapter Enoch was translated together with the Shekina. [The Shekina was removed from earth on account of the idolatry of men.] The chapter is a sequel to the antecedent chapter; cf. note ib. intr. As was pointed out above, note on v. 14, the connection of the removal of Shekina with the translation of Enoch is also attested in the 2nd Enoch-Metatron piece, ch. xlviii c 1. There, as in ch. vii, it is referred to the sins of the generation of the Flood (ch. iv). Besides, the present chapter contains a new specimen of angelic accusation against man before God or of protest against privileges awarded to man: in this case Enoch's ascension to the high heavens.

(1) When the Holy One . . . desired to lift me up . . . He first sent 'Anaphiel H. For 'Anaphiel cf. ch. xviii. 18 and note. Acc. to Hek. R. xxii Anaphiel is the highest of the angels, "higher than the Prince of the Presence and greater than he". Ch. xvi here (acc. to reading of BDL) he is the angel sent to 'punish' Metatron with strokes of lashes of fire. The meaning of the name: 'Branch of God' is explained ch. xviii ib. He represents the overarching majesty and sovereignty of God in the heavens, ramifying through all the firmaments. Hence he is also conceived of as protecting guide. The Tetragrammaton (H) is contained in his name, cf. on chh. x. 3, xxx. 1; cf. Hek. R. xxi. YR. i. 5 a (from Sōdē Rāzā): "the ring with the seal of heaven and earth (cf. on ch. xlviii d 5) are entrusted to him and all in heaven and earth kneel down and prostrate themselves before him".

upon a fiery chariot with fiery horses. The biblical narrative of Elijah's ascension to heaven has been suggestive here. In mystical literature the biblical traits ascribed to Elijah are referred to Enoch and vice versa: they are regarded as belonging to the same category of saintly men, since they were both removed from earth in their lifetime. "1 En. 70 describes Enoch's final translation in terms of that of Elijah" (CHARLES, 1 En. xlix). (Cf. 1 En. lxxxix. 52, xciii. 8, 4 Ez. vi. 26, note (m) in Box, Esra-Ap. pp. 77 seq.) In later mysticism Elijah is often identified with the 'twin-brother of Metatron', Sandalphon, in explicit analogy with the identification of Enoch with Metatron (YR. i. 54 b, 57 b, 58 a; cf. Introduction).

(2) As soon as I reached the high heavens, the Holy Chayyoth, the 'Ophannim, the Seraphim, the Kerubim, the Wheels of the Merkaba (the Galgallim), and the ministers of ⁵the consuming fire⁵, perceiving my smell⁶ from a distance⁷ of 365,000^{7a} myriads of parasangs, said:

(2) the Holy Chayyoth, the 'Ophannim, the Seraphim, the Kerubim, the Wheels of the Merkaba and the ministers of the consuming fire. This is evidently intended as an enumeration of the highest classes of angels. The classes here mentioned are the five classes of Merkaba-angels of the angelological section, chh. xxi, xxv, xxvi, xxii and xix resp. The 'ministers of the consuming fire' may refer to the ministering angels in general—whose substance is fire—or to the angels in charge of the fire issuing forth from under the Throne (cf. on ch. xxxiii. 4). For the present enumeration cf. the parallel in the following chapter. All these highest classes of angels are here represented as protesting against the privilege awarded to the man Enoch of ascending to the high heavens. Cf. P. R. 'El. passim. Cf. also Deut. R. xi. 4 (the Galgallim of the Merkaba and the flaming Seraphim praise God for not regarding persons—with reference to Moses).

perceiving my smell etc. For the expression cf. Gen. R. xxxiv. 10: "God perceived the smell of Abraham, the Patriarch, ascending from the furnace... of Chananya, Misael and Azaria... the smell of the generation of the religious persecution". There it equals 'foresaw'. Here it perhaps denotes the idea that any intrusion of a lower, unclean element or being into the higher heavens is immediately sensed and guarded against.

What smell of a woman-born... (ACDEL), what is a woman-born between (among) us (B)... Cf. TB. Shabbat, 88b: "R. Yehoshua ben Lewi said: in the hour when Moses ascended on high, the ministering angels said before the Holy One, blessed be He: Master of the World, what is a woman-born among us", i.e. 'what has he to do here?' The expressions 'one born of woman' and 'taste of a drop of semen' are of course used in a contemptuous sense, denoting the extreme insignificance of man in the eyes of the high angels. what taste of a white drop (A) etc. There is a play here on the two-fold meaning of the word ta'am, viz. 'taste' and 'reason, ground' ('what is the reason that one conceived of a white drop should ascend...') those who 'divide flames of fire.' The expression is deduced from Ps. xxix. 7 and denotes the angel-princes. In Alph. R. 'Aqiba BH. iii. 45, it is used of the 'Voice'.

(3) The Holy One, blessed be He, answered and spake unto them: "My servants, ¹³my hosts¹³, my Kerubim, my 'Ophannim, my Seraphim! Be ye not displeased on account of this! Since all the children of men have denied me ¹⁴and my great Kingdom and are gone worshipping¹⁴ idols, I have removed my Shekina from among them and have lifted it up on high. ¹⁵But this one whom I have taken from among them is an ELECT ONE among (the inhabitants of) the world ¹⁶and he is equal to all of them in faith¹⁶, righteousness and perfection of deed¹⁷ and ¹⁸I have taken him for (as) a tribute from¹⁹ my world¹⁸ under all the heavens¹⁵".

R.* xxix. 2 (on the protest of the angels against the revelation of the 'secret' to the Yorede Merkaba): "My ministering angels, my servants, be ye not displeased on account of this etc."

he is equal to all of them in faith, righteousness and perfection of deed states the justification for the translation of Enoch: his merits, his perfection. This is not explicit in ch. iv, but might have been understood. Enoch is worth as much as the whole generation.

I have taken him for a tribute (or: he is my reward, remuneration; YR.). There is a covert allusion here to the destruction of the rest of the generation, hence to the Flood: Enoch is the only one preserved from the ruin of the first generation, God's only remuneration for all his labour. Also in the tradition represented by chh. v, vi, Enoch was connected with the Flood (as is explicitly stated in the parallel ch. xlviii c 1, several times referred to). The original tradition seems to have been somewhat like this: Owing to the general downfall of the first generation, caused by the idolatry arising among men with Enosh and his followers—an idolatry inspired by the demons or fallen angels—Shekina was removed from earth, and on the removal of the Shekina followed the destruction of the entire race in the waters of the Flood. One righteous man, Enoch, was exempted from the general fate of his contemporaries: he was taken up to the heavens together with the Shekina.

The aspect in which Enoch's translation is seen here is his being the tribute from the first generation, God's remuneration—the Creation of the first generation had not been in vain. In ch. iv it is seen from the aspect of the function assigned to Enoch of being a witness before coming generations, in the world to come, to the sinfulness and corruption of the generation that was ultimately destroyed in the waters of the Flood.

CHAPTER VII¹*Enoch raised upon the wings of the Shekina to the place of the Throne, the Merkaba and the angelic hosts*

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

When the Holy One, blessed be He, took me away from the generation of the Flood, he lifted me on the wings of the wind of Shekina to the highest heaven and brought me into the great palaces of the 'Araboth Raqia' on high, where are ²the glorious Throne of *Shekina*², the *Merkaba*³, the troops of anger, the armies of vehemence, the fiery *Shin'anin*⁴, the ⁵flaming Kerubim, and the burning 'Ophan-nim', the flaming servants, the flashing Chashmallim and the lightening *Seraphim*⁵. And he placed me (there) to attend the Throne of Glory day after day.

Ch. vii. Another short version of the translation of Enoch, connecting it with the generation of the Flood but also containing traces of its relation to the removal or lifting up of Shekina ('on the wings of the wind of the Shekina'). lifted me on the wings of the wind of Shekina. The wings of Shekina, a common metaphorical expression, often used as denoting proselytism; cf. Abelson, op. cit. p. 90. Here it rather expresses the protection given to Enoch from the Godhead (against the fury of the angels?), TB. Shabbat, 88 b: "when Moses was to ascend on high... God spread over him of the splendour of His Shekina, that the angels might not be able to burn him". For 'wings of the wind' cf. chh. xxxiv. 1, xxxvii. 2. Cf. 2 En. iii. 1 (Enoch raised upon the wings of the angels, upon the clouds etc.). Acc. to Mysteries of St John and the Holy Virgin, 6 b, St John is raised "on the wing of the light of the Cherub". Cf. ch. vi. 1 (BCL). where are the... Throne... the Merkaba, the troops of anger etc., the most prominent of the glories contained in the highest of the heavens, the 'Araboth Raqia'. Cf. Mass. Hek. v ("in the seventh Hall of 'Araboth Raqia' are the Throne... the Chariots of the Kerubim... Seraphim, 'Ophanim, Chayyoth, the Chashmallim of splendour and majesty, etc."). A parallel is ch. xlviii c 4, but notice the difference: there Enoch-Metatron is represented as appointed over and a minister of all the different classes of high angels, as well as of the Throne. Here he is represented as attendant of the Throne only (cf. however, x. 3). See ch. xv. 1. the fiery Shin'anin. The name Shin'anin is deduced from vs. 18 of the mystical Ps. lxxviii. The Shin'anin as a class of angels occurs frequently in enumerations of angelic orders.

The name is derived from the Chasmal of Ezek. i. 4. Cf. on ch. xxxiv. 1. The Chashmallim are in Chag. 13 b explained as "the angels (Chayyoth) who are sometimes silent

CHAPTER VIII

The gates (of the treasures of heaven) opened to Metatron

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Before He appointed me to attend the Throne of Glory, the Holy One, blessed be He, opened to me three hundred thousand gates of Understanding three hundred thousand gates of Subtlety three hundred thousand gates of Life

1-1 Following is the order of the attributes in the other readings:

B (10): wisdom... understanding... life... subtlety... grace and loving-kindness... love... Tora... maintenance... meekness... fear of sin

C (12): loving-kindness... understanding... life... subtlety... Shekina... power to attend the Throne of Glory day after day. This is a traditional function of Metatron, the Prince of the Presence. Cf. ch. xlviii c 4. Hek. R. xi: "when the angel of the Presence enters to exalt and magnify the Throne of Glory and to prepare the seat for the Mighty One in Jacob". Hek. Zot. (Bodl. MICH. 9 fol. 67 b): "Metatron is the president of the Divine Thrones of Glory (of Dan. vii. 9)". But Metatron has also a Throne of his own: chh. x. 1-3, xvi. 1, 2, xlviii c 8.

(chash) and sometimes speak (mallel): they are silent when the Word emanates from the Holy One, blessed be He, they speak when He has ceased speaking."

Ch. viii. (1) The Holy One, blessed be He, opened to me three hundred thousand gates of Understanding etc. The gates are the gates of the treasures of the heavens ('Araboth). Metatron is appointed over the stores of 'Araboth acc. to ch. x. 6, xlviii c 3. The treasures are the treasures of wisdom, understanding etc. i.e. the attributes by which the world is sustained. The abstract qualities here enumerated are to a large extent identical with those named as the agencies by which God created the world in, e.g. TB. Chag. 12 a ("wisdom, understanding, knowledge, strength, might etc."), Ab. R. Nathan, xxvii, xliii. Cf. ch. xli. 3: "wisdom, understanding, knowledge etc. by which the world is sustained"; and Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 20: "God supplies the world day by day with gifts, without which the world could not subsist for a single day: spirit and soul, knowledge and wisdom and subtlety, counsel and might, and the different senses". The idea is, that the abstract qualities on which the world is founded and by which it is sustained emanate from God. Yet we are here in no way nearer the conception of the 'Ten Sefirot' than in the passages cited from TB. Chag. 12 a etc. For wisdom and understanding treasured in heaven cf. 4 Ex. v. 9, "then shall intelligence hide itself and wisdom withdraw to its chamber", where the essential idea of the present representation is already extant: wisdom and intelligence as at work in the world have their home in 'chambers' (i.e. in heaven) from where they have emanated and whither they return. Cf. also ch. xlviii d 2, and for the 'opening of the gates of the treasures' Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter Aleph: "5000 gates of wisdom were opened to Moses on Sinai corresponding to the five books of the Law, and 8000 gates of understanding, corresponding to the eight prophets and 11,000 gates of knowledge corresponding to the eleven writings". three hundred thousand gates of Life. The 'treasures of life' in heaven are frequently referred to. Cf. e.g. Chag. 12 b: "in 'Araboth Raqia' are... the treasures of life..."; ch. x. 6 here.

three hundred thousand gates of 'grace and loving-kindness' three hundred thousand gates of love three hundred thousand gates of Tora three hundred thousand gates of meekness three hundred thousand gates of maintenance three hundred thousand gates of mercy three hundred thousand gates of fear of heaven¹.

(2) In that hour the Holy One, blessed be He, added in me wisdom unto wisdom, understanding unto understanding, subtlety unto subtlety, knowledge unto knowledge, mercy unto mercy, instruction unto instruction, love unto love, loving-kindness unto loving-kindness, and might... grace and loving-kindness... love... instruction (Tora)... maintenance... fear of sin... meekness

E (12): wisdom... understanding... subtlety... life... peace... Shekina... power and might... strength... grace and loving-kindness... love... meekness... fear of sin

YR. i. 54 b (12): wisdom... understanding... life... subtlety... Shekina... power and might... grace and loving-kindness... love... Tora... maintenance... meekness... fear of sin

L (12): wisdom... understanding... life... subtlety... Shekina... might... grace and loving-kindness... love... Tora... maintenance... meekness... fear of sin

D (15): wisdom... understanding... life... subtlety... peace... Shekina... power and might... strength... grace and loving-kindness... love... Tora... maintenance... mercy... meekness... fear of heaven three hundred thousand gates of Tora. Cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 43, 44: "The Holy One, blessed be He, appointed Moses over all Israel, and over all the treasures of Tora, and over all treasures of wisdom, and over all treasures of understanding". It is interesting to note, that acc. to this conception there is a special treasury of Tora (= the Celestial Tora?) besides the treasures of wisdom and of understanding. Acc. to another conception the Tora is itself formed of the elements of wisdom and understanding, the 'secrets of the treasures'; cf. on ch. xlviii D 2, 3.

gates of maintenance (Parnasa). Even the maintenance and sustenance of the needs of the world has its source in heaven. Cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter Zain: "Zain, that is the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He, for he feeds and maintains (mepharnes) all his creatures, day after day, as it is said (Ps. civ. 28): 'thou openest thine hand, they are filled with good'". From the 'maintenance' Parnasa, stored in heaven, the seventy princes of kingdoms take and "throw down to the nations of the world their maintenance" acc. to the Lesser YR., sub voce Nedibim et freq. "Metatron distributes Parnasa among all the companies of angels" (YR. i. 56, quoting Pardes).

The opening the treasures or gates to Metatron presumably connotes not only the bestowal upon him of their contents (as in vs. 2) but also that they are put in his charge and to his distribution. As Prince over the Princes he has to distribute their contents among the angels, and perhaps also as functional Prince of the World to the earth and nations.

added in me wisdom unto wisdom etc. The attributes here enumerated are on the whole identical with those of vs. 1. Hence the idea probably is that the contents of the opened treasures were conferred upon Metatron. more than all the children of heaven. The unique position of Metatron is here emphasized.

goodness unto goodness, meekness unto meekness, power unto power, strength unto strength, might unto might, brilliance unto brilliance, beauty unto beauty, splendour unto splendour,² and I was honoured and adorned with all these good and praiseworthy things more than all the children of heaven.

CHAPTER IX

Enoch receives blessings from the Most High and is adorned with angelic attributes

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) After all these things the Holy One, blessed be He, put His hand upon me and blessed me with 5360¹ blessings. (2) And I was raised² and enlarged to the size of the length and width of the world. (3) And He caused 72 wings to grow on me, 36 on each side. And

² C adds: 'and honour unto all honour, majesty unto all majesty, glory unto all glory and greatness unto all greatness'

Ch. ix. 1 so BCL. A: 'one thousand, 305 thousands' DE: 'one thousand, 365 thousand' ² BC: 'elated'

Ch. ix. The subject of the present chapter is the metamorphosis through which Enoch was made into a high angel. This metamorphosis is viewed from another aspect in ch. xv. Here the different angelic attributes conferred on Metatron are: immense height of stature, wings, eyes covering the whole of his body, and light.

(1) blessed me with 5360 blessings. This connects the present chapter with its antecedent: the blessings are presumably conceived of as contained in the heavenly treasures, opened to Enoch and the contents of which are bestowed upon him. The treasures of blessing(s) are mentioned as contained in the 'Araboth, e.g. TB. Chag. 12 b. The number 5360 is intended to reflect the number 365.

(2) I was raised to the size of the length... of the world. The immense size of the high angels is a constantly reiterated theme. Cf. ch. xxi. 1: "each of the Chayyoth is as the space of the world" (cf. Chag. 13 a), chh. xxii. 3, xxv. 4, xxvi. 4. The idea prevails: the greater an angel is (in rank) the larger his size. Cf. the versions of the Rev. of Moses (Ma'yan Chokma, BH. i. 58, etc., YR. ii. 66 b-67 b, Zohar, ii. 58 a): "Hadarniel is greater than Qemuel by 60 myriads of parasangs, Sandalfon is higher of stature than Hadarniel by 500 years' journeying distance". Thus, in the other Enoch-Metatron piece of the present book, ch. xlviii c 5, the size of Metatron is seen from this comparative aspect: "I made him higher of stature than all. The height of his stature surpasses all others by ten thousand parasangs". The similar tradition preserved in Zohar, e.g. i. 21 a: "Metatron is glorified more than the highest angels (the Chayyoth) and higher than these by 500 parasangs".

(3) 72 wings. The number seventy-two is frequently used in the present book. It generally seems to imply reference to the rule of the world: the seventy-two princes of kingdoms, cf. note on ch. xvii. 8. Metatron is in the present section the ruler of the seventy-two princes of kingdoms: chh. x. 3, xiv. 1, xvi. 1 and 2. It is possible that the seventy-two wings here—extending over the whole world each wing³ was as the whole world³. (4) And He fixed on me 365 eyes: each eye was as the great luminary. (5) And He left no kind of splendour, brilliance, radiance, beauty ⁴in (of) all the lights of the universe⁴ that He did not fix on me.

3-3 so BCDEL. A: 'filled the world'

4-4 so BCL. A: 'praise, lights of —symbolize Metatron's rulership over these. 36 on each side may be compared with ch. xvi. 1: 'the princes of kingdoms were standing... on my right hand and on my left'.

(4) 365 eyes. For the number 365 (= the number of days of the solar year) as mystical number cf. chh. v. 4, xxi. 3 ('the size of each wing of the Chayyoth as 365 wings'), xxxiii. 4 ('the breadth of each of the fiery rivers is 365 thousand parasangs'). The body of an angel-prince covered with eyes (round about) is a regular feature of the descriptions of angels: cf. chh. xxii. 8 ('his body is full of eyes', of Kerubiel), xxv. 2, where the number of eyes assigned to the angel-prince in question ('Ophaniel') is devised on the basis of calendary calculations ('8466 eyes corresponding to the number of hours of a year'), xxvi. 6. Cf. notes ad loca. each eye was as the great luminary. An identical statement about the eyes of Seraphiel, ch. xxvi. 6.

(5) fixed on me all kinds of splendour, brilliance etc. of the lights (luminaries) of the world. Cf. in the angelological descriptions: chh. xxii. 4, xxv. 6, xxvi. 2, 4. Cf. also Mass. Hek. iv: "On every door in the Hall(s) of 'Araboth there are fixed 365 thousand myriads of different kinds of lights like unto the great luminary'".

The repeated references by comparisons to the 'world' in the present chapter, vss. 2, 3, 5, and the possible allusion to the seventy-two princes of kingdoms or to the rule of the world in vs. 3 (cf. above) might conceivably be traces, if not intentional symbolical expressions, of Metatron's function as the Prince of the World. Vs. 2, 'I was raised to the size of the world', might also be a remnant of Metatron's connection with the speculations on the Primordial Man, the 'Adam Qadmon'. Acc. to Chag. 12 a the first Adam reached from one end of the world to the other. This connection, which like the identification of Metatron with the Prince of the World (existing from the Days of Creation), was perhaps suspended in consequence of Metatron's identification with Enoch, reappears in later cabbalistic literature: the statement that Enoch-Metatron is the Neshāmā of the first Adam, who left him before the sin of Adam (just as the universal size of the first Adam is represented as diminished through Adam's sin: TB. Chag. 12 a) is frequent. The difficulties arising from Metatron's identification with Enoch were now overcome through the new conceptions brought in with the doctrine of metempsychosis and related speculations.

CHAPTER X

God places Metatron on a throne at the door of the seventh Hall and announces through the Herald, that Metatron henceforth is God's representative and ruler over all the princes of kingdoms and all the children of heaven, save the eight high princes called YHWH by the name of their King

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) All these things the Holy One, blessed be He, made for me: ¹He made me ¹a Throne, similar to the ²Throne of Glory. And He spread over me ³a curtain of splendour and brilliant appearance, of

3-3 BCL om.

Ch. x. This chapter presents Metatron as adorned with special attributes, distinguishing him from the other angels: a throne and a curtain, both reflections of the Throne and Curtain of the Godhead. He is furthermore explicitly pronounced a ruler over the princes of kingdoms and the children of heaven, a rulership defined as a vice-regency for the Holy One. The chapter really forms an explanation of the names 'Metatron' and 'Prince of the Presence'.

(1) He made me a Throne. This is in itself no feature confined to the descriptions of Metatron. Instances are frequent of thrones assigned to angels or meritorious dead. 1 En. cviii. 12 ("I will bring forth in shining light [cf. here] those who have loved My holy name, and I will seat each one on the throne of his honour"). Cf. CHARLES, ad locum, Rev. iv. 4. In the 'Apocalyptic Fragment' preserved e.g. in BH. v. 167-169 David has a "Throne of fire" erected for him over against the Throne of His Creator. Acc. to Gedullah Moshe Moses sees in the seventh heaven "70 thrones fixed, of precious stones, pearls, gold etc.... there are thrones for the scholars of the Law, for the chassids, the just etc. of different splendour acc. to merit of the occupants". And acc. to Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 34, the righteous in the world to come will each be seated before the Glory of the Holy One, on a throne of gold "like a king". For thrones assigned to angels cf. Mass. Hek. vii, acc. to which seven angels as court-officers are sitting upon seven thrones before the Curtain. Cf. Rev. xx. 4 ("I saw thrones, and they sat upon them", acc. to Bousset, Comm. ad loc. probably Christ and the angels as 'Gerichtsbeisassen'). The view predominant in Rabbinic seems to be that 'there is no sitting in heaven': TB. Chag. 15 a. Assigning a seat or a throne to any angel-prince or to any one beside the Holy One, might endanger the recognition of the absolute sovereignty and unity of the Godhead. Cf. ch. xvi. Acc. to the passage Chag. 15 a, just referred to, the privilege of 'sitting' was accorded to Metatron in his character as 'scribe': he was allowed "to sit and write down the merits of Israel". Here, no doubt, the assigning a Throne to Metatron is meant to denote his unique position: his character of God's representative or vice-regent. This is borne out by vss. 3 and 4 and also by what immediately follows: the Throne is similar to, mē'ēn, that is 'the counterpart of', the Throne of Glory. The character of Metatron's throne as an image of or counterpart of God's Throne is particularly emphasized by the additional feature: Metatron receives a curtain similar to the Curtain of the Throne of Glory. For the conception of the Curtain cf. note on ch. xiv. 1.

beauty, grace⁴ and mercy, similar to³ the curtain of the Throne of Glory; and on it were fixed all ⁵kinds of lights in the universe⁵.

(2) And He placed it at the door of the Seventh Hall and seated me on it.

(3) And the herald went forth ⁶ into every heaven, saying: ⁷This is⁷ Metatron, ⁸my servant⁸. I have made him into a prince and a ruler over all the princes of my kingdoms ⁹ and over all the children

4 DE om. 5-5 C: 'splendour and brilliance from all lights' cf. ch. ix. 4.
6 ABD ins. 'concerning me' 7-7 so C. 8-8 C om. 9 L ins. the gloss: 'the angels'

The Curtain regularly represents the recording of the Divine decrees with regard to the world, the secrets of the world's creation and sustenance, etc., in short the innermost Divine Secrets; cf. note referred to.

(2) He placed it at the door of the Seventh Hall and seated me on it. This is an often-repeated statement. It is in ch. xlviii c 8 made to denote his function as judge and ruler over the princes and the children of heaven, as even here, acc. to verses following. In Rev. Moses (YR. ii. 66 b, Siuni, 93 c d, Gaster, RAS's Journal, 1893) it is said: "Metatron, Prince of the Presence, stands before the door of the Hall of the Holy One, blessed be He, and he sits and judges all the hosts on high like a judge standing before the King". The contradiction between the two statements 'sits' and 'stands' in this passage is probably due to the influence of the tradition mentioned above, that there is no sitting in heaven, responsible also for the account of Metatron being divested of his privilege of yeshiba in Chag. 15 a and ch. xvi here. On his throne at the door of the seventh Hall Metatron faces all the hosts of the heavens, over which he has jurisdiction.

(3) the herald went forth into every heaven. The conception of the heavenly herald announcing important decrees of the Most High in the heavens is attested also in Hek. R. vi (BH. iii. 88, as ch. iv): "the herald went forth from the 'Araboth Raqia' etc." and in Rev. Mos., Yalqut Re'ubeni, ii. 66 b: "Galliṣur stands behind the Curtain and gets knowledge of the decrees of the Holy One and heralds it. . . and the herald commits it to Elijah and Elijah stands as herald on the mount Horeb". This is Metatron, my servant. HERE THEN IS THE POINT—in the course of the exposition of the present chapter—WHERE ENOCH IS PROCLAIMED AS METATRON. It is significant that THIS PROCLAMATION IS MADE TO COINCIDE WITH HIS BEING SET UP ON A THRONE—as a ruler over the princes and angels. See Introduction, section 12 (5). my servant, i.e. 'Ebed'. 'Ebed or God's Servant is an old-established name of Metatron. Cf. chh. xlviii c 1, xlviii d 1 (no. 17) and note. It seems to have been especially associated with the Prince of the Presence conception. Cf. Hek. R. xiii, BH. iii. 93: "Surya, 'Ebed', the Prince of the Presence" (Surya is a common equivalent of Metatron as the Prince of the Presence, cf. no. 84, ch. xlviii. 1). In Hek. Zot. (Bodl. mch. fol. 70a) the attribute 'my servant' is applied to Metatron as God's representative or vice-regent: "when I (the Holy One) leave the Throne of Glory to go down among the children of men". In Hek. R. BH. iii. 104, Metatron is called "'Ebed-YHWH, long-suffering and of great mercy". It is probable that the 'Ebed' is derived from the picture of God's servant in Is. xlix. 1, etc.

I have made him into a prince and a ruler over all the princes of my kingdoms (= my princes of kingdoms). Here, as in ch. xvi. 1, 2, Metatron is explicitly stated to have special authority over the princes of kingdoms. This is a feature in the Prince of the World tradition: ch. xxx. 2. In the shorter Enoch-Metatron piece, ch. xlviii c, vs. 9, Metatron's character of ruler over the princes of kingdoms and thereby as functional Prince of the World is better preserved than here: he is there depicted as ruler over the nations of the world 'who smites kings of heaven, except the eight great princes, the honoured and revered ones who are called ¹⁰YHWH, *by the name of their King*¹⁰. (4) And every angel ¹¹and every prince¹¹ who has a word to speak ¹²in my presence (before me)¹² shall go into his presence (before him) and shall speak to him (instead). (5) ¹³And every command that he utters to you¹³ in my name do ye observe and fulfil. For the Prince of Wisdom and the Prince of Understanding ¹⁴have I committed to him¹⁴ to instruct him in the wisdom of heavenly things and of earthly 10-10 so with BCDL(E). A: 'by the name of H their King' E: 'H by the name of the World' (corrupt for: 'H, by the name of the King of the World?') 11-11 D om. 12-12 BCL om. 13-13 lit. and sets up kings'. Here his rulership is viewed mainly or exclusively from its celestial aspect, he is the ruler over the princes of kingdoms as inhabitants of the heavens, in common with all the children of heaven. Except the eight great princes... who are called YHWH by the name of their king. 'Called by the name YHWH' (cf. on chh. iii. 2, xxix. 1) probably means that these angels have the Tetragrammaton as part of their names, as 'Anaphiel H of ch. vi. 1, the higher ones of the angels enumerated ch. xviii, and the Merkaba princes chh. xix, xx, xxii, xxv, xxvi, xxvii. Which these angels are who are exempt from the jurisdiction of Metatron is not stated here. One might from ch. vi. 1 conjecture that 'Anaphiel was regarded as one of them. A parallel can be brought from Hek. R. xxii, BH. iii. 99. This parallel is indeed so close that it can with some degree of certainty be assumed to represent the same tradition as the present passage. The guardians of the seventh Hall are enumerated—"and each of them, his name is called by the name of the King of the World"—(in the enumeration this statement is shown to signify the form of names of which the Tetragrammaton forms the latter part: SSTIEL YHWH, N(ZURIEL YHWH, etc.). The greatest of them is 'Anaphiel H (in whose charge the ring with the seal of heaven and earth is committed, cf. on vi. 1): "before him all on high kneel down, fall on their faces and pay homage to him when they see him. And those angels, standing before the Throne of Glory, who do not prostrate themselves before the Prince of the Presence, they prostrate themselves before 'Anaphiel YHWH'. 'Those angels' are evidently the angels in Hek. R. made into 'the guardians of the Seventh Hall'. The names of these angels are only seven in the enumeration, but acc. to the general scheme of Hek. R. (see chh. xv, xvii, etc.) the number of the guardians of each Hall is 'eight': likewise in Mass. Hek. iv ("there are eight guardians of the door of each of the seven Halls"). Hence also Hek. R. xxii might originally have had: "eight great princes, called H". This clause is most probably additional here, cf. Introduction, section 8(u).

(4) Every angel... who has a word to speak in my presence, shall go ... to him. HERE THE EPITHET 'PRINCE OF THE PRESENCE' IS EXPLAINED. (5) And every command that he utters to you in my name do ye observe and fulfil. THIS IS CLEARLY A PROCLAMATION OF METATRON AS GOD'S VICE-REGENT. Ex. xxiii. 21 may have been suggestive (Ex. xxiii. 20-22 are traditionally referred to the Prince of the Presence): "Beware of him and provoke him not: obey his voice". Here Metatron's jurisdiction extends only over the angels, ctr. ch. xlviii c 9. But his connection with the affairs of the 'world' is implied by the following, for the Prince of Wisdom and the Prince of Understanding have I committed to him to instruct him in the wisdom of heavenly things and of earthly things. 'The Prince of Wisdom and Prince of Understanding':

things, in the wisdom of this world and of the world to come. (6) Moreover, I have set him over all the treasures of the palaces of 'Arabôth and over all the stores¹⁵ of life¹⁵ that¹⁶ I have^{16 17} in the high heavens.

cf. ch. xlviii D 1 (no. 105) and 2 ('all the treasures of wisdom are committed in his hand'). The functions of the Prince of Wisdom are then naturally merged into the conception of Metatron: Metatron is the Prince of Wisdom. Cf. on ch. xviii. 11, 16. Metatron instructed in the 'secrets' is the subject of the following chapter. There it is God himself who instructs him. Cf. in 2 En. xxxiii. 11, 12: "two angels Ariukh and Pariukh appointed by God as guardians of the Enoch-literature".

(6) I have set him over all the treasures of... 'Araboth. Cf. ch. viii. R.* 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 26, 44.

Ch. xi. That METATRON IS IN POSSESSION OF ALL SECRETS AND MYSTERIES is an essential feature of the traditions concerning him. Cf. the other Enoch-Metatron piece of the present book: ch. xlviii c 7 (and 4). He is called the 'Knower of Secrets' ib. and Hek. R. ("wise in the secrets and Master of the mysteries"). The same is implied in chh. viii, x. 5. As a 'knower of secrets' he is also the 'revealer of secrets'. This is the eighty-eighth of the names in ch. xlviii D 1 and the sixty-seventh in the treatise Names of Metatron, Bodl. MICH. 256, foll. 29 a-44 a. He is the Prince of Wisdom and the Prince of Understanding: ch. xlviii D 1 (105), 2, 6. He reveals the 'secret' to Moses: ib. 7. He is the guide and revealer of secrets to R. Ishmael acc. to the frame of the present book, to R. Ishmael and R. 'Aqiba (e. a.) acc. to Hek. R. (in the form of 'Surya'), Hek. Zot., Shi'ur Qoma, the Apocalyptic Fragment, BH. v. 167-169, and in various scattered fragments (see Introduction). Also called 'guide of all treasures', e.g. BH. ii. 117. Besides it needs hardly to be pointed out that the revelation of secrets to Enoch and Enoch as possessor of and revealer of heavenly secrets is a prominent trait of the 1 and 2 En. Cf. also CHARLES, 1 En. xlix. 3, 4.

(1) Henceforth the Holy One... revealed to me. Acc. to vs. 5 of the preceding chapter the angel(s) called the Prince of Wisdom and Prince of Understanding are the instructors of Enoch-Metatron. Here it is the Holy One himself who reveals the secrets to him. An important parallel to this is found in 2 En. xxiii, xxiv. In ch. xxiii the angel Vretil tells Enoch of 'all the works of heaven and earth, etc. etc.', in ch. xxiv again it is God himself who reveals to Enoch 'the secrets of Creation'. The reason of the change is there to be seen in the explicit statement that these latter secrets are not even revealed to the angels and could therefore be handed over to Enoch only by God himself. It is probable that a similar idea has been at work here. It is at least certain that Metatron was thought to receive more the mysteries of Tora and all the secrets of wisdom ²and all the depths of the Perfect Law²; ³and all living beings' thoughts of heart and all the secrets of the universe³ and all the secrets⁴ of Creation were revealed unto me even as they are revealed unto ⁵the Maker of Creation⁵.

all the mysteries of Tora and all the secrets of wisdom and all the depths of the Perfect Law. The mysteries of the Tora is a technical term, denoting THE INNER ESSENCE OF WHICH THE TORA ITSELF IS AN EXPRESSION, FORM, PHENOMENON. They are not to be defined as the sum of mystical interpretations of the Tora: the mystical interpretation aims at finding these secrets by the study of the Tora, in which they are embodied (cf. e.g. Baraita of R. Meir, Pirke Ab. vi: "Whosoever is busy in the Tora for its own sake... to him the mysteries of Tora are revealed"). They are in fact the 'mysteries of mysteries', the fundament not 'only' of the Tora but of the universe, of heaven and earth: cf. ch. xlviii D 8 and note ad locum. In the term are thus comprised also the following: the secrets of Wisdom and the depths of the Perfect Law and also the Secrets of Creation. See Introduction, section 14 (1). Cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 43, 44, acc. to which God revealed to Moses (since Moses received the Tora on Sinai he was also thought to have received the 'Secrets' either directly from God or through Metatron; cf. ch. xlviii D 3, 7 seq.) 'the Tora... and opened to him the treasures of Wisdom, which the Holy One... revealed to him, that he might see by His Wisdom all the orders of Creation...' Perfect Law. The expression is derived from Ps. xix. 8. Cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 14: "But for the Perfect Law (Torā Temimā) the whole world would not subsist" and vice versa.

all living beings' thoughts of heart... (2) Before a man did think, I knew, etc. (3) ...no thing... on high nor... in the deep hidden from me. Metatron seems here to be invested with the attribute of omniscience proper only to 'the Maker of the World'. All past, present and future events are recorded with God (on the Curtain cf. on ch. xlv. 1). These were also shown to Moses acc. to the passage Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 44, referred to above.

CHAPTER XII

God clothes Metatron in a garment of glory, puts a royal crown on his head and calls him "the Lesser YHWH"

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) By reason of the love with which the Holy One, blessed be He, loved me more than all the children of heaven, He made me a garment of glory¹ on which were fixed² all kinds of ³ lights, and He clad me ⁴in it⁴. Ch. xii. Continued description of Enoch's exaltation, ending with the climax: ENOCH-METATRON CALLED THE LESSER YHWH. A very close parallel to this chapter is found in 2 En. xxi. 5-11, xxii. 5. Vide Introduction, section 7 (b). (1) The Holy One...made me a garment of glory. Cf. 2 En. xxii. 8 (lvi. 2): God bids Michael clothe Enoch with 'the raiment of glory'. [In early traditions the 'garment of glory' ('raiment of honour', etc.) represents the light-substance in which the inhabitants of the high heavens appear; the 'glory' is light, splendour, probably conceived of as a reflection, outflow of the Divine Glory, the Splendour of Shekina. The putting on 'the raiment of glory' is a necessary condition of entering the highest heavens, God's abode of light. Hence it is also a mark of the holy, celestial nature of its bearer.] Cf. how acc. to Asc. Is. ix. 2-11 (vii. 25) Isaiah can only ascend to the highest heaven after having received the garment of glory. 'Garments of glory' are designed for the righteous and elect: 1 En. lxii. 15, 16. Similarly Esdras ii. 39 ("those which are departed from the shadow of the world and have received glorious garments of the Lord"), explained ib. iv. 45 ("they that have put off the mortal clothing and put on the immortal"), 1 En. cviii. 12 (vide CHARLES' notes ad loca cit.), 2 Cor. v. 3 seq., Rev. iii. 5, iv. 4, vi. 11, vii. 9, 13, 14, Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 28 and 34 (the righteous will be sitting on thrones before the Glory in royal garments and royal crowns).

[The garment of glory and robe of honour is here assigned to Metatron as distinguished from the other angels: 'by reason of the love with which [He] loved me more than all the children of heaven'. The writer has Metatron's rulership, his vice-regency in view. THE GARMENT AND ROBE ASSIGNED TO HIM ARE TO BE UNDERSTOOD AS SYMBOLS OF HIS DERIVED KINGSHIP. This is apparent from the following context: Metatron crowned with a crown of kingship and especially by his pronouncement as the Lesser YHWH. Acc. to Alpha Beta de Metatron (Add. 15299, fol. 81 b) Metatron "is clad in eight garments, made out of the splendour of Shekina (ib. 81 a: when the righteous parts from this world the Prince of the Presence conducts him to the Garden of Eden and there he clothes him in eight garments from the splendour of Shekina)". THE GARMENT(S) OF GLORY ARE A DISTINCTION ASSIGNED ALSO TO MESSIAH acc. to Pirke Mashiach, BH. iii. 73 ("God will clothe Messiah in splendour and majesty... and garments of glory").

(3) And he made me a royal crown. 'Crowns' often termed 'Crowns of Glory' are frequently, one might say regularly, ascribed to angel-princes. Cf. in

The Divine Names, ch. xlviii B 1. Cf. Rev. iv. 4. The righteous are to receive crowns in the world to come or in the after-life, e.g. 2 Esdras ii. 45. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 34, and ib. 36, God is represented as crowning the letters on the Merkaba with a crown of kingship and a crown of glory. In the present book 'the crown of kingship' is the special emblem of Metatron and of the seventy-two princes of kingdoms (whose ruler he is): ch. xvii. 8 (cf. xvi. 1, 2); in ch. xviii all the angel-princes are depicted with 'crowns of glory' except the 'seventy-two princes of kingdoms' who have 'crowns of kingship'. They are the celestial rulers over the nations of the world. The royal crown here is apparently meant to distinguish Metatron as representative ruler. The following chapter makes it clear that METATRON'S CROWN WAS CONCEIVED OF AS A COUNTERPART OF 'KETHER NORA' OF THE HOLY ONE AS KING OF THE WORLD (cf. ch. xxix. 1). its splendour went forth etc. Cf. ch. xxv. 6.

(5) And He called me the Lesser YHWH... "For my name is in him." The tradition that Metatron bears the name of his Master is attested in TB. Sanh. 38 b, with the same scriptural support as here, viz. Ex. xxiii. 21. The passage is frequently referred to Metatron. The reference has been interpreted from the equal numerical value of Metatron and Shaddai (the name of God Almighty). The original meaning was, however, as here, that METATRON ACTUALLY WAS CALLED BY THE DIVINE NAME OR NAMES. Such seems to be the import even of TB. Sanh. 38 b, since there Ex. xxiv. 1 is referred to Metatron: "And He said unto Moses, Come up unto YHWH"; 'Come up unto YHWH' is to be understood: 'Come up unto Metatron'. A very important parallel is found in Apocalypse of Abraham (ed. BOX), ch. 10: "I am called Jaol by Him who moveth that which existeth with me on the seventh expanse upon the firmament, a power in virtue of the ineffable Name that is dwelling in me". Jaol is made up of the Divine Names, and therefore 'God's Name is in Him'. For Metatron called 'the Lesser YHWH' cf. BH. ii. 61, 114, 117, and also 3 En. xlviii c 7, xlviii d 1 (no. 102: 'the Lesser YHWH, after the name of his Master, "for my name is in him (Ex. xxiii. 21)"; ib. no. 14, YHWH is included as one of the names of Metatron). Sepher ha-Qoma ('Inyane Merkaba'), Bodl. OPP. 467, fol. 61 b (where the variant reading, however, differs): "The Explicit Name, which is Metatron, the Youth" (var. "the explicit name which Metatron announces"). In the commentary on Sepher ha-Qoma (Bodl. OPP. 658, fol. 101 a): "for Metatron's name is YHWH the Lesser". Add. 27142 quotes from Hekaloth (et al.) "And he (Metatron) is the crown of the attributes of the Holy One, and his name is as the name of His Master: THE LESSER YHWH" Add. 15299, fol. 134 a (Widdiy Yaphé): "all the princes that are standing beneath the Lesser YHWH". ha-QATAN is very near to ascribing to him an intermediary Function of Deity. But it here denotes his function of being God's representative. As His representative the Most High has conferred upon him part of His essence which is in His name. Cf. how acc. to later traditions Metatron is regarded as part of the Shekina, the body of Shekina, "the Shekina is called by his name Metatron" (YR. i. 57 a). Further on the significance of the name 'the Lesser YHWH' see Introduction, section 8. (Add. 27199, fol. 114 a: שם הגדול כי שמי בקרבו speaking of Metatron.) The expression 'the little Iao' is found in Pistis Sophia (ed. Horner), page 6 (12b) (ed. Schmidt, pp. 7, 8). Cf. Introduction, 8 (p) and 11 H 2 (a).

Ch. xiii. (Cf. the parallel chapter xli.) ON THE CROWN WITH WHICH THE HOLY ONE CROWNED METATRON ACC. TO THE PRECEDING CHAPTER VS. 3, HE WRITES THE MYSTICAL LETTERS "BY WHICH HEAVEN AND EARTH ETC. WERE CREATED". This is indicated as a distinction assigned to Metatron over 'all the children of heaven' (cf. ch. xii. 1). The idea is presumably to denote that Metatron's crown is the counterpart of the Crown of the Most High, just as Metatron's throne and curtain (ch. x. 1) are the counterparts of the Divine Throne and Curtain resp. Acc. to Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 13 and iii. 50, the "22 letters by which the whole Torah was given to the Tribes of Israel... are engraved with a flaming style on the Fearful Crown (cf. ch. xxix. 1)". And the latter passage continues: "and when the Holy One, blessed be He, desired to create the world, they all went down and stood before Him". Mass. Hek. vii: "the crown with the Explicit Name is on His (fore)head".

(1) the letters by which were created heaven and earth. Which are these letters? In three different ways the conception of 'Creation by letters' is expressed: (1) the world was created by the letter Beth, being the first one of the letters of the Tora (Bērēshith): Gen. R. i. 14, Tj. Chag. 77 c, Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 5: for on the Tora the Creation was based; (2) the letters of the Divine Name are the constituents of the world (Zohar, ii. 76 a b), especially the letters of the YHWH and 'EHYE, viz. י, ה, ו, א. But also in particular the letters Yod and He (common to both these names and found in the name YAH). The biblical passage Is. xxvi. 4 tempest; the letters by which were created all ⁷the needs of the world ⁸and all ⁸⁷the orders of Creation.

(2) And every single letter ⁹sent forth ⁹¹⁰time after time as it were ¹⁰¹¹lightnings, ¹²time after time as it were ¹²torches, ¹²time after time as it were ¹²flames of fire, ¹²time after time ¹²¹¹(rays) like [as] the rising of the sun and the moon and the planets.

(cf. ch. xlii. 4) is used as support, interpreted thus: "By Yōd Hē He created the worlds". The 'worlds': "the world to come with Yōd, this world by He" or vice versa (YR. i. 8 b). From the word behibbare'ām, read bē Hē bē'ā'ām (by He did He create them), in Gen. ii. 4, support is brought for the statement: 'by He heaven and earth were created'. The first word of the Tora (Bērēshith, read Bārā Sheth (He created (by) six) together with the passage Is. xxvi. 4 already mentioned (interpreted: By YH YHWH he created the worlds) are used as support for the creation of heaven and earth and the world by the six letters: ה, י, ה, י, ה, י (Ma'ase Bereshith, S. Raziell, Or. 6577 foll. (19 b, 20 a b). Cf. for further references: TB. Men. 29 b, Tf. Chag. 77, Gen. R. xii. 2, 9, Mass. Hek. vii, Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 23, 24, 53, 55, 56, YR. i. 4 b, 8 b. (3) The world was created by the twenty-two letters (which of course are also regarded as constituting the Divine Name). Pirqe R. Ishm. (Bodl. MICH. 175, foll. 20 a-26 a, ch. xxi cont.) the statement to this effect is based likewise upon Is. xxvi. 4. The creation of everything in heaven and on earth by means of the twenty-two letters is notably the fundamental doctrine of the S. Yeşira: "By means of the 22 letters, by giving them a form and a shape, by mixing them and combining them in different ways, God made the soul of all that which has been created and of all that which will be" (ii. 2, cited by Abelson in Jewish Mysticism, p. 104). Cf. ib. p. 100 from Ber. 55 a: "Bezalel knew how to join together the letters by means of which the heavens and earth were created". Cf. also the "Sa'adya" commentary on S. Yeşira, ii. 2. As no special letters are named here and no reference is made to the 'name', also because the wording suggests a plurality, THE 'LETTERS' ARE PRESUMABLY IN THE PRESENT CHAPTER TO BE UNDERSTOOD AS THE 22 LETTERS. In ch. xlviii d 5 the conferment upon Metatron of the twenty-two letters is explicitly stated.

(2) And every single letter sent forth etc. Cf. ch. xxxix. 1 and ch. xlviii b 1, from which it appears as if the reading of L might probably be original: 'flew off'. Cf. notes ad loca. On 'the mystical letters' vide Introduction, section 14 (1).

The idea of creation by letters (of the Name) is to be traced back in the Enoch literature to 1 En. lxix. 14-25: "the hidden Name (enunciated) in the oath... and these are the secrets of this oath... through it the earth was founded... the sea was created... the depths made fast... the sun and moon complete their course" (Charles' ed.).

Ch. xiv. In the form of a narrative of how different princes and angels trembled before Metatron, when they saw him crowned by the Most High, the PRESENT CHAPTER GIVES AN EXPOSITION OF THE VARIOUS ANGELIC POWERS UNDER METATRON'S AUTHORITY. These comprise mainly: (1) the princes of kingdoms, including Samael ('who is greater than all of them'); (2) the princes (of) the 'Elim, 'Er'ellim and Tafšarim; (3) the so-called 'rulers of the world', i.e. (a) the angels appointed over the elementary powers of the world, fire, ice, wind, lightning, thunder, snow, rain, (b) the angels appointed over the heavenly bodies, including the angels of 'the day' and 'the night'. It will be noticed that these angels and angelic functions fall within the traditional dominion of the 'Prince of the World': METATRON IS HERE (cf. on chh. ix. 5, x. 3) DENOTED AS VIRTUAL PRINCE OF THE WORLD, HAVING AUTHORITY OVER THE 72 PRINCES OF KINGDOMS (cf. ch. xxx) AND OVER THE 'RULERS OF THE WORLD'.

(1) all the Princes of Kingdoms. Metatron is particularly depicted as the ruler over the princes of kingdoms; cf. chh. x. 3, xvi. 1, 2, xlviii c 9, and on iii. 2. For the conception of the princes of kingdoms—the representatives of the nations of the world—see on ch. xvii. 8 and cf. chh. xviii. 2, xxx. 2. who are in the height of 'Araboth Raqia', the highest of the heavens. The princes of kingdoms are usually represented as having their place in the highest of the heavens, near the Throne of God. They form the Celestial Beth Din, the Divine Council (ch. xxx). See on ch. xvii. 8 (in Raqia') and xviii. 2 (in the 'Araboth Raqia', but in rank under the guardians of the Halls of Araboth).

'Elim, the princes of the 'Elim. A class of angels mentioned also chh. xv B 1 and xix. 6 (in the reading of B). The name is derived from Ex. xv. 11 and Ezek. xxxii. 21. Mekilta on the former passage explains 'Elim' as "those who minister before the Holy One in the high heavens", thus denoting them as angels. The 'Er'ellim and 'Tafšarim, also in ch. xxxiii. 7. The 'Er'ellim, denoting angels (in general?) in Ket. 104 a and Yer. Kil. 32 a, are derived from Is. xxxiii. 7. They are one of the 'ten classes of angels' (under the rulership of Mikael, Mass. 'Asiluth, Zohar, Ex. xliii; Maimon, Y. Ch. Y. T.), also mentioned as one of the first classes of angels in YR. i. 13 a (from Midrash Kōnēn) and i. 31 a (from 'Ör ha-Chayyim). The Tafšarim (Jer. li. 27, Nah. iii. 17) occur here and in ch. xxxix. 2 only. For the hosts of every heaven (om. by L) cf. xvii. 2.

(2) Even Sammael ⁵, the Prince of the Accusers, who is greater than all the princes of kingdoms on high, feared and trembled before me.

(2) Sammael, the Prince of the Accusers, who is greater than all the princes of kingdoms. For Sammael cf. on ch. xxvi. 21. He is here put in relation to the princes of kingdoms, probably regarded as the chief of these princes. As 'the prince of Rome'—ch. xxvi. 12—he is naturally included in this category, and as a representative of Rome, Israel's greatest oppressor, he also becomes the representative of all the Gentile nations and the leader of the princes who accuse Israel (represented by Mikael) on high. From this point of view one trend of traditions regards the princes of kingdoms, under Sammael, as evil, demoniacal powers. In the present book the tendency is contrary: in ch. xxx the princes of kingdoms, under the Prince of the world, together plead the cause of the world before God in a universal sense, and here they are all subjected under the rulership of Metatron whose authority supersedes that of Sammael.

(3) The angels of the elementary forces of fire, hail, wind, lightnings, etc., are comprised with those of the heavenly bodies under the category of 'rulers of the world' ('who rule the world under their hands'). Cf. 2 En. iv-vi where the first heaven is said to contain "the rulers of the orders of the stars" together with the angels guarding "the treasures of snow, ice, clouds and dew". The names and characteristics of the angels of 1 En. vi. 7 and viii show a combination of elementary and sidereal-planetary powers: Kokabiel, evidently = Kokbiel of vs. 4 (planets or stars), Shamsiel (= Shimshiel of vs. 4: the sun), Sariel (the moon) and Ezeqeel (= Ziqiel of vs. 4: the sparks or lightnings); cf. Zaqiel, Baraqijal (= Baraqiel: lightnings), Jomjael (= Yomiel?, prince of the day, here Shimshiel). For the close connection of the gods, angels or rulers of elementary and planetary phenomena attested in Persian religion, Mithraism and Gnosticism cf. Bousset, Hauptprobleme der Gnosis, pp. 223-237. Cf. Diels, Elementum, pp. 41 seqq., pointing out that the στοιχεῖα, 'elements', of N.T.-time comprise elementary powers and planets (Gal. iv. 3, 9, Col. ii. 8, 20 etc.) For planetary angels, spirits or demons cf. 1 En. lx 15-22, 2 En. xv, xvi. 7, Jub. ii. 2, 4 Ez. vi. 41, 2 Bar. vi. 1, item 1 En. lxi. 10 ("principalities...and the powers of earth and water"), ib. lxvi. 2 ("angels...over the

(4) Gabriel the angel of the fire. This seems to be a remnant of a tradition, connecting the archangels or the four 'Presences' with the elements and planets. Such a tradition is preserved in Tiqqunē Zohar, no. 70 ("Mikael is appointed over the water or seas, Gabriel over the fire, Uriel over the wind, Raphael over the 'dust of the ground', the earth"). For Uriel as the angel of the fire, see BOX, Ezra-Ap. pp. 20, 21. Shimshiel, the angel over the day. The name is derived from Shemesh (sun). Shemesh and Yom are often equivalent (cf. TB. Ab. Zar. 4 b, 5 a, Rashi). The name Yomiel which would have been more strictly in accordance with the scheme of the preceding angelic names (each derived from the name of their function or of the element over which they are appointed) occurs already in 1 En. vi. 7 ('Jomjael' cf. above). In Hek. Zot. Bodl. MICH. 9, fol. 68 a, 'Yomael' is one of seven angels connected with the seven heavens. Cf. note on ch. xvii. 3. Cf. also Shamsiel, 1 En. viii. 3 (who taught men "the signs of the sun"). For Galgalliel, 'Ophanniel, Kokbiel, Rahatiel, as angels over sun, moon, planets and constellations, see the identical representation—in a fuller form—in ch. xvii. 4-7. Cf. ch. xlvi. 3 (Rahatiel). 'Ophanni'el as the prince of the Ophannim, see ch. xxv (which preserves traces of the connection of this angel with "the globe of the moon"). Vide the consummate exposition of the angelic names in the parallel passage of 1 En. vi (with variant readings) given by CHARLES, in The Book of Enoch, Oxford, 1912, pp. 16, 17!

(5) crown of glory. . . . Metatron's crown is here called 'crown of glory', in contrast to the preceding where it is always referred to as 'crown of kingship'.

Metatron transformed into fire

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the angel, the Prince of the Presence, the Glory of all heavens, said to me:

(1) As soon as the Holy One, blessed be He, took me ¹in (His) service¹ to attend the Throne of Glory and ²the Wheels (Galgallim) of the Merkaba and the needs³ of Shekina, forthwith my flesh was changed into flames, my sinews into flaming fire, my bones into coals of burning juniper, ⁴the light of⁴ my eye-lids into ⁵splendour of⁵ lightnings, my eye-balls into fire-brands, the hair of my head into hot flames, all my limbs into wings of burning fire and the whole of my body into glowing fire.

For fire as the regular substance of the angels, see Introduction (Angelol., Nature, etc., of the angels). The Tos. (Yeb. 16 b) record the piyyutic statement: "Metatron, the Prince, who was made from flesh into fire", meaning "Enoch is Metatron". See YR. i. 54 b.

Ch. xv B. THIS ADDITIONAL PIECE which is embodied in B and L in a disconnected style PRESERVES A FRAGMENT OF AN 'ASCENSION OF MOSES' (vss. 2 seqq.). This 'Ascension of Moses' was connected with the Metatron-tradition, in so far as Metatron plays the rôle of an intermediary between the Deity and Moses (cf. ch. xlviii D 7): vss. 4 and 5. Cf. also the Gedullath Moshe and the quotation from Pirge Hekalot by R. Ishmael in YR. ii. 66 a ("Said to me Metatron, the Prince of the Presence; When Moses ascended on high, the Holy One, blessed be He, gave me command and conferred on me from his Shi'ur Qoma (stature) seventy thousand myriads by seventy thousand myriads of parasangs..."). (1) Metatron is standing before the Most High: 'Prince of the Presence'.

(1) he goes in under the Throne of Glory, the place of the treasures and also of the 'Tabernacle of the Youth'. he has a great tabernacle on high. The Tabernacle (Sanctuary) of Metatron under the Throne: Sepher Qoma (Bodl. opp. 467, fol. 61 a), "Metatron goes in under the Throne to say the 'Blessed'", acc. to Hilkoth Metatron, Add. 27199, fol. 114 a, item "to prostrate himself before the Holy One" (commentary on Sepher ha-qQoma, Bodl. opp. 658, fol. 101 a). "The Tabernacle of the Youth whose name is Metatron" was completed by the ministering angels simultaneously with the completion of the Tabernacle on earth acc. to Num. R. xii. 15 (with reference to Nu. vii. 1). Cf. Zohar, ii. 159 a and Introduction. Metatron is the High Priest on high (Shemoth shel Metatron, Bodl. MICH. 256, fol. 29 a), thus occupying the position elsewhere assigned to Mikael. Cf. Zohar, iii. 50 a: two Altars on high. The priest of the inner Altar is כהן עליון מכלה and of the outer Mikael, שר רבא, and he brings forth the fire of deafness etc. Literally the same is said in S. ha-qQoma (Bodl. opp. 467, foll. 61 a b) with the addition "(from the mouth of the Holy One) and the Explicit Name that the Youth Metatron recites (i.e. in the Tabernacle)".

But Moses prayed for mercy, first⁶ for Israel and after that⁷ for himself: and He who sitteth on the Merkaba opened the windows that are above the heads of the Kerubim. And a host of 1800 advocates⁸—and the Prince of the Presence, Metatron, with them—went forth to meet Moses. And they took⁹ the prayers of Israel⁹ and put them¹⁰ ¹¹as a crown¹¹ on the head of the Holy One, blessed be He.

the theme of the revelations to Moses is perhaps to be accounted for by the traditional association of the Tabernacle on high with the Tabernacle completed by Moses and by Metatron's function as revealer of the 'secrets' to Moses. Cf. ch. xlviii D 3, 7. the habitations of the chashmal. chashmal, derived from Ezek. i. 4, is interpreted either as an angelic name (chashmal, chashmallim, cf. note on ch. vii) or as a celestial Matter. In any case the 'abodes of the chashmal' here mean the highest or central place in heaven. Acc. to Gikatillas, Sod ha-Chashmal, the prophet (or the seer) after having entered the successive Halls at last arrives at the 'Hall of the Chashmal', the Chashmal being the equivalent of the 'Chayyoth of fire' (Arze Lebanon, 40 a b. Cf. 41 a: "the inner chashmal and the outer chashmal etc."). the heart of the Lion, the Lion = one of the four Chayyoth, Ezek. i. 10. they desired to burn him. Cf. the Rev. of Moses, e.g. YR. ii. 66 b ("I—Moses—saw the company of the angels of dread who surround the Throne of Glory...and they all desired to burn me"): it is a symbol of guard. Cf. i. 3, 4. opened the windows that are above the heads of the Kerubim. These are the windows through which the prayers of men are let into the Presence of the Godhead. In the Widduy Yaphe the supplicant prays that the Kerubim who are by the side of the Chayyoth and the Throne of Glory may open "the windows that are in the Throne of Glory...in the habitations" and let in his prayer before Him who sitteth on the Kerub, etc. 1800 advocates, i.e. angels who plead in favour of Israel. The kerub is advocate already in TB. Chag. 13 b. the prayers of Israel... as a crown. This represents the frequent idea of the prayers wreathed into diadems on the head of the Most High. Usually the angel-prince Sandalfon is assigned the function of receiving the prayers of the righteous and making them into crowns for 'his Creator'. Here this function is ascribed to the advocating angels under Metatron. (Sandalfon is nowhere mentioned in the present book.) (Cf. Chag. 13 b, Rev. Moses YR. ii. 66 b, Zohar, ii. 58 a, i. 167 b.) Acc. to Yalqut Chadash, mal'akim, no. 25, "Metatron brings the prayers of Israel before the Holy One, blessed be He". Ib. ib. no. 9, "There are three who receive the prayers: 'Akatriel (cf. vs. 4), Metatron and Sandalfon", of these three, acc. to ib. ib. no. 38, 'Akatriel receives the prayers of the 'neshāmā' (the spirit, the highest part of man), Metatron those of the ru'ach (the soul, as it is perhaps best translated), Sandalfon those of the néfesh (the mental or vital part of man). And ib. ib. no. 95, Metatron receives the prayers and ascends through 900 of the 955 heavens (cf. ch. xlviii A 1), handing them over to Akatriel. A class of angels receiving the prayers, as here, is also represented in Masseket Asilut, ch. v (Jellinek, Ginze Chokmath ha-qabbala), "in the world of 'Asiyya are the 'Ophannim and (the angels who) receive the prayers and requests..."

(3) And they said "Hear, O Israel etc." This seems to indicate that the fragment was connected with a midrashic exposition of the Shēma. It is difficult to determine the different subjects of the sentences of the present verse. 'They' and 'their' probably refer to the advocating angels mentioned in the preceding verse, except in they give all this honour etc. which is equivalent to 'is given all this honour...' and in they answered which should be emended 'he (Metatron) answered'.

(4) In that moment spake Akatriel Yah Yehod Sebaoth. Akatriel Yah Yehod Sebaoth is here in all probability a name of the Most High, not of an angel: cf. 'prayer that he prayeth before me' and vs. 5: '(Metatron says, probably with reference to the words attributed to Akatriel in this verse,) now God delights in thee'. Akatriel as a name of God occurs in the well-known passage Ber. 7 a. Akatriel ("the crown of God", "God crowned") is cabbalistically the name of the Godhead as manifested on the Throne of Glory. He is identical with the Kerub ha-mMeyuchad (Or. 5510, fol. 127 b) and represents the sefira Keter. Akatriel is, however, also a frequent name of an angel, in this case usually without the appendix Yah Yehod Sebaoth; cf. quotations in note on vs. 2 above. It may be apposite here to give the view of Cordovero (Parades, quoted YR. i. 90 a): he maintains that Akatriel even in Ber. 7 a refers to an angel, not to God: "said R. Ishmael, I saw Akatriel Yah YHWH Sebaoth etc. This means the angel who receives the prayers, and not the King of the Glory, for if so, he (R. Ishmael) would not have said 'I saw'—God forbid! As is known, Akatriel is a prince on high and not God. And the 'Yah Yah Sebaoth' means nothing more than that he is like other angels who are called by the name of their Master (cf. on xxix. i, x. 3, iii. 2)".

Hear thou his prayer and fulfil his desire. HENCE METATRON IS CONCEIVED OF AS GOD'S REPRESENTATIVE NOT ONLY TO THE ANGELS BUT ALSO TO MAN. The underlying idea is here probably Metatron's identification with the 'angel' of Ex. xxxiii. 20 seqq.

(5) For thy face shines from one end of the world to the other. Cf. Ex. xxxiv. 29. Moses has obtained from the ethereal light or splendour of the Divine lest I bring guiltiness upon myself". Metatron said to him: "Receive the letters of the oath, in (by) which there is no breaking the covenant"¹⁵ (which precludes any breach of the covenant).

CHAPTER XVI¹

Metatron divested of his privilege of presiding on a Throne of his own on account of Acher's misapprehension in taking him for a second Divine Power

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, the Glory of all heaven, said to me:

(1) At first I was sitting upon a² great Throne at the door of the Seventh Hall; and I was judging³ the children of heaven, ⁴the household on high⁴ by authority of the Holy One, blessed be He. And I divided Greatness, Kingship, Dignity, Rulership, Honour and Praise, and Diadem and Crown of Glory unto all the princes of kingdoms, Ch. xvi. 1 Chh. xvi-xxii om. by E. Ch. xvi is not included in the Part of Baraitas from the Ma'ase Merkaba in L, but a recension of it follows immediately after the version of ch. xii, without reference to source. 2 so BDL. A: 'the' 3 L ins. 'all' 4-4 BDL om.

Glory. For 'the oath' cf. 1 En. lxix. 14-25. The oath contains Divine letters, i.e. letters of the Divine names. Cf. Introduction, section 14 (1).

Ch. xvi. The present chapter is a different version of the well-known narrative in Chag. 15 a (cf. Tos. Chag. 2, 3, Yer. Chag. ii. 1, fol. 77 b). The main DIFFERENCES between the two versions are: (1) in Chag. 15 a Metatron's privilege of 'sitting' in the heavens is explained from his being the scribe, recording the merits of Israel, here the view of the preceding chapters is accepted (ch. x. 2 seqq.) acc. to which Metatron was seated on a Throne of his own as judge and ruler over the angels, in particular the princes of kingdoms, (2) in Chag. the reason for or justification of the punishment administered on Metatron is that he did not rise when he saw Acher beholding him (so as to prevent the misapprehension as to the Unity of the Godhead; this is omitted here, (3) the execution of punishment is in Chag. attributed to a plurality of angels, not further defined, here the angel 'Anaphiel', known from ch. vi. 1 and allied traditions (see on ch. x. 3) as having occupied a position above Metatron, is used for this purpose. (A: 'Aniyyel').

(1) At first I was sitting upon a great Throne at the door of the Seventh Hall. Cf. ch. x. 1-3. THE OPENING GIVES THE IMPRESSION THAT THE CH. IS AN INDEPENDENT FRAGMENT. INDEED VS. 1 REPEATS THE DETAILS OF CHH. X, XLVIII C 8, 9, WITH THE EXPLICIT ADDITION THAT THE DISTINCTIONS IN QUESTION, CONFERRED UPON METATRON, WERE ONLY TEMPORARY ('AT FIRST', 'IN THE BEGINNING'). The rôle here assigned to Metatron is markedly primarily the rulership over the princes of kingdoms. Over these he presides in the Celestial Court, passing judgement upon the heavenly household but also as conferring upon them their authority and while I was presiding (lit. sitting) in the Celestial Court (Yeshiba), and the princes of kingdoms were standing before me, on my right and on my left—by authority of the Holy One, blessed be He.

(2) But when Acher⁵ came to behold the vision of the Merkaba and fixed his eyes on me, he feared and trembled before me and his soul was affrighted even unto departing from him, because of fear, horror and dread of me, when he beheld me sitting upon a throne like a king with all the ministering angels standing by me as my servants and all the princes of kingdoms 'adorned with crowns'⁶ surrounding me: (3) in that moment he opened his mouth and said: "Indeed, there are two Divine Powers in heaven!" (4) Forthwith Bath Qol (the Divine Voice) went forth 'from heaven' from before the Shekina and said: "Return, ye backsliding children (Jer. iii. 22), except Acher!"

5 DL: 'Elisha ben Abuya who is (also called) Acher' B: (instead of 'Acher came') 'came Elisha ben Abuya and he was standing behind (corr. reading for 'Acher') YHWH' 6-6 so DL (cf. on vs. 3 of ch. xii, chh. xvii. 8, xviii. 3 beg.). emblems of rulership: again a trait of the Prince of the World conception. presiding in the Celestial Court or council. Metatron is depicted in a position similar to that of God presiding in the Celestial Beth Din in chh. xxviii c 7-9, xxx. The conception is implied in ch. x and ch. xlviii c 8, 9. Metatron's presidency in his yeshiba is apparently pictured after the pattern of God's presidency in the highest Beth Din, and naturally so, Metatron being God's representative and vice-regent. by authority of the Holy One, blessed be He. It is emphasized that Metatron's presidency in the yeshiba and his rulership are derived from 'his King'.

(2) when Acher came to behold the vision of the Merkaba. Acher, as Elisha ben Abuya was called after his 'fall', is a well-known figure of Rabbinic (in modern time characterized as 'the Faust of the Talmud'): see, besides Chag. 15 a and Yer. Chag. 77 b, Rut. R. vi, Eccl. R. to vii. 8, 26 (P. Aboth, iv. 25), further Graetz, Gnosticismus u. Judentum, pp. 62-71, Chaluz, v. 66-72, Smolenskin in Hash-Shachar, v. 66-72, Steinschneider, Elisha ben Abuya, Bacher in Agada der Tannaiten (R. Meir, etc.) came to behold the vision of Merkaba: acc. to the Talmud-passages he was one of the four who 'entered Paradise' in their lifetime, an expression evidently denoting mystical experiences and speculations on the 'Ma'ase Merkaba', here he is simply denoted as one of those who beheld the vision of the Merkaba (as R. Ishmael, ch. i. 1 seq.).

(3) Indeed, there are two Divine Powers in heaven (cf. Chag. 15 a: "are there, God forbid, two Divine Powers?"). Acher is described as giving vent to the most abominable heretic view, that denying the absolute Unity of the Godhead. The Talmudic tradition emphasizes Acher's aberration into heresy, and also, as it seems, that his heresy was caused by his mystical speculations. Acher, after having entered Paradise 'cut the plantations', i.e., probably, seduced scholars from the right faith. (Cf. also the Tosaphists ad locum, Chag. 15 a).

(4) Bath Qol went forth...and said: "Return, ye backsliding children, except Acher!" (identical with Chag. 15 a). Acher was to be excluded from the opportunity of forgiveness through repentance, offered to all other children of God.

(2) And every one of them is the prince of the host of (one) heaven. And each one of them is accompanied by 496,000 myriads of ministering angels.

(3) MIKAEL, the great prince, is appointed over the seventh heaven, the highest one, which is in the 'Araboth.

(2) each one of them is accompanied by 496,000 myriads of ministering angels. The number 496,000 (myriads) generally refers to the ministering angels as performers of the Qēdushsha (cf. chh. xxxv. 1, xl. 3). 496 is the numerical value of Malkut (Kingdom): the song-uttering angels proclaim God's sovereignty, 'take upon themselves the yoke of the Kingdom of heaven' (ch. xxxv. 6). The hosts of song-uttering angels are usually depicted as under the authority, not of the seven archangels—'princes of the host'—but of the four 'princes of the army' (ch. xxxv. 3), 'the four presences' (1 En. xxxix f., see on xviii. 4): MIKAEL, GABRIEL, 'URIEL (Nuriel) and RAPHAEL. The conception of the four presences is closely connected with that of the seven archangels.

Each one of them is the prince of the host of one heaven. (3) Mikael... is appointed over the seventh heaven, Gabriel, the prince of the host, is appointed over the sixth heaven etc. The expression 'princes of the hosts' is used of Mikael and Gabriel in Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 48. Metatron is called 'one of the princes of the host' in Shi'ur Qoma (Bodl. MICH. 175, fol. 18 b). The term is probably derived from Josh. v. 14 ("the captain of the host of the Lord"), "the prince of the host of YHWH" which is referred either to Metatron or to Mikael or to Gabriel (cf. Siuni, 53 b-d). The idea of the multitudes of angels as divided in hosts, distributed through the seven heavens underlies ch. xviii. 1 (cf. also ch. xiv. 1). The tendency of arranging the orders of the angels according to the system of the seven heavens appears already in the Pseudepigrapha, although the traditions are somewhat confused. Test. Levi, iii. assigns different classes of angels to each of the seven heavens (1st heaven: "the spirits of the retributions for the vengeance"; 2nd heaven: "the hosts of the armies which are ordained for the day of judgement"; 3rd heaven: acc. to rec. 3 (BA^{BS}) = 2nd heaven (a); 4th heaven: "thrones and dominions in which always they offer praise to God"; 5th: "angels who bear answers (prayers) to the angels of the presence"; 6th: "the archangels who minister and make propitiation to the Lord"; 7th: "the Glory of God and the angels of the Presence" (BA^{BS})). See CHARLES, A and P, ad loc. Acc. to 2 En. iii-ix, to the first heaven are located the rulers of the stars and the angels set over the treasuries of ice, snow, clouds, etc., to the 4th the sun and moon and the angels over them together with "an armed host of angels praising God", to the 5th the Grigori (Watchers), to the 6th "seven bands of angels... who make the orders and learn the goings of the stars and the alteration of the moon and the revolution of the sun... (who are) appointed over seasons and years etc.", to the 7th "fiery troops of great archangels etc." In 3 Bar. the angels attending the sun, moon (and the stars ch. ix. 1) are assigned to the 3rd heaven, in the 5th heaven (ib. xi. 1 seqq.) is Mikael "who holds the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven". In Ascension of Isaiah similarly the seven heavens are depicted as containing different hosts of angels, each surpassing the lower one in glory. (Vide CHARLES, Asc. Is. in T.E.D.)

GABRIEL, the prince of the host, is appointed over the sixth heaven which is in Mākōn.

³SHATAQIEL, prince of the host, is appointed over the fifth heaven which is in Mā'ōn.³

SHAḤAQI'EL⁴, prince of the host, is appointed over the fourth heaven which is in Zebul.

BADARIEL⁵, prince of the host, is appointed over the third heaven which is in Sheḥaqim.

The seven archangels (holy angels who watch) are enumerated in the well-known passage, ch. xx of 1 En., together with the dominions of their rulership: Uriel, Raphael, Raguel, Mikael, Saraqael, Gabriel, Remiel. In none of the adduced passages the present conception of the archangels as rulers each over one of the seven heavens, is developed: the archangels are generally assigned to a specified heaven (the 6th or 7th, cf. the references to Test. Levi and 2 En. above). Parallels to the present picture are, however, found in Pirqe R. Ishmael (Bodl. MICH. 175, foll. 20 seqq.), ch. xxi cont. and Hek. Zot. (Bodl. MICH. 9, foll. 67 b, 68 a), although with different names and order. In the former passage, which is closely dependent upon the representation of Chag. 12 b, the names of the princes of the respective heavens are: Wilōn-QEMUEL (and the angels of destruction, cf. Test. Levi above and Gedullat Moshe), Raqia'-GALLISUR, Shechagim-SHAPHIEL, Zebul-MIKAEL (in accordance with Chag. 12 b), Ma'ōn-GABRIEL, Makon-SANDALFON, 'Araboth-no name given. In Hek. Zot. the seven angels "praising the Holy One, blessed be He, in each heaven" are: 1st heaven, MIKAEL; 2nd, GABRIEL; 3rd, SODIEL; 4th, 'AKATRIEL; 5th, RAPHAEL; 6th, BODIEL; 7th, YOMAEI. A trace of the tradition locating the archangels, each to one of the seven heavens, is perhaps recognizable also in Test. of Solomon, vss. 59 seqq. (ed. Conybeare, YQR. vol. xi. 1-45), "RAPHAEL...BAZAZATH who has his seat in the second heaven...RATHANAEL who sits in the third heaven...IAMETH...".

The close connection with the rulers of the heavenly bodies in which the archangels as princes of the seven heavens are represented in the present chapter is perhaps indicative of the range of ideas from which the conception has emerged: the planetary or sidereal speculations. The important role played by these speculations is discernible also in the pseudepigraphal passages referred to above. It is possible, that the idea of the seven archangels as rulers over the seven heavens was brought about through the conception of the heavens as planetary spheres, the archangels being originally the princes of the seven planets. The conception of the seven heavens as planetary spheres is attested in 2 En. xxviii. 3: "the seven stars, each one of them in its heaven". Cf. YR. i. 15 b, 16 b. This idea was probably obscured by the parallel tendency of assigning the heavenly bodies to a definite heaven, a tendency at work in the pseudepigraphal works in question and in its final form represented in the tradition locating the sun, moon, planets and constellations to Raqia', the 2nd heaven (in Rabbinic, Chag. 12 b et al. and throughout the present book). The tradition of the seven archangels with their suites as rulers over the planets (including dominion over constellations and elements) might be traced in the representation of 2 En. xix, acc. to which seven bands of angels "make the orders and learn the goings of the stars"; cf. above. This conception obtains in later sources: YR. i. 6 a: "MIKAEL is appointed over Saturn, BARAQIEL over Jupiter, GABRIEL over Mars, RAPHAEL over the sun, CHASDIEL over Mercury, SIDQIEL over Venus, 'ANA'EL over the moon", ib. i. 16 a: "Mikael: the Sun, Gabriel: the Moon, Qaphsiel: Saturn, Sammael: Mars, Raphael: Jupiter, 'Ana'el: Venus". A trace of the same idea is possibly to be seen in vss. 35-41 of Testament of Solomon; seven archangels rule over and frustrate the seven demons connected with 'the seven stars' (the seven planets or the Pleiades, cf. Conybeare's note in locum). Of these seven high angels six are named: LAMECHALAL, BARUCH-IACHEL, MARMARATH (Marmaraoth, vs. 94), BALTHIEL, ASTERAOTH, URIEL. Uriel is the angel set over the stars acc. to 1 En. lxxii-lxxxii. In 1 En. xx Raguel is "one of the holy angels who takes vengeance on the world of luminaries".

As regards the names of the seven archangels it has already been pointed out that all the different sources vary on this point. To the passages given above may be added Test. Salomon, vss. 73-81: the names are there: MIKAEL, GABRIEL, URIEL, SABRAEL, ARAEL, IAOTH, ADONAEI. From the different enumerations can be seen that the names most frequently recurring are those of the 'four presences', "Mikael, Gabriel, Raphael and Uriel", and of these Mikael and Gabriel are common to most of the sources. (Cf. how 1 En. lxxxvii. 2, 3 clearly represents the seven archangels as consisting of four, i.e. Presences and three with them.) Of the rest some are evidently derived from the old lists of superior angels, of which parts are preserved e.g. in 1 En. vi, viii, lxix (as Watchers, Fallen Angels), lxxxii. 10-20 (leaders of the stars, rulers of seasons and months). Baraqiel (D) here is the Baraqijal of 1 En. vi, Baraqiel, ib. lxix. 2. Cf. Barakiel (A) with Berkael 1 En. lxxxii. 17, Badariel (A) with Batael 1 En. vi. 7, Batarjal ib. lxix. 2. The names are older than the conception of the seven archangels. But it is significant that such names are chosen as originally represent the angels ruling over the heavenly bodies and over the elementary powers. in Wilon which is in Shamayim, 'which is in Shamayim' is a gloss. 'Shamayim' is the Hebrew synonym of Wilon (velum) as name of the first heaven.

(4-7) Under them are Galgalliel... 'Ophanniel... Rahaṭiel... Kokbiel, with subservient angels. The heavenly bodies are divided in the four categories of sun, moon, planets and constellations as in Chag. 12 b, and, as there, are assigned to the second heaven, the Raqia'. Each of these four categories is assigned a special prince, who is accompanied by a number of assistant angels. In the present system these the Holy One, blessed be He, has made a tent for all of them, for the sun, the moon, the planets and the stars in which they travel at night from the West to the East.

(7) Under them is KOKBIEL, the prince who is appointed over all the planets. And with him are 365,000 myriads of ministering angels, great and honoured ones who move¹⁶ the planets from city to city and from province to province in the Raqia' of heavens.

princes and angels are made to rank under the seven archangels as princes of the seven heavens. As has already been pointed out, it is highly probable, that the original representation was one of the seven archangels as princes each over one of the seven spheres as containing the planets with constellations. The present systematization can be regarded as a modification of this original view to the established notion of the Raqia', the second heaven, as the place of the heavenly bodies.

The names of the princes, GALGALLIEL, 'OPHANNIEL, RAHAṬIEL, KOKBIEL are uniform with those of ch. xiv. 4. Rahaṭiel also occurs in ch. xlv. 3 in a similar function. 'Ophanniel is the prince of the 'Ophannim, ch. xxv. The names Galgalliel, 'Ophanniel and Kokbiel are derived from Galgāl (globe, i.e. of the sun), Ophan (globe, i.e. of the moon) and Kokab (planet) respectively. Rahaṭiel is, acc. to the intimation of vs. 6, derived from rahaṭ (to run). In TB. Ber. 32 b, Rahaṭon is the technical term for divisions of angels who have immediate rule over the stars and planets. Rahaṭiel is the prince over planets and constellations or luminaries in general acc. to S. Razi'el, 19 b, 21 b (cf. also Qeneh Binah, 34 b, and S. ha-Chesheq, Add. 27120, fol. 14 b). Galgalliel and 'Ophanniel seem to be comparatively late devices. Kokbiel is of early origin, cf. Kokabiel, 1 En. vi. 7, Kokabel, ib. viii. 3 (who "taught constellations"), lxxix. 2.

For the conception of angels who 'move the heavenly bodies' cf. 1 En. lxxii-lxxxii ("the Book of the Heavenly Luminaries": CHARLES), URIEL being there the prince over the heavenly bodies; lxxii. 3 ("the leaders of the stars"), lxxv. 1 ("the leaders of the heads of the thousands who are placed over the whole creation and over all the stars"), lxxix, lxxx. 1 ("the leaders of the stars of the heaven and all those who turn them"), 6 ("chiefs of the stars"), lxxxii. 4 and esp. 10-20 (the names of the leaders of the stars), 4 Ez. vi. 3, 2 En. xi. 3-5 (15 myriads of angels attend the sun during the day, and 1000 by night), Midrash 'Asereth Ma'amaroth, BH. i. 64 ("365 angels are set over the sun, moving it from window to window in Raqia'"), 3 Bar. vi. 1 seqq. (the chariot of the sun drawn by forty angels), vss. 13, 16 ("for the sun is made ready by the angels"), ib. vii. 4 ("I saw the shining sun and the angels which draw it"), ix. 1 seqq. (the moon sitting on a wheeled chariot: "and there were before it oxen and lambs and a multitude of angels... the oxen and lambs... they also are angels"). The derivation of the numbers ninety-six and eighty-eight in vss. 4 and 5 resp. is not clear. The number seventy-two of the angels assisting RAHAṬIEL, the prince of the constellations, corresponds to the seventy-two divisions of the zodiac (cf. the seventy-two princes of kingdoms, vs. 8, etc.). KOKBIEL again, vs. 7, is assisted by 365,000 myriads of ministering angels. Literally the same statement is made about KOKBIEL in S. Razi'el, 19 b. These angels "move the planets (kokabim)". It is noteworthy, that acc. to TB. Ber. 32 b, referred to above, the different camps (of angels), in the last instance sorting under the constellations, have each under them "365,000 myriads of planets (kokabim) corresponding to the days of the sun (i.e. the solar year)". The latter parts of vss. 5 and 6 are somewhat obscure. They might be remnants of expositions of the courses of the heavenly bodies, such as are given at length in 1 En. lxxii-lxxxii (the 'portals of the sun'); ch. lxxii, the moon; ch. lxxiv, the portals of sun, moon, stars and all the works of heaven; ch. lxxv. 6 seqq., cf. ch. lxxviii. 7 seq., "and fifteen parts of light are transferred to the moon till the fifteenth day (when) her light is accomplished (vs. 5 here)". The conception of the 'tent' for the sun, etc., is usually referred to Ps. xix. 5 (and 7).

(8) And over them are SEVENTY-TWO PRINCES OF KINGDOMS on high corresponding to the 72 tongues of the world. And before each one of

(8) over them are seventy-two princes of kingdoms... lit. 'above them etc.' It is difficult to reconcile this vs. with the preceding. To whom does 'above them' refer? To the 365,000 myriads of angels of vs. 7 or to the princes and angels of the heavenly bodies in general? No doubt, as the context now stands, the seventy-two princes of kingdoms are intended as princes over the angels who 'move the planets', by analogy with the seventy-two assistant angels of vs. 6. This would seem to be additional, since the real counterpart of the assistant angels of vss. 4, 5, 6 are in vs. 7, the 365,000 myriads of angels. The expression 'above them' is not appropriate in the sense which it is here made to denote, the right phrase would have been e.g. 'over them are appointed' (ועליהם ממונים). The inception 'above them' rather presupposes an exposition of the order of angelic classes, proceeding from the lower to the higher ones, hence quite contrary to that of the present chapter. The fragment is more akin to the angelological section, chh. xix seqq., to which it may even originally have belonged, since the beginning of that section is missing in the present book. See note on ch. xix. 1.

By the compiler of the present chapter the seventy-two princes of kingdoms are made the rulers over the planets. The conception of the princes of kingdoms as rulers of planets and constellations is frequently represented in later sources. Their appellation properly refers to their function as angelic leaders of the destinies of the nations, as representatives in heaven of the kingdoms on earth. As such their number is usually given as seventy (corresponding to the number of nations (tongues) of the world, enumerated Gen. x). The idea of heavenly guardians of the nations occurs in Dan. x. 20, 21, and is fully developed in Sir. xvii. 17, 1 En. lxxxix. 59 seqq. (in the metaphor of the seventy shepherds), Targ. Yer. to Gen. xi. 7, 8, TB. Yoma, 77 a, Sukka, 29 a, Gen. R. lxxviii, lxxvii, Ex. R. xxi, Lev. R. xxix, P. R. 'El. xxiv. They plead the cause of their resp. nations before God, each suffers punishment with the nation under his protection, they form the celestial Beth Din etc. For this range of ideas see chh. xxx. 1, 2, xlvi c 9 and note on xxx. 2.

The leader of the princes of kingdoms is acc. to Midr. Abkir, Yalq. on Gen. no. 132, Targ. Ps. xxxvii. 7, 8, MIKAEL, prince of Israel; acc. to ch. xxx here, the Prince of the World; and acc. to the Enoch-Metatron sections of the present book, Metatron (chh. x. 3, xiv. 1, xvi. 1, 2, xlvi c 9, cf. also xlvi d 5). In their aspect of leaders of the Gentile nations they were sometimes regarded as evil agencies (so already 1 En. lxxxix. 65, 69, xc. 17, 22, 23, 25), and as their chief was then named SAMMAEL, the prince of Rome (cf. chh. xiv. 2, xxvi. 12).

When associated with the idea of the planets and constellations as determining or ruling the destinies of the nations, it was only natural that the conception should develop into that of the princes of kingdoms as rulers over the heavenly bodies—just as the Prince of the World was made the ruler of planets and constellations (cf. ch. xxxviii. 3). This development may have begun at an early time. The seventy shepherds are already in 1 En. connected with the rulers of the world, the Watchers or Fallen Angels who, symbolized by stars, are judged together with the seventy shepherds acc. to 1 En. xc. 24. (On the identification of the princes of kingdoms with the Watchers see note on ch. xxix intr.) For the Watchers as rulers of elements, constellations, planets, etc., see 1 En. vi-viii, lxix, note on vs. 3 above and on and before every one of them, when travelling in Raqia', there are running great armies, even as (the custom is) on earth, with chariot(s), in glory and greatness, praise, song and honour.

ch. xiv. 3, 4. The connection of the 'gods of the nations' with the planets is perhaps to be seen also in TB. Sukka, 29 a. Acc. to Ma'areket ha-'Elohuth, 128 b, "the nations are allotted to the Princes and Constellations". YR., i. 15 a, gives the following quotation from Tub-ha-'Ares: "In the seven firmaments (heavens), under them, are the seven planets... (Shešem Chanokol: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury and Moon) and in these seven heavens are the Spirits of the seventy nations, ten nations under each planet, and the twelve constellations give abundance unto them".

Probably under the influence of their sideric significance the number of the princes of kingdoms was changed from seventy to seventy-two (the number of the divisions of the zodiac). In the present book they are mentioned as seventy-two in chh. xviii. 3, xxx. 2 and here. Ch. xlviii c 9, on the other hand, has 'seventy princes'. Cf. note on ch. xxx. 2 and also on ch. xlviii b 1. The two princes added were later understood as MIKAEL and GABRIEL or as MIKAEL and SAMMAEL. Acc. to YR., i. 18 a, MIKAEL is the Prince of Israel and GABRIEL the Prince of all the nations of the world. A curious effect of the alteration of seventy into seventy-two is the gloss in the present verse: corresponding to the 72 tongues of the world, which is of course a mis-emption of the regular expression "corresponding to the 70 tongues of the world".

all of them are crowned with royal crowns etc., to designate them as rulers. Cf. notes on chh. xii. 3, xviii. 1.

when he is travelling in Raqia'. This seems to indicate that the princes of kingdoms were assigned to the second heaven, the region of the heavenly bodies and thus would tend to show, that the fragment itself, apart from the context, designates the princes of kingdoms as sideric rulers. Usually the princes of kingdoms are represented as being in the highest of the heavens, by the Throne of Glory: chh. xvi. 1, 2, xxx. 1, 2. Acc. to ch. xviii. 3, being in rank above the princes of the heavens, but below the guardians of the Halls, they are probably conceived of as having their abode in the highest of the heavens, but outside the Halls. Acc. to the passage quoted YR., i. 15 a, referred to above, each of the seven heavens would contain a number of these princes. This is stated also in Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 36 ("then come all the princes of kingdoms in every heaven").

Passages in the present book mentioning the 'princes of kingdoms' are chh.: x. 3, xiv. 1, 2, xvi. 1, 2, xvii. 8, xviii. 2, 3, xxx. 2, xlviii c 9, d 5; cf. also ch. xxvi. 12.

CHAPTER XVIII

The order of ranks of the angels and the homage received by the higher ranks from the lower ones

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, the glory of all heaven, said to me:

(1) THE ANGELS OF THE FIRST HEAVEN, when(ever) they see their prince, they dismount from their horses and fall on their faces.

And THE PRINCE OF THE FIRST HEAVEN, when he sees the prince of the second heaven, he dismounts, removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

Ch. xviii. Angelological system A 3 (see Introduction, section 13 (1 c)).

This chapter (extant in D and A only) introduces an independent exposition of the angelic hierarchy. The point of connection with the preceding chapter is the mention of the princes of the seven heavens. In ch. xvii, however, these 'princes of the seven heavens' are regarded as constituting the highest rank of angels. That this is so is clear from the facts that the princes of the seventh and sixth heavens are identified with Mikael and Gabriel resp. and that they occur at the head of a classification which is arranged in an order beginning from the highest. In the present chapter, on the contrary, the princes of the heavens form the lowest class of angels in an enumeration from the lowest to the highest.

A peculiarity of this chapter which separates it in character from both ch. xvii and the rest of the angelological section is the monotonous repetition of the words 'when X see(s) X he (they) remove(s) the crown . . . from his (their) head and fall(s) etc.' the technical means by which the inferiority of one rank of angels or one angel-prince to the subsequently mentioned is indicated.

Another characteristic feature of this chapter are the abstruse forms of the names of most of the angels as compared with those of the other parts of the book, where the names are formed from the functions assigned to the angels. Here the derivations are obscure. It is noteworthy that most of the names are found in Hek. R., to which this chapter even otherwise seems to be related—e.g. by the conception of 'the watchers of the doors of the Halls' (vs. 3), the common derivation of 'ANAPHIEL (vs. 19) etc. Though several of these angel-names are not registered by Schwab, VA, and a couple of them are ἀπαξλεγόμενα as far as printed books are concerned, they are preserved in many prayers, magical formulas, etc., extant in MSS. References are given below at each name.

(1) The angels of the first heaven . . . the prince of the first heaven . . . second heaven etc. On the seven heavens see note on ch. xvii. 3. The princes, sārīm, of the several heavens are pictured as having each one his suite of angels. They are mounted on horses (cf. Mass. Hek. iv and Hek. R. xvii seqq.) and pay homage one to the other when meeting. Unlike ch. xvii the present chapter mentions no names of these princes. That is to say, that the tradition embodied here probably knows no names of the 'princes of the heavens'. Consequently, in the view of this tradition, the heavens and their rulers form a comparatively low and unimportant part of the heavenly splendours, whereas the author of ch. xvii presumably sees all the glory of the Divine Court contained within the seven heavens.

Crown of glory is the mark of distinction common to all the angels and princes in this chapter with the exception of the seventy-two princes of kingdoms (vs. 3) and the two highest princes acc. to vs. 25, to whom is assigned the 'crown of royalty'. Crowns are in the Talmudic-Midrashic literature as well as in the Apocalyptic

And THE PRINCE OF THE SECOND HEAVEN, when he sees the prince of the third heaven, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

And THE PRINCE OF THE THIRD HEAVEN, when he sees the prince of the fourth heaven, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

An exact parallel of expression is found in Alph. R. 'Aqiba, rec. B, BH. iii. p. 61.

(2) The seventy-two princes of kingdoms. They are the representatives in heaven of the different kingdoms on earth, but are also connected with the planets and constellations. Concerning them cf. notes on chh. xvii. 8 and xxx. 1, 2. In ch. xxx they are supplemented by a leader, 'the Prince of the World' (cf. TB. Yeb. 16b, Chull. 60 a, Sanh. 94 a). Their number varies between seventy and seventy-two: 1 En. lxxxix. 59, P. R. 'El. xxiv, TB. Sukka. 29 a. It is possible that the number seventy-two originated from the addition to the seventy princes of Mikael and Sammael (or Mikael and Gabriel) as their rulers. Mikael is the representative of Israel and Sammael of Rome and thereby the chief of all the Gentile nations. More probable is, however, that the number seventy-two is arrived at from astrological considerations. See note on ch. xvii. 8. Peculiar to this chapter is their position between the prince of the seventh heaven and the door-keepers of the Halls, their abode being usually near the Throne of Glory (ch. xxx. Pesiqtha. xxvii, TB. Sukka. 29 a). In ch. xvii. again, they have their place in the second heaven (Raquia') and are in rank under not only the princes of the heavens but also the princes of the sun, moon and constellations. (Cf. however note on ch. xvii. 8.)

(3) The door keepers of the first Hall in the 'Araboth Raquia'. The seven Halls or Palaces are situated in the highest of the seven heavens, the 'Araboth Raquia', and are pictured as arranged in concentric circles, 'one within the other' (ch. i. 1). (4) And the door keepers of the seventh Hall, when they see THE FOUR GREAT PRINCES, the honoured ones, WHO ARE APPOINTED OVER

3-3 D simplifies: 'And the door keepers of the first Hall before the door keepers of the second Hall, and the door keepers of the second Hall before (those of) the third, and the door keepers of the third Hall before those of the fourth etc.'

Hek. R. is in the present book quite outside the centre of interest. Cf. chh. i. 1, x. 2, xvi. 1, xxxvii. 1, xxxviii. 1, xlviii c 8. The door keepers of the Halls are in this chapter without names and definite number. In these respects it differs from Hek. R. xv, where each Hall is said to be guarded by eight angels, of which the names are given (chh. xv, xvii et seq.). Of these names—which comprise the door keepers of the first six Halls—two, viz. GEBURATIEL and ANAPHIEL, recur later in the present chapter (vss. 14 and 19) as names of higher angels.

Mass. Hek. iv, agreeing with Hek. R., gives the number of the door keepers of each Hall as eight.

Names of the chiefs of the door keepers of the Halls are found in Pirqe R. 'Ishm. xx (Bodl. MICH. 175, foll. 20 a-26 a), although different from those of Hek. R. As chief of the guardians of the fourth Hall occurs SAGNESAGIEL of vs. 11 here. Cf. Zohar, i. 41 a and ii. 245 a-268 b.

The functions of the door keepers of the Halls are the guarding of the entrance to the Halls generally and especially the control of the admittance of the aspirants to the vision of the Merkaba, so that nobody may enter who is not 'worthy' ('rā'ūy') acc. to Hek. R. (cf. ch. xvii e.a.). This is probably implied also in ch. i. 3, where R. Ishmael begs God to protect him against the zeal of Qašpiel (or Qašiel), an angel-prince who in this connection, no doubt, is to be considered as (one of) the guardian(s) of the door of the seventh Hall (cf. ib. vs. 2; Zohar, ii. 248 b).

Shekina. In ch. xxxvii the four camps of Shekina are mentioned together with 'the four chariots of Shekina'. In ch. xxxv all the myriads of camps of angels are said to be arranged in four rows, at the head of each row there being 'a prince of the army'. Probably 'the four great princes' here are to be understood as identical with the princes of the army in ch. xxxv. 3. In this case the camps of Shekina are the four companies of ministering angels arranged by the Throne of Glory, especially in their aspect as performers of Qēdushsha.

In other writings 'the four camps of Shekina' is not an infrequent term and in later cabalistic traditions a considerable amount of speculation centres round this conception. (Cf. here esp. Zohar, iii. 50 a: ר' מישרין)

Now one generally finds that the 'princes of the camps of Shekina' are named as Mikael, Gabriel, Uriel (more seldom: Nuriel) and Raphael. Cf. Mass. Hek. vi: "four companies of ministering angels praise before the Lord; the first camp under Mikael to the right, the second camp under Gabriel to the left, the third under Uriel before Him and the fourth under Raphael from behind", and it is added "the Shekina is in the middle".

Acc. to Ma'ase Merhaba (Add. 26922) 'the princes of the four camps of Shekina' are: Mikael, Gabriel, Uriel and Raphael, standing to the right, to the left, in front of and behind the Throne of Glory resp.

In P. R. 'El. iv the four angels Mikael, Uriel, Gabriel and Raphael stand by the Throne of Glory as leaders of four camps of angels glorifying the Most High. A similar picture is drawn by the Widdury Yaphe (Add. 15299, fol. 113 b).

The 'three men' visiting Abraham, Gen. xviii. 2 seqq. are in Siḡmī ad loc. once identified with the angels Mikael, Gabriel and Raphael, and again with Raphael, Uriel and Gabriel, "who are the camp of Shekina".

The conception of the four princes in charge of the 'uttering of the Song' before the Holy One, is traceable as far back as 1 En. chh. xxxix. 12, 13 and xl, lxxi, ix. 1, where there are mentioned "FOUR PRESENCES ON THE FOUR SIDES OF THE LORD OF SPIRITS... uttering praises before the Lord of Glory". Their names are here: Mikael, Raphael, Gabriel and Phanuel. See also 2 En. xviii. 9, and CHARLES, 1 En. note on xl. 2.

Towards the formation of the idea of 'four princes of the four camps of Shekina', speculations on the "four living creatures" of Ezek. i. 5, 10, and the traditions of the four princes Mikael, Gabriel, Raphael and Uriel have, presumably, combined. In later cabalistic sources one actually finds that the 'four camps of Shekina' are referred to the 'Eagle-Ox-Lion-Man' vision, e.g. YR. i. 80 a (Meg. 'Anuq.).

Instances of other developments of the conception of 'the camps of Shekina': the four camps of Shekina are imaged by the arrangement of the "armies of Israel", Nu. i. 3, acc. to Bachya (ad loc.); they surround the Shekina or "the body of Shekina" which is the same as the "Greater Metatron", but are above the Lesser Metatron who stands on the heads of the living creatures, the Chayyoth (YR. i. 57 a); "in the camp of Shekina are Metatron, Sandalphon, Uriel, Raphael, Mikael, Gabriel" (Shēnē Luchoth ha-Berith, cited by Derek 'Emeth on Zohar, i. 149 b).

(5) Tag'as. (תגאס). Not included in Schwab, VA. The name occurs in the prayer attributed to R. Hammuna ben Sabha (Or. 6577, fol. 13 a, Add. 27187, fol. 67 b, Add. 27199, fol. 299 e.a.), and also in another, anonymous, prayer in Add. 15299, fol. 104 b. In these cases it is a Divine name (really a double temura) always followed by טעצצ and letters of the Tetragrammaton. The epithet 'great children of heaven, they remove the crown of glory from their head and fall on their faces.

(6) And Tag'aṣ, ⁵the great and honoured prince⁵, when he sees BARAṬṬIEL⁶, the great prince of three fingers in the height of 'Araboth, the highest heaven, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

(7) And Baraṭṭiel⁶, the great prince, when he sees HAMON, the great prince, the fearful and honoured, pleasant and terrible one—who maketh all the children of heaven to tremble, when the time draweth nigh (that is set) for the saying of the '(Thrice) Holy', as it is written (Isa. xxxiii. 3): "At the noise of the tumult (hāmōn) the peoples are fled; at the lifting up of thyself the nations are scattered"—he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

(8) And Hamon, the great prince, when he sees ṬUTRESIEL⁷, the great prince, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

5-5 in aramaic. 6 D: 'Aṭaphiel' 7 so acc. to the full reading of D. A: מטריאל. D adds 'וי' after the name.

and honoured prince' (שרא רבא ויקריא) is the same as that given to Metatron in the beginning of Shi'ur Qoma (Bodl. opp. 467, fol. 58 a, opp. 563, fol. 52 b, S. Raziel). Cf. also in S. Elijahu, beg.... רבא ליה מיכאל שרא רבא.

This angel is said to be 'honoured with song and praise' and to stand 'at the head of all the children of heaven'. In view of the functions commonly assigned to the 'princes of the camps of the Shekina' of the preceding verse (see note above) these expressions are probably to be understood as referring to the performance of the 'Thrice Holy' and to the angels uttering the Qēdushsha. The function of the angel may be that of a conductor of the song-uttering angels.

(6) Baraṭṭiel (ברטטאל). Neither this nor the 'Aṭaphiel' of D is included in Schwab, VA. Aṭaphiel is found in Hilk. Mal'akim La, fol. 117 b. of three fingers. Cf. Hilk. Mal'akim, ib.: "'Aṭaphiel lifteth up the 'Araboth Raqia' on his fingers". Also ch. xxxiii. 3 of the present book ('the Holy Chayyoth bear the Throne of Glory... each one with three fingers'). Does the attribute 'of three fingers' here possibly stand in any connection with the recital of the Thrice Holy?

(7) Hamon, המון ('tumult'). The expression 'makes the children of heaven to tremble etc.' probably means 'announces the arrival of the time appointed for the Qēdushsha'. The trembling and fear with which all the heavenly household is seized at the moment before the recital of the Thrice Holy is pictured e.g. in ch. xxxviii. For the attributes 'fearful, honoured, pleasant and terrible' cf. the parallels of chh. xx. 1, xxii. 1, xxv. 1, xxvi. 1. This method of heaping epithets after the name of a high angel-prince is frequently employed in Hek. R. The attributes were probably from the beginning intended as marks of distinction, applied according to a certain system to denote the resp. rank assigned to each prince. (Cf. also in Mandaic.)

(8) Ṭutresiel. See Schwab, VA, pp. 134, 136. The name is of frequent occurrence, although in variant forms. Schwab explains it as 'δύτροπος El', 'piercing God'. Here and in Midrash Sar Tora it is the name of an angel. Often it appears as one of the names of the Godhead (Hek. R. xi. 2, xii, xiii, xv) or of Metatron (Sefer ha Chesheq, foll. 4 b, 8 a).

There are many variants of the name, which are enumerated in Hek. R. xii.

(9) And Tūtresiel⁷ H', the great⁹ prince, when he sees ATRUGIEL⁸, the great⁹ prince, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

(10) And Atrugiel⁸ the great⁹ prince, when he sees NA'ARIRIEL H', the great⁹ prince, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

(11) And Na'aririel H', the great⁹ prince, when he sees SASNIGIEL¹⁰, the great⁹ prince, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

(12) And Sasnigiel H', when he sees ZAZRIEL H', the great⁹ prince, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

(13) And Zazriel H', the prince, when he sees GEBURATIEL H', the prince, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

7 so acc. to the full reading of D. A: מַטְרִיֶּסִיָּאֵל. D adds 'י' after the name.
8 D: 'ATRUGNIEL י' 9 D om. 10 D adds 'י' after the name.

See also S. Raziel, 40 a, 43 b. The STUTREYAH of Zohar, ii. 245 b, 246 a, is perhaps also a variant (through transposition of the letters) of the same name.

(9 and 10) Atrugiel or Atrugniel (D) not in Schwab, VA. It is to be considered identical with the 'Atrigiel' of Hek. R. xxii. 1 and 3, the name of one of the door keepers of the seventh Hall. The form Tagriel, ib. xv and xvii, is apparently also a variant. Cf. the names 'Atrigi(a)sh' (cited from Hek. R. xxx) and Aṭarniel in Schwab, VA, p. 51. Schwab derives the former from τράγος, he-goat, goat-buck, the traditional symbol of a demon (cf. sa'ir).

Na'aririel: i.e. Na'ar 'El (Na'ar = Child, Youth, the name of Metatron, ch. iii). Occurs in Hek. R. in the form of Na'aruriel as the name of one of the door keepers of the seventh Hall (ch. xxii, together with Atrugiel). The 'H' forming the second part of the name of this and the following princes stands for the Tetragrammaton (like 'י' in D). Cf. the expression 'called by the name of YHWH', ch. ix. 3 and note, ad locum.

(11) Sasnigiel is one of the variants of 'Sagnesagiel' or 'Segansagel', in ch. xlviii. 1, 2 appearing as the last of the names of Metatron, with the epithet 'the Prince of Wisdom'. Probably derived from נָנִין (treasure), cf. גִּבּוֹרֵי חֵכְמָה.

In the Apocalyptic Fragment (e.g. BH. v. 167-169) likewise, it is the name of "the prince of the Presence" who shows R. Ishmael the future.

Other forms are:

SASNIEL: S. Raziel, 24 a, 41 a; ZEGANZEGAEI: ib. 2 b, called "the Prince of the Tora"; SANSAGGIEL: Schwab, VA, cf. the explanation given there; ZANGEZIEL: Midrash Petirath Moshe; here he is introduced as Moses' teacher and, together with Mikael and Gabriel, fetching Moses' soul at the time of his death. He is also called "Prince of the world" (probably identical with Metatron).

In Pirqe R. Ishmael, xx, he is the chieftain of the door keepers of the fourth Hall.

Acc. to Berith Menucha, 37 a, he is one of the Seraphim and is appointed over "the peace".

(12) Zazriel, probably = 'the Strength of God,' 'the strong God.' Cf. the following names.

(13) Geburatiel = 'the strength of God'. Cf. the preceding verse. Acc. to Hek. R. xv and xvii, he is one of the door keepers of the fourth Hall. See Schwab, VA, p. 91.

(14) And Geburatiel H', the prince, when he sees 'ARAPHIEL¹¹ H', the prince, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

(15) And 'Araphiel¹¹ H', the prince, when he sees 'ASHRUYLU¹², the prince, ¹³who presides in all the sessions of the children of heaven¹³, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

(16) And Ashruylu H'¹², the prince, when he sees GALLIŞUR H', THE PRINCE, WHO REVEALS ¹⁴ALL THE SECRETS OF THE LAW (Tora)¹⁴, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

11 D: 'Ta'raphiel'

12 D: 'Ashruyli' "

13-13 D: 'who is the head [over] all the students on high' 14-14 D: 'the secret of the crown of the Law, the crown of Holiness, the crown of Kingship'

(14) 'Araphiel' = 'the neck of God' (the neck is the symbol of strength). Acc. to Hek. R. xxi, he is one of the guardians of the second Hall. See Schwab, ib. p. 217.

(15) 'Ashruylu' = 'who causes to dwell', 'who causes to rest', scil. the disciples of Tora in the heavenly colleges, hence the function here assigned to him: 'presideth in all the sessions of the children of heaven'. That the colleges on earth have their counterparts in heaven is a common Rabbinic idea. Cf. the somewhat different picture of Metatron's function in ch. xlviii c 12.

In accordance with the present view is the epithet 'prince of Tora' given to this angel in S. Razel, 45 a. In Hek. R. xii, 'Ashruylii' is one of the twenty names of the Godhead; ib. xxx (Sar Tora) it is the name of an angel-prince. Cf. the interpretation, Schwab, VA, p. 77.

(16) Gallişur... who reveals all the secrets of the Law. The name is of comparatively frequent occurrence. Pesiqta R. par. xx, explains it as "he who reveals the reasons of the Creator" (Şur, Is. xxvi. 4).

The same explanation of the name 'Gallişur' is repeated, with the addition of some other details, in Ma'yan Chokma, BH. i. 60, in 'Aggadath Shema' Israel, BH. v. 165, also in S. Razel, 41 b, 42 a, 42 b, and P. R. 'El. iv, further in citations in Siuni, 93 d, and YR. ii. 67 a. Acc. to these sources he is identical with the angel, called 'Razel' (= 'the secret(s) of God'); he hears the Divine decrees from behind the 'Curtain' (cf. ch. xlv. 1) and reveals them to the world; he stands next to the Chayyoth and spreads his wings, so that the ministering angels shall not be consumed by the fire that goes forth from the breath of the Chayyoth. Acc. to S. Razel, 42 b, he is one of the Princes of the Law.

In Sefer ha-Yashar ("the book of the righteous", Add. 15299, fol. 91 a b) it is related, that the book in question "was given to Adam by the hand of Gallişur". (Note the similar narrative in S. Razel, 3 a, which is probably another version of S. ha-Yashar, where the name of angel is Razel.)

In a prayer in the same MS., fol. 144 a, he is invoked—with the 'kinnuyim' (or supplementary names) of 'Yephiphyah' (cf. ch. xlviii d 4) and Yophiel—to give assistance in the study of the Tora.

From these sources it appears that the traditions assigned to him mainly two functions: revealer of the Divine Secrets and Prince of the Law. These two functions are here, rightly, comprised in the one "revealer of all the secrets of the Law". The Divine secrets are embodied in the Tora, constituting its inner meaning, the technical term for which is "the secrets of the Law". (Cf. on chh. ix. 1 and xlviii d 7 et seqq.)

As the Prince of the Law he is here probably connected with the Divine Judgement

(17) And Galliṣur H', the prince, when he sees ZAKZAKIEL H', the prince who is appointed to write down the merits of Israel on the Throne of Glory, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face.

(18) And Zakzakiel H', the great¹⁵ prince, when he sees 'ANAPH(I)EL H', the prince¹⁶ who keeps the keys of the heavenly Halls, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face¹⁶. Why is he called by the name of 'Anaphiel? Because the bough of his honour and majesty and his crown and his splendour and his brilliance covers (overshadows)¹⁷ all the chambers of 'Araboth Raqia' on high even as the Maker of the World (doth overshadow them). Just as it is written with regard to the Maker of the World (Hab. iii. 3): "His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise", even so do the honour and majesty of 'Anaphiel cover all the glories of 'Araboth the highest.

which in its different aspects is represented in nearly all the following angel-names; through the said epithet he is also connected with the foregoing 'Ashruylu'.

(17) Zakzakiel, 'Merit-God', is the same both with regard to name and function as 'Zekukiel' of S. Raziel, 21 b: "the Prince of the merits of Israel".

(18) 'Anaphiel, 'the branch of God'. In ch. vi of the Enoch-Metatron piece of the present book he is the angel who removes Enoch to the heavens; ib. ch. xvi (acc. to the reading of BD) he is the angel who gave Metatron sixty strokes with lashes of fire. (Vide Introd. section 8 u, x, y).

Acc. to Hek. R. xv, xvii, he is one of the door keepers of the fourth Hall. Ib. ch. xxii. 4, he is one of the guardians of the seventh Hall. A similar, partly literally identical, explanation of his name as in the second part of the present verse is given there.

The expression 'who keeps the keys of the Halls of 'Araboth Raqia' is the only trace in this chapter of the connection of the high angel-princes enumerated here with the guardianship of the heavenly Halls, whereas all of them that recur in Hek. R. are there guardians of one or the other of the Halls, mostly the seventh or the fourth. He has here the control of all the Halls.

The said statement "keeps the keys of the Halls of 'Arabōth Raqia'" together with the following part of the verse attribute a remarkably high position to 'Anaphiel: he is compared with "the Creator of the world". In Hek. R. xxii, he is called "the most beloved of all the guardians of the heavenly Halls, the Prince, 'Ebed (the Servant, Metatron's name), who is called thus by the name of his Master". A similarly high position is also implied by the passages in the Enoch-Metatron piece, just referred to. Another instance is the quotation from 'Sōdē Rāzā' in YR. i. 5 a: "the angel 'Anaphiel, to him are given in charge the 'ring' and the seal of heaven and earth, and all on high kneel down and prostrate themselves before him".

(19) And when he sees SOTHER 'ASHIEL H', the prince, the great, fearful and honoured one, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face. Why is he called ¹⁸Sother Ashiel¹⁸? Because he is appointed ¹⁹over the four heads of the fiery river over against the Throne of Glory; and every single prince who goes out or enters before the Shekina, goes out or enters only by his permission. For the seals of ²⁰the fiery river²⁰ are entrusted to him. And furthermore, his height is 7000 myriads of parasangs. And he stirs up the fire of the river; and he goes out and enters before the Shekina to expound ²¹what is written (recorded)²¹ concerning the inhabitants of the world. According as it is written (Dan. vii. 10): "the judgement was set, and the books were opened".

18-18 so D. A.: 'Sother and Ashiel' 19 A ins.: 'from the beginning'
 20-20 so D. A.: 'the four fiery rivers' (corrupt for 'the four heads of the fiery river'?) 21-21 so D. A. om.

(19) Sother 'Ashiel H' = 'who stirs up the fire of God'. The explanations of the name as they appear in the present verse are quoted in Hilkot ha Kisse La, fol. 138 a. A points: סוֹתֵר אֲשִׁיֵּל (no other names in this ch. pointed).

He is here the angel appointed over the fiery river Nehar di-Nur, the speculations on which evolved from the beginning of Dan. vii. 10, the passage quoted in this verse. For the conceptions of the fiery river, see note on ch. xxxiii. 5.

The four heads of the fiery river. It is difficult to discern from A, whether 'four' or 'seven' are meant, the characters for 'daleth' (= 4) and 'zain' (= 7) being, in the current script employed there, almost indistinguishable. In Hil. ha Merkaba (Add. 27199, fol. 126 a) however, the "heads of the fiery river of the Throne of Glory" are definitely stated as four. If 'seven' is the correct reading here, the number '7000 myriads' would be explained as derived from 'the seven heads of the fiery river'. Ch. xxxiii. 4 mentions 'seven fiery rivers', an amplification frequently met with in the 'Södē Rāzā' by Eleazar of Worms (cf. e.g. the quotation from this writing, YR. i. 4 b). The fiery river, usually described as issuing forth "from under the Throne of Glory" or "from the perspiration of the holy Chayyoth" is here simply described as being situated over against the Throne of Glory and is in the present connection probably conceived of as dividing the Throne of Glory with the Shekina from the world of the common angels and angel-princes, through which 'fiery stream' they must pass when they wish to enter before the Shekina. On this assumption the expression 'every prince... does not go out nor enter but by his permission' would be intelligible: Sother 'Ashiel, who is the guardian of the fiery river, also controls who shall pass through it to the Shekina. The fiery river as a bath of purification and preparation for the angels is a common idea in this and related writings. Cf. note on ch. xxxiii. 5.

he goes out and enters before the Shekina to expound what is written concerning the inhabitants of the world (lit. 'to expound in the writings of'). A perhaps reads: 'enters to the Curtain of the inhabitants of the world', i.e. the Curtain, on which everything is recorded acc. to ch. xlv. 1 seqq.). This strange expression obtains its elucidation by the quotation of Dan. vii. 10 with its reference to 'the Judgement'. The fiery river is also, and foremost, the symbol of the execution of the judgement on man. Hence Sother 'Ashiel is connected with the Divine Judgement, as far as he 'stirs up the fire of the Nehar di-Nur'. He, as it were, regulates the heat of the fire according to the requirements of judgement.

(20) And Sother 'Ashiel ²²the prince²², when he sees ²³SHOQED CHOZI²³, the great prince, the mighty, terrible and honoured one, he removes the crown ²⁴of glory²⁴ from his head and falls upon his face. And why is he called ²⁵Shoqed Chozi²⁵? Because he weighs ²⁶all the merits (of man)²⁶ in a balance in the presence of the Holy One, blessed be He.

(21) And when he sees ZEHANPURYU²⁷ H', the great prince, the mighty and terrible one, honoured, glorified and feared in all the heavenly household, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face. Why is he called Zehanpuryu²⁸? Because he rebukes the fiery river and pushes it back to its place.

(22) And when he sees 'AZBUGA H', the great prince, glorified, revered, honoured, adorned, wonderful, exalted, beloved and feared among all

(20) Shoqed Chozi, also in the forms 'Shaqad Hozii', 'Sheqar Chozii' (the former in the readings of D and Midrash Sar Tora, the latter in Hek. R. and S. Raziel, 45 a). Derivations uncertain ('Waking' or 'Watching and Seeing'; Schwab, VA, p. 259: 'False Seer' [based upon the form 'Sheqar Chozii']). Cf. the name 'Sheqadyahiel', Hek. R. xxii and Schwab, ib.

The explanation given in the present verse rather presupposes a form 'SHEQAL ZAKI' ('weighing merits') or similar. (Cf. Mandaitic: Abathur, Introd. sect. 13 Ce.)

In S. Raziel, 45 a (where other names of this ch. recur), he is mentioned after 'Ashruylu' as one of "the Princes of Tora". In Hek. Zot. (Bodl. MICH. 8, foll. 68 b, 69 a) the name recurs twice, in the form of Sheqad Chozyah (a) in a hymn to God, (b) as the name in which Metatron is invoked by the scholar who is watching and praying during the night.

For the idea of 'weighing merits' cf. box, Ezra Apocalypse, p. 19, note p; 1 En. xli. 1.

(21) Zehanpuryu. Explained by Schwab, VA, thus: "this is the face of fear" (p. 121). More probable, at least in the connection in which the name appears here, is the explanation or reading of S. Raziel, 45 a: 'Zeh Paṭar' = 'this one exempts', 'this one sets free'. In this chapter he represents the attribute of mercy, a constituent part of the Judgement, acc. to chh. xxxi and xxxiii et. freq. Such is at least the apparent significance of the words: 'pushes the fiery river back'. Contrast the function given to Sother 'Ashiel acc. to vs. 19 of stirring up the Nehar di-Nur, an expression which is there explicitly referred to the Judgement. The fiery river is the means of or symbol of punishment and execution of judgement.

In Hek. R. xvii. 5, he is called "Prince of the Presence". Ib. xxi, he is one of the guardians of the seventh Hall. There might be some connection between this name and the 'PURIEL' of Test. Abraham, ch. xii, the name of one of the two high angels who function at the Judgement.

(22) 'Azbuga. Schwab, VA, p. 49, explains it as 'messenger'. Zunz, GV, p. 148, contains the notice that Hek. Zot. explains the name as denoting 'strength' (ib.). It recurs in Midrash Sar Tora and several times in Berith Menucha.

In a prayer in S. ha Chesheq (Add. 27120, fol. 11 b) he is invoked to deliver the suppliant from "every evil, disease and affliction". In this writing 'Azbuga is mostly one of the names of the Godhead. It is also the name of a 'temurā'.

In S. Raziel, 42 b, it is inscribed on an amulet which also contains the names of the great princes who know the mystery of the Throne of Glory, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face. Why is he called 'Azbuga? Because in the future he will gird (clothe)²⁹ the righteous and pious of the world with the garments of life and wrap them in the cloak of life, that they may live in them an eternal life.

(23) And when he sees the two great princes, the strong and glorified ones who are standing above him, he removes the crown of glory from his head and falls on his face. And these are the names of the two princes³⁰:

SOPHERIEL H' (WHO) KILLETH, (Sopheriel H' the Killer), the great prince, the honoured, glorified, blameless, venerable, ancient and mighty one; (and) ³¹SOPHERIEL H' (WHO) MAKETH ALIVE (Sopheriel H' the Lifegiver), the great prince, the honoured, glorified, blameless, ancient and mighty one³¹.

29 so Da. A: 'because he is girded etc.' 30 so D. A: 'the angels, the princes' 31-31 in D this is transferred after 'he writes him in the books of the dead' vs. 24.

KERUBIEL (ch. xxii), SOPHERIEL (vss. 23 and 24 of the present chapter), YEPHIPHERA (ch. xlviii D 4) and GALLISUR (vs. 16 of this chapter).

the princes who know the mystery (or 'secrets' D) of the Throne of Glory. This probably refers to angels, who enjoy the privilege of constant access to the Throne of Glory, and hence know the inner reasons of the Divine decrees. The expression, then, has the same import as the phrase 'stand inside the Curtain' applied to some high angels. Cf. further, ch. xlv. 1 and references there.

Garments of life. Cf. 1 En. lxii. 15, 16: "and the righteous and elect shall have risen from the earth...and they shall have been clothed with garments of glory, and they shall be the garments of life from the Lord of Spirits". 2 Esdras ii. 45: "These be they that have put off the mortal clothing and put on the immortal". Cf. also 2 En. xxii. 8. For the conceptions expressed by the terms 'garments of glory' or 'garments of life' cf. note on ch. xii. 1. The garments of life are here the means by which eternal life is conferred upon the righteous, possibly according to the literary principle of 'pars pro toto'. They are the outer appearance of the essentially changed or new body (of the righteous in the future life), constituted of light-substance. Vide CHARLES, 1 En., notes on chh. lxii. 16 and cviii. 12. 'Azbuga' is in the present chapter explained from מִזְרָא (= 'gird') and בְּגָד (= 'garment').

(23) Sopheriel... The name Sopheriel is not found in Schwab, VA. It occurs in S. Raziel, 21 b, as the name of "the Prince, appointed over the books of life", thus with the same function as is here assigned to the one of the two princes with that name.

It is obvious that the name here is understood as 'Sopheriel', i.e. 'the Scribe (of God)'. But the writing or spelling of the name (Sin-Shin instead of Samek) suggests that the name earlier or originally was referred to the word 'Shophar' (= 'trumpet'), meaning the angel who blows the trumpet, scil. at the judgement, perhaps at the time for the opening of the books (for this idea cf. BOX, Ezra Apocalypse, ch. vi. 23 and note d, p. 75). Since the angel, if this be correct, already was connected with the judgement, the change to the present interpretation was comparatively easy. In S. Raziel, 42, is found the similar name Shaphriel from 'Shefer' (= 'beauty').

The angels function as scribes. They are differentiated into two, one for 'life' and one for 'death' in accordance with the noticeable tendency of the book to place

(24) Why is he called Sopheriel H' who killeth (Sopheriel H' the Killer)? Because he is appointed over the books of the dead: [so that] everyone, when the day of his death draws nigh, he writes him in the books of the dead.

Why is he called Sopheriel H' who maketh alive (Sopheriel H' the Lifegiver)? Because he is appointed over the books of the living (of life), so that every one whom the Holy One, blessed be He, will bring into life, he writes him in the book of the living (of life), by authority of MAQOM. Thou might perhaps say: "Since the Holy One, blessed be He, is sitting on a throne, they also are sitting when writing". (Answer): The Scripture teaches us (1 Kings xxii. 19, 2 Chron. xviii. 18): "And all the host of heaven are standing by him".

two polar opposites side by side. Cf. also ch. xxxiii. 2 and note (two scribes) and note on ch. xlv. 2.

The attributes 'H who killeth' and 'H who maketh alive' are in all probability derived from 1 Sam. ii. 6: "the Lord (H = YHWH) killeth and maketh alive". This passage is also used TB. Rosh ha Shana, 16 a, as point of support for the views concerning the Judgement which are expressed there.

(24) Books of the dead. . . books of the living. The 'books of the dead and the books of the living' are here merely the books recording the moments designed for each individual's birth and death. The books of the living contain the names of the living, the books of the dead those of the dead. Otherwise 'the book(s) of life' regularly refer to the righteous, which are recorded in this book for eternal life, for God's remembrance, and hence, when mentioned, 'the book(s) of death or the dead' are conceived of as containing the names of the wicked, for perdition. Parallel with this conception goes that, according to which 'the books' record the deeds of 'the world' or of the righteous and the wicked separately. The former idea is represented in the O.T. (Is. iv. 3, Ex. xxxii. 32 seq., Ps. lxix. 29, cxxxix. 16, Mal. iii. 16, Dan. xii. 1), in 1 En. xlvii. 3, civ. 1, cviii. 3, Jub. xxx. 20, 22, xxxvi. 10, Ap. Elijah, iv. 2, xiv. 5; Rev. iii. 5, xiii. 8, xvii. 8, xx. 12, 15, xxi. 27;—the latter in chh. xxx. 2 and xxvii. 2 of the present book, Is. lxxv. 6, Neh. xiii. 14, Dan. vii. 10, 1 En. lxxxi. 4, lxxxix. 61 et seqq., xc. 17, 20, xcvi. 6, xcvi. 7 seqq., civ. 7, cviii. 7 seqq., 2 En. l. 1, lii. 15, liii. 2 seqq., *Ap. Māqōm = 'place', one of the technical terms of the Divine Majesty. Cf. the expression 'the Curtain of Maqom', e.g. ch. xlv. 1.

Thou might perhaps say etc. The suggestion that the scribes must be sitting when writing is refuted. "There is no sitting in heaven" cf. Chag. 15 a. The scriptural passage from which this is deduced, 1 Kings xxii. 19, is the one regularly used for the purpose. Acc. to TB. Chag. 15 a, however, Metatron, in his function as scribe, was at first allowed to 'sit and write', and in the Enoch-Metatron piece (chh. iii-xv) Metatron is placed on a Throne. Apart from this there seems to have been a set of traditions which felt no objection against ascribing 'yēshibā' ('sitting') to angel-princes or righteous dead. (For references see note on ch. x. 1.) To the other prevailing view which was rigorous in this respect, it was probably the case

"The host of heaven" ³² (it is said) in order to show us, that even the Great Princes, none like whom there is in the high heavens, do not fulfil the requests of the Shekina otherwise than standing. But how is it (possible that) they (are able to) write, when they are standing? It is like this:

(25) One is standing on the wheels of the tempest and the other is standing on the wheels of the storm-wind.

The one is clad in kingly garments, the other is clad in kingly garments.

The one is wrapped in a mantle of majesty and the other is wrapped in a mantle of majesty.

The one is crowned with a royal crown, and the other is crowned with a royal crown.

³² D ins. 'is not written here, but "and all the host of heaven"' of the 'scribes' that suggested a deviation from the strict rule; the question was raised as here: 'how can they write, if they must be standing?' Cf. further ch. xvi and notes.

The unwillingness to admit any 'sitting in heaven', apart from the Throne of God, has arisen from the interest of guarding the Unity of the Godhead: there must not be even the appearance of two Divine Powers (Chag. 15 a, ch. xvi).

With the two princes Sopheriel H', 'none like whom there is in the high heavens', the angelological system of the present chapter is concluded. They are the highest of the angels of the hierarchy, the different ranks of which are here enumerated from the lowest to the highest. From this it is clear that ch. xviii is independent of the following chapters xix seqq., which from their present context appear as a continuation of the angelological system here set forth. At the beginning of this chapter it was shown in the notes that this chapter is also independent of its antecedent chapter. In fact, it stands out by itself from all the rest of the book.

The reason why it was embodied in the angelological section is apparently its seeming connection with ch. xvii owing to the mention in both chapters of the angels and the princes of the different heavens. Besides, the beginning of ch. xix, 'above these three angels', indicates a preceding exposition of high angel-princes, and when the original beginning of the fragment, of which chh. xix seqq. are a continuation was lost, ch. xviii was put in as a substitute, although not a very happy one.

(25) This verse, with its lengthy and extravagant descriptions of the 'two angels' constitutes a striking contrast to the concise, summarizing character of the foregoing part of the chapter. The beginning of the verse is not very lucidly connected with vs. 24. The question 'how are they writing when standing?' is not intelligibly answered. It is difficult to understand how it could facilitate the writing to be standing 'on the wheels of the tempest'. Hence it is probable that vs. 25 is a later addition to the chapter. The end of the verse shows that the angels referred to are scribes like the princes Sopheriel. The addition was probably composed for the preceding verses, not adduced from another context.

The features used in the following description of the two angels are mainly those constantly recurring in descriptions of high angel-princes. Cf. the descriptions of KERUBIEL (ch. xxii. 1-9), OFFANNIEL (ch. xxv. 1-4), SERAPHIEL (ch. xxvi. 1-7).

The scroll and style are of fire, the heavenly matter. 'Graven with a flaming style' is an uncommonly frequent expression, referring e.g. to the letters engraved on the 'Fearful Crown', the Names on the Throne of Glory, etc. Cf. e.g. ch. xxxix. 1 and references in note, ad loc. Item, ch. xiii.

The scribes are represented as writing with a style of fire on a scroll of flames. Cf. Midrash 'Aséreth Ma'amaroth: "Tora was written down by the arm of the Holy One, blessed be He, with dark fire on white fire".

The numbers used in describing the sizes of the scroll, the style and the letters are based on 3000 and 365. The number 365 is used very often in this book, see esp. ch. ix. 3. It was conceived of as a cosmic and celestial number, being the number of the days of the solar year. The 3000 is probably made up of 1000 times 3, the number 3 being, of old, a mystical number. Cf. the 300 thousand 'gates' of ch. viii.

Chh. xix-xxii, xxv, xxvi. (Angelological system A 1, see Introduction, section 13 (1 A).)

Chh. xix-xxii, xxv, xxvi, form an angelological description of a systematic structure. The centre, from which the system is evolved, is the conception of the Merkaba with the Throne of Glory. The objects of the exposition are the angel-princes, appointed over the 'wheels of the Merkaba' and over the four classes of superior angels who minister at the Merkaba and by the Throne, as well as these angels themselves.

Prince, distinguished, honoured, noble, glorified, adorned, fearful, valiant, strong, great, magnified, glorious, crowned, wonderful, exalted, blameless, beloved, lordly, high and lofty, ancient and mighty, like unto whom there is none among the princes. His name

For the Merkaba speculations—derived from Ezek. i and x—and the different arrangements of the details of the Merkaba-picture, see the Introduction, sections 13 and 14.

The importance of these chapters consists primarily in the fact that they reveal a clear attempt at systematization. Beginning with 'the wheels of the Merkaba', the description proceeds from the lowest to the highest of the four classes of superior angels which, wanting a more adequate comprehensive appellation, may be called the Merkaba-angels. They are arranged in an order, placing the Chayyoth as the lowest and the Seraphim as the highest, thus: Chayyoth, Kerubim, 'Ophannim, Seraphim. This order is by no means the one generally accepted. In most cases in the earlier cabalistic literature it seems that the writers had no clear view of the mutual order of the Merkaba-angels, and the cases that suggest an intended classification, represent, when compared, nearly all possible permutations of the four classes in question. Furthermore, all of them are not mentioned, in such classifications, some omitting the Chayyoth, others the Kerubim and so on. It may suffice as an illustration, to refer to the arrangement presented in ch. xxii c 2, where the order is as follows: 'the Galgallim, the Kerubim, the 'Ophannim... the Holy Chayyoth, the Throne of Glory'. Cf. further the Introduction, section 13 (1 A).

On the other hand, in P. R. 'El iv, we meet with an order of the four classes of superior angels which is identical with the order represented in this section. In contrast with the present system, however, P. R. 'El puts the 'wheels of the Merkaba' together with the 'Ophannim and the 'princes' assigned as chieftains over the resp. classes of angels here, do not appear there.

(1) Above these three angels, these great princes. The beginning of the chapter points to a preceding description of angels. In the present context the opening words refer to ch. xviii. That it is highly improbable, however, that ch. xviii was the original antecedent of ch. xix, has been pointed out above, note on ch. xviii. 24. Who are then, originally, the angels and princes referred to? No answer can be given to this question apart from mere conjectures. First of all, the words 'these three angels' or, as the reading of D runs, "them, the two angels" sound like a gloss. They might, in fact, easily have been an emendation made by the redactor who combined ch. xix with ch. xviii. By this gloss—if our assumption is correct—ch. xix is made to refer to the last named princes of ch. xviii. This is particularly so, if the reading of D be adopted (the two princes are then, of course, the two Sopheriel H, ch. xviii. 23–25). Assuming that the original beginning of the chapter had the form 'above these great princes', the subject of the preceding angelological fragment to which this expression refers, might have been, say, the 'princes of kingdoms'. Now the princes of kingdoms are the subject of the last verse of ch. xvii. The style of ch. xvii. 8 is also similar to that of the present section. It opens with the phrase 'above these', which is the regular inceptive expression of all the chapters in this section. IT IS POSSIBLE THAT CH. XVII. 8 BELONGED TO THE SAME ANGELOLOGICAL EXPOSITION, POSSIBLE ALSO THAT IT IMMEDIATELY PRECEDED WHAT IS NOW CH. XIX. Further, on the connection of ch. xvii. 8 with the rest of that chapter, see note, ad loc.

distinguished, honoured, noble etc. On the epithets added to the name of an angel-prince cf. note on ch. xviii. 7 and chh. xx. 1, xxii. 1, xxv. 1 and xxvi. 1. The attributes are in the present case over twenty in number. This manner of excelling in variations of terms resembles the fashion of Hek. R. The words used here are mostly adduced from the O.T.

(2) And why is he called RIKBIEL? Because he is appointed over the wheels of the Merkaba, and they are given in his charge. (3) And how many are the wheels? Eight; two in each direction. And there are four winds compassing them round about. And these are their names: "the Storm-Wind", "the Tempest", "the Strong Wind", and "the Wind of Earthquake". (4) And under them four fiery

³ so D. A.: 'name'

Rikbiel. The names of the present section (with the exception of RADWERIEL, ch. xxvii) have a very simple derivation. RIKBIEL is derived from 'Rekeb' (= 'chariot' = 'Merkaba'), CHAYYIEL is made to correspond to 'Chayyoth', KERUBIEL to 'Kerubim', OPHANNIEL to 'Ophannim', SERAPHIEL to 'Seraphim'.

The name RIKBIEL is not given by Schwab, VA. It recurs, however, twice in Add. 27199. The first time it is in the quotation of vss. 2-7 of the present chapter, see below. The second time in Hilkoth ha Kisse, fol. 138 a b, in a passage from an anonymous source, immediately following the quotation of ch. xxiii. 20 (cf. note, ib.) and (SOTHER ASHIEL), ch. xviii. 19 (cf. note, ad loc.), preceding the quotation of ch. xxii (KERUBIEL). The passage runs: "RIKBIEL H, the great and fearful prince by name, is standing by the Merkaba (cf. the last words of vs. 1 here) and he is appointed over the eight wheels of the Merkaba, two in each direction" Since this passage occurs in between quotations from this book it is probably directly dependent upon this chapter and might be regarded as a quotation. Notice, that the epithet "great and fearful prince" are regarded as part of the name.

(2) In a midrashic commentary on Ezek. i. 16 in Add. 27199, fol. 81 a, there is a passage on RIKBIEL which appears as a literal, though unacknowledged quotation, of vss. 2-7 of the present chapter.

the wheels of the Merkaba. (Hebrew: galgille ham-merkaba), wheels: 'galgallim'. The GALGALLIM are here, at least acc. to vss. 2 and 3, understood in their literal sense, although they, in vs. 7, are represented as speaking and apparently on a level with the four classes of Merkaba angels. Cf. for the present conception Mass. Hek. vii, e.g. "the wheels of the Merkaba upon which is the Throne of Glory". In Alph. R. 'Aqiba the four Chayyoth appear "from under the wheels of the chariot of His Throne (i.e. the Merkaba carrying the Throne of Glory)". (Contrast vs. 5 here.) In other connections they are clearly represented as one of the angelic classes, e.g. Mass. Hek. v: "In the seventh Hall are the Throne of Glory, the chariots of the Kerubim, the camps of the Seraphim, the 'Ophannim', the 'Chayyoth' and the 'Galgallim' of consuming fire". In this passage it is noteworthy that the 'Ophannim' and the 'Galgallim' appear as two distinct angelic classes. Originally the words 'Ophannim' and 'Galgallim' were, on the whole, identical notions, both meaning 'wheels'. See note on ch. xxv. 5. A third significance of the 'Galgallim' is 'heavenly bodies', mainly occurring in the later cabbalistic literature. And through further developments of the speculations on the 'Galgallim', they are again identified with the 'Ophannim', or, according to another trend of thoughts, the 'Ophannim' are made the rulers of the 'Galgallim' or celestial spheres. Cf. note on ch. xxv. 5.

(3) The number of the wheels is presumably derived from Ezek. i. (not x): a wheel in the middle of a wheel by the side of each of the four living creatures.

four winds etc. 'Storm-wind' and 'tempest' are well-established parts of any descriptions of the celestial wonders. Cf. chh. xxxiv and xviii. 25. 'Storm-wind, East-Wind, Strong Wind and Wind of Earthquake' are represented in ch. xxiii. 15, 3, 2 and 6.

rivers are continually running, one fiery river on each side. And round about them, between the rivers, four clouds are planted (placed), and these they are: "clouds of fire", "clouds of lamps", "clouds of coal", "clouds of brimstone" and they are standing over against [their] wheels.

(5) ⁴ And the feet of the Chayyoth are resting upon the wheels. And between one wheel and the other earthquake is roaring and thunder is thundering.

(6) And when the time draws nigh for the recital of the Song, (then) the multitudes of wheels are moved, the multitude of clouds tremble, all the chieftains (shallishim) are made afraid, all the horsemen (parashim) do rage, all the mighty ones (gibborim) are excited, all the hosts (šēba'im) are afrighted, all the troops (gēdudim) ⁵are in fear⁵, all the appointed ones (mēmunnim) haste away, all the princes (sarim) and armies (chayyēlim) ⁶ are dismayed, all the servants (mēsharētim) do faint and all⁷ the angels (mal'akim) and divisions (dēgalim) travail with pain.

(4) four fiery rivers. The number 'four' is to correspond with the four directions, the four Chayyoth etc. The four fiery rivers here should be compared with the mention in ch. xviii. 19 of 'the four heads of the fiery river'. Cf. note, ib. The fiery rivers here run under the feet of the Chayyoth. Cf. the usual expression: 'the fiery river goes forth from the perspiration of the Chayyoth'. The present conception of four fiery rivers is related to that of the rivers flowing between the four camps of Shekina as presented in ch. xxxvii. 1. Cf. ib. Clouds between the rivers, surrounding them. Cf. ch. xxxvii. 2. The object of the 'clouds' is acc. to ch. xxiv. 2 to protect from the heat of the fire. See also ch. xxxiii. 3.

(5) the feet of the Chayyoth are resting upon the wheels. In accordance with the system of the present section the Chayyoth have their place next above the wheels of the Merkaba. Angels standing on wheels, cf. ch. xviii. 25 and ch. xxii. 7.

The different names of angelic classes and positions enumerated in vs. 6 are most of them deduced from the O.T. where they represent various divisions and orders within an army. This is natural from the point of view of these writers who picture the 'hosts of angels' as armies, camps and troops. The words 'appointed', 'princes', 'servants', 'angels', are familiar from the other chapters of the book. Cf. chh. xiv; iv, xxxix; xxx, vi; see Index; the other terms are all found in the enumeration in Mass. Hek. v of the contents of the seventh Hall and the different angelic classes there ("armies, hosts, troops, ranks (ma'arakoth), divisions and armies of chieftains, the men of war, mighty ones, powers ('azuzoth) ta'ašumoth (Ps. lxxviii. 36) horsemen, the officers of armies, princes etc."). The presentation of all the different 'hosts' and 'princes' has the object of enhancing the impression of the SOLEMNITY OF THE MOMENT, WHEN 'THE SONG' IS TO BE SUNG. The commotion of all heavens and all angels at the sound of the Trisagion is described in ch. xxxviii. Cf. also ch. xviii. 7. For passages recalling the present vs. see 1 En. lxi. 10, 11, 2 En. xx. 1 seqq., Ma'yan Chokma, BH. i. 59, Zohar, ii. 136 a b. For dēgalim applied to angelic troops cf. Num. R. par. ii with reference to Ps. lxxviii. 18, Shir. R. on ii. 4. In the quotation La, fol. 81 a, only eight classes are mentioned, viz. shallishim, parashim, šebaim, gibborim, memunnim, sarim, mal'akim, degalim.

(7) And one wheel makes a sound to be heard to the other and one Kerub to another, one Chayyā to another, one Seraph to another (saying) (Ps. lxviii. 5) "Extol to him that rideth in 'Araboth', by his name Yah and rejoice before him!"

CHAPTER XX

CHAYYLIEL, the prince of the Chayyoth

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Above these there is one great and mighty prince. His name is CHAYYLIEL H', a noble and revered prince, a 'glorious and' mighty prince, a great and revered prince, a prince before whom all the children of heaven do tremble, a prince who is able to swallow up the whole earth in one moment (at a mouthful).

2-2 ins. from D. A om.

(7) one wheel makes a sound to be heard to the other. After the pattern of Is. vi. 3: "and one cried unto another, and said etc." A parallel to the present verse occurs Mass. Hek. vii: "and one Bath Qōl by the side of one wheel (referring to the 'wheels of the Merkaba') and another Bath Qōl by the side of another wheel; in that moment one wheel causes (its voice) to be heard to another wheel with thunder and earthquake. . . (saying) 'Extol to him that rideth in 'Araboth', by his name Yah, and rejoice before him'". The psalm here cited is the one specifically used in mystical interpretations. There are several cabbalistic commentaries on this psalm. The special attention of the mystics was drawn to this psalm already in the tannaitic period if not earlier. From the vs. referred to here, the name of the highest of the heavens, 'Araboth', was deduced (cf. Chag. 12 b). Other passages of this psalm to which special interest was devoted are vss. 17 and 18.

Elsewhere the Galgallim of the Merkaba are stated to partake in the celestial Qēdushsha, e.g. in the quotation, YR. v. 5 b: "the wheels of the Merkaba say: 'Blessed be the Glory of H' from his place etc.'"

Ch. xx. (1) Above these scil. RIKBIEL and the Galgallim of the Merkaba, described in the foregoing chapter.

Chayyiel. The name of the Prince is chosen to correspond to the word 'Chayyoth'. It is, however, derived from Chayil (= 'army') rather than from Chayyā. In accordance with this derivation 'CHAYYLIEL' was probably originally the name of the prince over the Chaylim (= 'the armies of angels', cf. ch. xix. 6). A remnant of a tradition to this intent is perhaps the passage, occurring in Hilkoth ha Mal'akim La, fol. 123 a, according to which he has the function of punishing the ministering angels, when they do not say the Song in the right time. The 'armies' sometimes are equivalent with the 'ministering angels'. In the same passage CHAYYLIEL is also the prince, appointed over the Chayyoth.

(2) smites the Chayyoth with lashes of fire. Here, where the expression 'smites the Chayyoth' stands in juxtaposition to 'glorifies them, when they give praise', fire: and glorifies them, when they give praise and glory and rejoicing and he causes them to make haste to say³ "Holy" and "Blessed be the Glory of H' from his place!" (i.e. the Qēdushsha).

CHAPTER XXI

The Chayyoth

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Four (are) the Chayyoth corresponding to the four winds. Each Chayyā is as the space of the whole world. And each one has four faces; and each face is as the face of the East. (2) Each one has four wings and each wing is like the cover (roof) of the universe. (3) And each one has faces in the middle of faces and wings in the middle of wings. The size of the faces is (as the size of) 248 faces, and the size of the wings is (as the size of) 365 wings.

(4) And every one is crowned with 2000 crowns on his head. And each crown is like unto the bow in the cloud. And its splendour is like unto the splendour of the globe¹ of the sun¹. And the sparks that go forth from every one are like the splendour of the morning star (planet Venus) in the East.

it seems that the 'smiting' would best be explained as referring to the punishment executed upon the Chayyoth, if they do not say the 'Holy' in the proper manner. Such an idea would better harmonize with a context, where 'ministering angels' had been substituted for 'Chayyoth'. Cf. how acc. to YR. i. 15 a, "God smites the Chayyoth".

Ch. xxi. The Chayyoth (singular form: Chayya) are the "four living creatures" of Ezek. i. They are, acc. to the present section, placed next above the wheels of the Merkaba. Acc. to ch. xxii c and Hek. R. xiii, they have their place immediately under the Throne of Glory, above the 'Ophanim' and the 'Kerubim'. For other representations see the introductory section.

(1) The number of the Chayyoth and the faces and wings of each one is in accordance with Ezek. i. 5 seq. Like the space of the whole world, cf. ch. ix. 1, and the immense measures ascribed to the Chayyoth in TB. Chag. 13 a ("the feet of the Chayyoth are of a size like that of the seven heavens, the ankles of corresponding measure, the knees of corresponding measure, and so forth"). (3) Faces in the middle of faces etc. Cf. 'the heart in the middle of the heart of the lion (i.e. one of the four Chayyoth)' in ch. xv b. The conceptions have probably been developed by force of analogy from Ezek. i. 16 ("a wheel in the middle of a wheel"). The numbers '248' and '365' correspond to the number of positive and negative laws resp. Cf. ch. xxxiii. 4. (4) crowned with 2000 crowns. Crowns are regular attributes of high angels, cf. note on chh. xii. 3, xviii. 1.

CHAPTER XXII¹KERUBIEL, the Prince of the Kerubim.Description of the Kerubim

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Above these ^{1a} there is one prince, noble, wonderful, strong, and praised with all kinds of praise. His name is KERUBIEL H', a mighty prince, full of power and strength

AD:

a prince of highness, and Highness (is) with him, a righteous prince, and righteousness (is) with him, a holy prince, and holiness (is) with him, a prince

a prince of highness, and with him (there is) a righteous prince, of righteousness, and with him a holy prince, of holiness, and with him (there is) a prince glorified in (by) thousand hosts, exalted by ten thousand armies.

(2) At his wrath the earth trembles, at his anger the camps are moved, from fear of him the foundations are shaken, at his rebuke the 'Araboth do tremble.

1 Here B continues.

1 a D: 'the Chayyoth'

Ch. xxii. (1) Kerubiel. In this form the name is not found in Schwab, VA. Cf. however, KRBIEL, p. 157, ib., and Kerubiyah, ib.

In Hilkoth ha Kissē, Add. 27199, fol. 138 b, after mention being made of SOTHER 'ASHI'EL (cf. xviii. 19) and RIKBIEL (ch. xix), there occurs a summary of the functions ascribed to KERUBIEL, a passage which is apparently drawn from vss. 1, 3-5, 7-9, of the present chapter.

A similar abridged quotation (ba'arikut mizzeh ham mal'ak) occurs in YR. i. 54 a, from Sōdē Rāzā, a quotation which is important, because it begins with Gen. v. 24, also forming the beginning of the present book, a fact which shows that the compiler of the Sōdē Rāzā used as one of his sources an Enoch-fragment or a book of Enoch which contained descriptions of Kerubiel, and, by consequence, probably also the essential parts of the angelological section of the present book.

In Widduy Yaphe (Add. 15299, fol. 133 b) he appears at the head of the Kerubim as here, but ib. fol. 134 b he is in common with SERAPHIEL (ch. xxvi. 8), represented as one of the twenty-six angels 'who carry the Merkaba'.

In the enumeration of different classes of angels which is given in Mass. 'Asilut (frequently referred to in notes and Introduction), the 'prince of the Kerubim' is called 'KERUBIEL'.

Even so in S. ha Chesheq (Add. 27120, fol. 14 b) KERUBIEL is introduced as the angel appointed over the Kerubim.

Acc. to 1 En. xx. 7, the prince of the Kerubim is GABRIEL, and acc. to Zohar, Ex. 43 (YE), this function is assigned to 'KERUB'.

The variant reading of B is most likely due to a false punctuation and subsequent transposition of the word 'immō' (= 'with him').

(3) His stature is full of (burning) coals. The height of his stature is as the height of the seven heavens the breadth of his stature is as the wideness of the seven heavens and the thickness of his stature is as the seven heavens.

(4) ²The opening of his mouth is like a lamp of fire². His tongue ³is a consuming fire³. His eyebrows are like unto the splendour of the lightning. His eyes are like sparks ⁴of brilliance⁴. His countenance is like a burning fire.

(5) And there is a crown of holiness upon his head on which (crown) the Explicit Name is graven, and lightnings go forth from it. And the bow of Shekina is between his shoulders.

(6) AD: B:

And his sword is upon his loins and his arrows⁵ And his sword is like unto a lightning; and upon his loins there are arrows like

2-2 B: 'from his mouth there burns as it were a lamp of fire' D: 'the opening of his mouth burns like a lamp of fire' 3-3 so B. AD: 'consumes fire'

4-4 B omits. 5 D: 'arrow'

(3) His stature etc. The simpler reading of Hilkoth Kisse (see above) might with advantage be adopted: "his stature is as high as the seven heavens and the thickness of his stature is as the width of the sea". On the measures of high angels cf. ch. ix. 1, xxi. 1 and notes. Also ch. xlviii c 5.

(4) The opening of his mouth is like a lamp of fire etc. The description of the body of this angel-prince is in the usual terms conveying that he is wholly made up of fire. The substance of the angels' body is regularly fire. So it is said in 2 En. xxix. 1, 3, with regard to God's creation of the angels: "for all the heavenly hosts I (God) fashioned a nature like that of fire: their weapons are fiery, their garment is a burning flame...". Descriptions of this kind are frequent. Cf. 2 En. i. 5 ("their faces shone like the sun, their eyes like burning lamps, fire came forth from their lips... their wings were brighter than gold"). Cf. also Chibbut ha Qeber, i, Mass. Hek. iv, Rev. xix. 11-15.

Occasionally one finds the statement that some angels are made of water in contrast with others who are made of fire or that the angels in general are composed of fire and water. E.g. Midrash 'Asereth haDēbārōth, pp. 64 seqq., BH. (on the contents of 'Araboth): "the angels are made of fire and water, and there is peace between them etc.", based on Job xxv. 2. Cf. ch. xlii.

(5) And there is a crown of holiness upon his head. The term 'crown of holiness' instead of the more usual 'crown of glory', probably with reference to the attribute of 'holiness' conferred upon this prince in vs. 1.

on which the Explicit Name is graven. Cf. ch. xii. 1 and note, also ch. xxxix. 1. Acc. to Shir Rabba, i, the explicit name was engraved on the crowns given to the Israelites at mount Sinai.

the bow of Shekina. The (heavenly counterpart of) the 'bow in the cloud' is probably meant. This has become a regular part of the speculations on the heavenly splendours, cf. ch. xxii c 4, 7. Then also it is understood as referring to the angel's weapon.

(6) his sword is upon his loins. Sword is a frequent concomitant attribute of the angel of death or of the angels of destruction. Cf. Rev. R. Joshua ben Levi, BH. ii. 48.

are like lightnings in his girdle. And a shield of consuming fire (is) on his neck and coals of juniper are round about him. unto a flame, and upon his armour and shield there is a consuming fire, and upon his neck there are coals of burning juniper and (also) round about him (there are coals of burning juniper).

(7) And the splendour of Shekina is on his face; and the horns of majesty on his wheels; and a royal diadem upon his skull.

(8) And his body is full of eyes. And wings are covering the whole of his high stature (lit. the height of his stature is all wings).

(9) On his right hand a flame is burning, and on his left a fire is glowing; and coals are burning from it⁶. And firebrands go forth from ⁷his body⁷. And lightnings are cast forth from his face. With him there is alway thunder upon (in) thunder, by his side there is ever earthquake upon (in) earthquake*.

(10) And the two princes of the Merkaba are together ⁸with him⁸.

6 so B. A: 'from his body' D: 'from him' 7-7 so BD. A: 'him' 8-8 lit. 'the two princes of the Merkaba are in his place' B reads: 'are of his size (like his stature)'

(7) the splendour of Shekina is on his face. On the conception of the splendour of Shekina see Abelson, Immanence, pp. 85-89, and cf. note on ch. v. 4. When it is said to be on the face of KERUBIEL here, it is to be understood as a reflection of God's glory, in analogy with the 'glory' that the first Adam possessed before his fall (Ber. R. xii) and which is to be restored to the righteous in the world to come (cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter Kaph, beg.).

horns of majesty on his wheels. The angels are often depicted as horned, cf. vs. 13 (horns of glory) and ch. xxix. 2 (horns of splendour). Horned angels are referred to in Mass. Hek. v (angels of horns of majesty: ba'alē qarnē hōd). Instead of 'on his wheels' one would have expected 'on his head'. Cf. vs. 13. No doubt the angel was imagined as having 'wheels', but it is possible that the reading here is corrupt ('ofan' as a synonym of 'galgal' having been put in the place of the latter?). But cf. Ezek. x. 12. For Messiah ben Joseph as 'horned' cf. note on xlv. 5.

(8) his body is full of eyes. The angels have eyes all round to be able to see without turning: "there is no back in heaven" (Chag. 15 a). The passage forming the point of support is such a one as Ezek. x. 12. Cf. further chh. ix. 3, xxv. 2, 6, xxvi. 6, Hek. R. xxii. wings are covering the whole of his high stature. Cf. ch. ix. 2, Hek. R. ib. For vss. 8 and 9 in general cf. Chibbut ha Qeber, i.

(10) the two princes of the Merkaba. Cf. ch. i. 7. The princes of the Merkaba are carrying the Merkaba acc. to Widduy Yaphe, fol. 133 b. 'The princes of the Merkaba' are on the level with MIKAEL, GABRIEL, METATRON and SANDALPHON in so far as they, in contrast to other angels, are exempt from being burnt in the fiery river and 'created anew' acc. to Šuni, quoted by the Smaller Yalqut Re'ubeni under 'Mal'ak'. In Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter Mem, BH. iii, they are one of the highest classes of angels; together with the Chayyoth they minister by the Merkaba. In Midrash Sar Tora, BH. iii, Hek. R. xxx, an angel, called SIRBIEL, is defined as "one of the princes of the Merkaba".

* The literal translation 'thunder in thunder' etc. is presumably that which best corresponds to the idea in the mind of the writer: that thunder was thundering from the midst of thunder, earthquake roaring from the midst of earthquake.

(11) Why is he called KERUBIEL ⁹H', the Prince⁹. Because he is appointed over ¹⁰the chariot of the Kerubim. And the mighty Kerubim are given in his charge. And he adorns¹⁰ the crowns on their heads and polishes the diadem upon their skull.

(12) ¹¹He magnifies the glory of their appearance.¹¹ And he glorifies¹² the beauty of their majesty. ¹³And he increases the greatness of their honour. He causes the song of their praise to be sung. He intensifies their beautiful strength. He causes the brilliance of their glory to shine forth. He beautifies their goodly mercy and loving-kindness. He frames the fairness of their radiance. He makes their merciful beauty even more beautiful. He glorifies their ¹⁴upright majesty¹⁴. He extols the order of their praise, to stablish the dwelling-place of him "who dwelleth on the Kerubim".

(13) And the Kerubim are standing by the Holy Chayyoth, and their wings are raised up to their heads (lit. are as the height of their heads)

and Shekina is (resting) upon them and the brilliance of the Glory is upon their faces and ¹⁵song and praise¹⁵ in their mouth and their hands are under their wings

¹⁶and their feet are covered by their wings¹⁶ and horns of glory¹⁷ are upon their heads and the splendour of Shekina on their face

and Shekina is (resting) upon them

9-9 D om. 10-10 B: 'the chariots of the Chayyoth. And he adorns the increases their beauty' 14-14 B: 'majestic strength' 15-15 D: 'song

In the two latter of these instances the 'princes of the Merkaba' are clearly indicated as more than two in number. Confer further on ch. i. 7 ('the princes of the Merkaba and the flaming Seraphim').

The expression 'are on his place' or 'are together with him' is perhaps a sign that the princes of the Merkaba had a function or occupied a position here ascribed to KERUBIEL or the Kerubim, a view which the writer tried to harmonize with his own in this way.

(11) KERUBIEL is the prince of the Kerubim. The Kerubim described here are "the four Kerubim" (Ezek. x). In the Pseudepigrapha they are mentioned, esp. in Apoc. Moses and 1 En. and 2 En. Further see the introductory section. mighty Kerubim is the expression used also in Mass. Hek. iv. chariot(s) of the Kerubim, also ch. xxiv. 1. Cf. Apoc. Mos. xxii. 3 ("when God appeared in paradise, mounted on the chariots of his Kerubim"), and ib. xxxviii. 3.

(13) and Shekina is resting upon them and the... Glory is upon their faces. Cf. Ezek. x. 18. 'The brilliance of the Glory' is the resplendence of the 'Glory' of Shekina. their hands are under their wings, perhaps deduced from Ezek. x. 7. their feet are covered etc. obviously from Is. vi. 2. horns of glory and sapphire stones are round about them and columns of fire on their four sides and columns of firebrands beside them.

(14) There is one sapphire on one side¹⁸ and another sapphire on another side¹⁸ and under¹⁹ the sapphires¹⁹ there are coals of burning juniper.

(15) And one Kerub is standing in each direction but the wings of the Kerubim compass each other above their skulls in glory; and they spread them to sing with them a song to him that inhabiteth the clouds and to praise with them the fearful majesty of the king of kings.

(16) And KERUBIEL H', the prince who is appointed over them, he arrays them in comely, beautiful and pleasant orders and he exalts them in all manner of exaltation, dignity and glory. And he hastens them—in glory and might—to do the will of their Creator every moment. For above their lofty heads abides continually²⁰ the glory of the high king²⁰ “who dwelleth on the Kerubim”.

(15) spread them to sing with them. The Kerubim are represented as singing with their wings. The 'sound' or 'voice of the cherubims' wings' of Ezek. x. 5 is interpreted as the sound of a song. Acc. to Hek. R. xi. 4: "the wings of the Chayyoth are full of rejoicing." The Kerubim themselves are singing acc. to vs. 13. Cf. 2 En. xix. 6 e.a. ("the indescribable singing of the host of the Cherubim").

(16) Cf. chh. xxv. 5, xxvi. 8.

The additional fragments, here marked chh. xxii B and xxii C, follow in B immediately after ch. xxii. Another recension of ch. xxii C occurs in Add. 27199, fol. 78 a, referred to here as 'L(o)' or 'Lo'. In the same MS. fol. 126 a (Helak Merkaba) there is a third recension, containing a version of ch. xxii C 1-3 (middle), followed by a piece parallel to but differing markedly from ch. xxii B 1, 3, 4: 'Lmr'.

(1) there is a court before the Throne of Glory (Lmr). The place of God's manifestation in the highest heavens is depicted in the simile of the innermost part

(2) which no seraph nor angel can enter, and it is 36,000 myriads of parasangs, as it is written (Is. vi. 2): "and the Seraphim are standing above him" (the last word of the scriptural passage being 'ל') [numerical value: 36]].

(3) As the numerical value of ל' (36) is the number of the bridges there.

(4) And there are 24 myriads of wheels of fire. And the ministering angels are 12,000 myriads. And there are 12,000 rivers of hail, and 12,000 treasuries of snow.

And in the seven Halls are chariots of fire and flames, without reckoning, or end or searching. (Lmr. ends here.)

placed over a river so that every one can pass over it, likewise a bridge is placed from the beginning of the entry to the end. (2) And three ministering angels surround it and utter a song before YHWH, the God of Israel. And there are standing before it lords of dread and captains of fear, thousand times thousand and ten thousand times ten thousand in number and they sing praise and hymns before YHWH, the God of Israel.

(3) Numerous bridges are there: bridges of fire and numerous bridges of hail. Also numerous rivers of hail, numerous treasuries of snow and numerous wheels of fire.

(4) And how many are the ministering angels? 12,000 myriads: six (thousand myriads) above and six (thousand myriads) below. And 12,000 are the treasuries of snow, six above and six below. And 24 myriads of wheels of fire, 12 (myriads) above and 12 (myriads) below. And they surround the bridges and the rivers of fire and the rivers of hail. And there are numerous ministering angels, forming entries, for all of a Sanctuary. The seventh Hall is called 'the Holy of Holies'. The entry (B), then, is the entry of the innermost part of the sanctuary. The conception of 'bridges' in heaven is attested in Hek. R. BH. iii. 93. They are the bridges that are placed over the fiery rivers (cf. ib.). (2) three ministering angels. Probably the leaders of the song-uttering angels, who sometimes are represented as three, usually as four (cf. note on ch. xxxv. 3). lords of dread and captains of fear. Guardian angels who inspire dread and fear, cf. Rev. Moses, YR. ii. 66 b ("I saw the angels of dread who surround the Throne"). thousand times thousand etc. Derived from Dan. vii. 10. Cf. chh. xxxv. 6, xxxvi. 1, Zohar, ii. 252 b.

(3, 4) rivers of fire, rivers of hail. Cf. ch. xlii. 1, 7. wheels (galgallim) of fire. The wheels of fire are possibly conceived of as angelic beings. Cf. Zohar, ii. 252 b (in the fourth Hall): "under the Chayyoth are four Seraphim (cf. vs. 1 acc. to Lmr) . . . from these four Seraphim . . . there go forth flames of fire and from these flames are made 72 galgallim burning in the fire and from that fire is made the Nehar di-Nur". the treasuries of snow are usually said to be 'under the throne'. six above and six below etc. 'Above' and 'below' probably in relation to the the creatures that are standing in the midst thereof, corresponding to (over against) the paths of Raqia' Shamayim.

(5) What doeth YHWH, the God of Israel, the King of Glory? The Great and Fearful God, mighty in strength, doth cover his face.

(6) In 'Araboth are 660,000 myriads of angels of glory standing over against the Throne of Glory and the divisions of flaming fire. And the King of Glory doth cover His face; for else the 'Araboth Raqia' would be rent asunder in its midst because of the majesty, splendour, beauty, radiance, loveliness, brilliancy, brightness and excellency of the appearance of (the Holy One,) blessed be He.

(7) There are numerous ministering angels performing his will, numerous kings, numerous princes in the 'Araboth of his delight, angels who are revered among the rulers in heaven, distinguished, adorned with song and bringing love to remembrance: (who) are affrighted by the splendour of the Shekina, and their eyes are dazzled by the shining beauty of their King, their faces grow black and their strength doth fail.

(8) There go forth rivers of joy, streams of gladness, rivers of rejoicing, streams of triumph, rivers of love, streams of friendship—(another reading:) of commotion—and they flow over and go forth before the Throne of Glory and wax great and go through the gates of the paths of 'Araboth Raqia' at the voice of the shouting and musick of the CHAYYOTH, at the voice of the rejoicing of the timbrels of his 'OPHANNIM and at the melody of the cymbals of His Kerubim. And they wax great and go forth with commotion with the sound of the hymn: "HOLY, HOLY, HOLY, IS THE LORD OF HOSTS; THE WHOLE EARTH IS FULL OF HIS GLORY!"

bridges. for all the creatures that are standing in the midst thereof.... The 'creatures' probably refer to human beings, perhaps the souls or spirits who are ascending towards their abode near the Throne of Glory, i.e. after death. It is improbable that the Yörēdē Merkaba are meant here. The angels are placed so as to form an entry, through the midst of which the souls proceed.

(6) the king of Glory doth cover His face.... This part of the verse recurs literally identical in Hek. R. xi, BH. iii. 92, and Or. 6666, fol. 4 b. the veil with which the Most High covers his face is often identified with the Pargod, cf. on ch. xlv. 1. Cf. also Mass. Hek. iii and Chag. 12 b.

(8) There go forth rivers of joy etc. The whole of this verse recurs in Hek. R. viii. 4, BH. iii. 90, Or. 6666, fol. 3 a. Only the very last sentence is somewhat different in Hek. R.: "(go forth with commotion) with Qēdushsha, at the hour when Israel say before Him: 'HOLY, HOLY, HOLY etc.' as it is written (Is. vi. 3) HOLY, HOLY, HOLY". In common with the rest of the book this chapter makes no reference to the Qēdushsha chanted by the congregation on earth.

Ch. xxii C. (1) What is the distance between one bridge and another? 12 myriads of parasangs. The present chapter is mainly concerned with measures and distances. This was an early theme of the mystical traditions. A striking parallel is the well-known passage in Chag. 13 a (the distances between the heavens and the measures of the different parts of the body of the Holy Chayyoth). It was probably referred to as Seder Shi'urin. Cf. the Shi'ur Qōmā. The latter part of vs. 1 is a variant of the former part. (2) Vss. 2 and 3, by way of an exposition of the distances and measures gives a definite Merkaba-picture. The order is from the lower to the highest parts: rivers of dread—rivers of fear—rivers of hail—rivers of darkness—chambers of lightnings—clouds of compassion—the beginning of the Merkaba proper—the Kerubim—the 'Ophannim—the chambers of chambers—the Holy Chayyoth—the Throne. It will be seen that this order is entirely different from that implied in the angelological section, chh. xix-xxii, xxv seqq., and also from that of ch. xxxiii. 2 seqq. In placing the Chayyoth next to the Throne as the highest of the Merkaba-angels, this fragment agrees with Hek. R. xiii and the regular representation of Zohar, and also with the passage Chag. 13 a, referred to above. When it is said: "the Holy Chayyoth carry the Throne of Glory", this does not necessarily imply the Chayyoth being designed as the highest of the Merkaba-angels; the other classes may be conceived of as surrounding the Throne (cf. ch. xxxiii. 2, 3). The chambers of chambers are here the treasures and storehouses of the Most High.

12 myriads of parasangs; ¹¹and the breadth of each one wing is of that same measure¹¹; and the distance between the Holy Chayyoth and the Throne of Glory is ¹²30,000 myriads of parasangs¹².

(3) And from the foot of the Throne to ¹³the seat¹³ there are 40,000 myriads of parasangs¹⁴. And the name of Him that sitteth on it: let the name be sanctified!

[(4) And the arches of the Bow are set above the 'Araboth, and they are 1000 thousands and 10,000 times ten thousands (of parasangs) high. Their measure is after the measure of the 'Irin and Qaddishin (Watchers and Holy Ones) ¹⁵. As it is written (Gen. ix. 13) "My bow I have set in the cloud". It is not written here "I will set" but "I have set", (i.e.) already; clouds that surround the Throne of Glory. As His clouds pass by, the angels of hail (turn into) burning coal.

(5) And a fire of the voice goes down from¹⁶ by the Holy Chayyoth. And because of the breath of that voice they "run" (Ezek. i. 14) to another place, fearing lest it command them to go; and they "return" lest it injure them from the other side. Therefore "they run and return" (Ezek. i. 14).

(6) And these arches of the Bow are more¹⁷ beautiful and radiant than¹⁸ the radiance of the sun during the summer solstice. And they are whiter than a flaming fire and they are great and beautiful.

(7) Above ¹⁹the arches of the Bow¹⁹ are the wheels of the 'Ophannim.

Aqiba version of Shi'ur Qoma has: "from the seat of His Glory (Yāqār, not Kabod) downwards is (a distance of) 118,000 parasangs" (half the numerical value of עֶרֶב כֹּחַ, "and of great power": Ps. cxlvii. 5). Cf. Hek. R. x, BH. iii. 91 ("from His Throne of Glory upwards is a distance of 180,000 myriads of parasangs").

Vss. 4-7 cannot be harmonized with the Merkaba-picture of the preceding verse. They are in reality a mystical commentary on Ezek. i. 14 seqq., starting from the conception of the Celestial Bow, brought about by the combination of Gen. ix. 13 with Ezek. i. 28. Also in Zohar, i. 71 b, the passage Gen. ix. 13 is used to elucidate the mystical meaning of passages in the first chapter of Ezekiel. These vss. may have been added here on account of the reference to 'measures' in vss. 4 and 7. after the measure of the 'Irin and Qaddishin. Cf. Rev. xxi. 17. The measures laid down in 'Shi'ur Qoma' are said ib. to be acc. to the measures of the Most High, to whom a span (zéret) means the distance from one end of the world to the other. For the 'Irin and Qaddishin see ch. xxviii. Vs. 4 recurs in S. Raziél, 30 a, preceding Shi'ur Qoma. (5) a fire of the voice etc. is an allusion to the Qol H^anullā of Ezek. i. 24. It is here conceived of as a Divine Voice. The Voice goes forth in fire. The Chayyoth fearing the fire: cf. Hek. R. BH. iii. 104. (7) vs. 7 recurs in S. Raziél, 4 a.

Their height is 1000 thousand and 10,000 times 10,000 units of measure after the measure of the Seraphim and the Troops (Gēdudim).]

CHAPTER XXIII

The winds blowing 'under the wings of the Kerubim'

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) There are numerous winds blowing under the wings of the Kerubim.

There blows "the Brooding Wind", as it is written (Gen. i. 2): "and the wind of God was brooding upon the face of the waters".

(2) There blows "the Strong Wind¹", as it is said (Ex. xiv. 21): "and the Lord caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night".

¹ Ins. with BDE. A om. E continues here. DE put at the beginning of this chapter as heading, 'Order of the winds'.

Chh. xxiii and xxiv stand out by themselves from the rest of the book. They are nearest akin to the chapters describing the heavens from their quasi-physical aspects, and can therefore conveniently be reckoned as belonging to section 6. (See the survey of the contents of the present book.) The different 'winds' and 'chariots' are enumerated. Their names are deduced from passages of the O.T. where the words 'rūāch' resp. 'merkaba', 'rékeb' or similar occur in different connections or with different attributes.

An almost literal parallel to ch. xxiii, although in a shorter form (the winds are reduced to eight), is found, YR. i. 9 a, quoted from Sōdē Rāzā: "There are eight winds. The first is 'the wind of jealousy', as it is written (Gen. vi. 3), 'My wind shall not always strive with man', the second is 'the Wind blowing in the world', as it is written (Gen. i. 2): 'the wind of God was brooding upon the face of the waters'; the third is 'the angel-wind' as it is written (1 Kings xix. 11): 'but the Lord was not in the wind', etc." As the word for 'wind' is also that for 'spirit', in all passages referred to here, where the English version has 'spirit', this word has been replaced by 'wind' in accordance with the significance 'rūāch' has assumed throughout the chapter.

Parallels for the present method of deriving 'names' of different heavenly objects from O.T. passages and enumerating them are found in Mass. Hek. i and in Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter Zain.

In Mass. Hek. i it is the Thrones of the Holy One, blessed be He, which are dealt with according to this principle. The wording is almost literally the same as that of the present chapters. "Numerous thrones has the Holy One, blessed be He. He has 'the Established Throne' as it is written... He has 'the Throne of Justice and Righteous-ness'... He has the Throne of Loving-kindness... He has the Throne of Yah, as it is written (Ex. xvii. 16): 'Because a hand is lifted up upon the throne of Yah'. (Cf. ch. xxiv. 20 here), etc."

In Alph. R. 'Aqiba, ib. the 'keys of the Holy one' are the objects. The 'winds', 'chariots', 'thrones' and 'keys' of the said passages are to be understood in their literal sense.

Ch. xxiii. (1) blowing under the wings of the Kerubim. This trait forms

(3) There blows "the East Wind"¹ as it is written (Ex. x. 13): "the east wind brought the locusts".

(4) There blows "the Wind of Quails"² as it is written (Num. xi. 31): "And there went forth a wind from the Lord and brought quails".

(5) There blows "the Wind of Jealousy" as it is written (Num. v. 14): "And the wind of jealousy came upon him".

(6) There blows the "Wind of Earthquake" as it is written (1 Kings. xix. 11): "and after that the wind of the earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake".

(7) There blows the "Wind of H'"³ as it is written (Ex. xxxvii. 1): "and he carried me out by the wind of H' and set me down".

(8) There blows the "Evil Wind"³ as it is written (1 Sam. xvi. 23): "and the evil wind departed from him"⁴.

(9) There blow the "Wind of Wisdom"⁵ and the "Wind of Understanding" and the "Wind of Knowledge" and the "Wind of the Fear of H'"⁵ as it is written (Is. xi. 2): "And ⁶the wind of ⁶*H'* shall rest upon him; ⁷the wind of wisdom and understanding, the wind of counsel and might, the wind of knowledge and of the fear of H'".

(10) There blows the "Wind of Rain", as it is written (Prov. xxv. 23): "the north wind bringeth forth rain".

(11) There blows the "Wind of Lightnings", as it is written (Jer. x. 13, li. 16): "he maketh lightnings for the rain and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures".

(12) ⁸There blows the "Wind, Breaking the Rocks", as it is written (1 Kings xix. 11): "the Lord passed by and ⁹a great and strong wind (rent the mountains and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord)".^{8, 7}

(13) There blows the "Wind of Assuagement of the Sea", as it is written (Gen. viii. 1): "and God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters assuaged".

The scriptural verse in question is interpreted in a sense different from the natural ('but the Lord was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake, etc.), in order to furnish the notion 'wind of earthquake'.

(14) ¹⁰There blows the "Wind of Wrath" ¹¹, as it is written (Job i. 19): "and behold there came a great wind from the wilderness and smote the four corners of the house and it fell". ¹⁰

(15) There blows the "Storm-Wind", as it is written (Ps. cxlviii. 8): "Storm-wind, fulfilling his word".

(17) And whither go all these winds ¹³? The Scripture teaches us, that they go out from under the wings of the Kerubim and descend on the globe of the sun, as it is written (Eccl. i. 6): "¹⁴The wind goeth toward the south and turneth about unto the north; it turneth about continually in its course and the wind ¹⁴ returneth again to its circuits". And from the globe of the sun they return and descend upon [¹⁵the rivers and ¹⁵ the seas, upon] the mountains and upon the hills, as it is written (Am. iv. 13): "For lo, he that formeth the mountains and createth the wind".

(18) And from the mountains and the hills they return and descend to the seas and the rivers; and from the seas and the rivers they return and descend upon ¹⁷ ¹⁶ (the) cities and provinces; and from the cities and provinces they return and descend into the Garden, and from the Garden they return and descend to Eden, as it is written (Gen. iii. 8): "walking in the Garden in the wind of day". (16) Satan is standing among these winds etc. Satan, acc. to the reading adopted above, is represented by 'the Storm-wind'. The winds are thus divided into good and evil ones. Cf. 1 En. xxxiv. 3: "and out of one portal they (the winds) blow for good: but when they blow through the other two portals it is with violence and affliction on the earth. The 'storm-wind' represents the destructive agency among the winds.

(17) The winds are represented as going out from under the wings of the Kerubim. The idea common to older and later Apocalyptic and Rabbinic is that the winds are kept in treasures in heaven, from where there are sent out and whereto they return.

(18) into the Garden, and from the Garden . . . to Eden. On the relation between the 'Garden' and 'Eden' cf. note on ch. v. 5.

the other and are perfumed with the spices of the Garden even from its remotest parts, until¹⁸ they separate from each other, and, filled with the scent of the pure spices, they bring the odour from the remotest parts of Eden and the spices of the Garden to the righteous and godly who in the time to come shall inherit the Garden of Eden and the Tree of Life, as it is written (Cant. iv. 16): "Awake, O north wind; and come thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out. Let my beloved come into his garden and eat his precious fruits".

CHAPTER XXIV

The different chariots of the Holy One, blessed be He

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, the glory of all heaven, said to me:

(1) Numerous chariots has the Holy One, blessed be He:

He has the "Chariots of (the) *Kerubim*¹", as it is written (Ps.

Pauli* the 'perfuming winds' are replaced by 'εὐωδέσταιον ὕδωρ', which "flows from the root of the tree of life". Cf. also Rev. R. Joshua ben Levi, Paradise, 5th Compartment: "a perfume breathes through it, more exquisite than the perfume of Lebanon" (Gaster's translation).

they bring... the spices of the Garden to the righteous... in the time to come. Here we are at once translated into a picture of the future world. It would have been more natural if the relative sentence ('who etc.') had not appeared here, for then 'the righteous and godly' could have been referred to the common conception, according to which they are already living in Paradise, having been brought there immediately after death. The author's glide from present to future time is, however, comprehensible and excused by the poetical form of expression of the chapter.

Also acc. to 2 En. ix, "the fragrances of the Garden of Eden are prepared for the righteous". Cf. especially Num. R. xiii. 3 (there, as here, with reference to Cant. iv. 16): "In the world to come God will make a feast for the righteous in the Garden of Eden. Neither balsam nor spices will then be needed, for the North Wind and the South Wind will come down and bring with them all the spices of the Garden of Eden and they will spread their perfume". See Introd. sect. 16, 6.

Ch. xxiv. The same method that is used in regard to the 'winds' in the foregoing chapter is here applied to the 'chariots'. The key to the understanding of the often far-fetched deductions from scriptural passages can be expressed by the principle: "WHENEVER IT IS STATED IN THE HOLY WRIT THAT GOD APPEARS, IT MUST BE ASSUMED THAT HE APPEARS ON A VEHICLE". Thus, e.g. when it is said (vs. 5), 'I saw the Lord standing upon the altar', this is interpreted as referring to 'the Chariot of the altar'; 'appeared in the Tent' is interpreted as 'appeared in the Chariot of the Tent', etc.

(1) the Chariots of the Kerubim. This forms the connecting link with ch. xxii,

(2) He has the "Chariots of Wind", as it is written (ib.): "and he flew swiftly upon the wings of the wind".

(8) He has the "Chariots of the Tabernacle", as it is written (Lev. i. 1): "And the Lord spake unto him out of the tabernacle".

(9) He has the "Chariots of the Mercy-Seat", as it is written (Num. vii. 89): "then he heard ³the Voice³ speaking unto him from upon the mercy-seat".

(10) He has the "Chariots of Sapphire Stone", as it is written (Ex. xxiv. 10): "and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of sapphire stone".

(11) He has the "Chariots of Eagles", as it is written (Ex. xix. 4): "I bare you on eagles' wings". ⁴Eagles literally are not meant here but "they that fly swiftly as eagles".⁴

(12) ⁵He has the "chariots of Shout", as it is written (Ps. xlvii. 6): "God is gone up with a shout".⁵

(13) He has the "Chariots of 'Araboth'", as it is written (Ps. lxxiii. 5): "Extol Him that rideth upon the 'Araboth'".

(14) He has the "Chariots of Thick Clouds", as it is written (Ps. civ. 3): "who maketh the thick clouds His chariot".

And at the time when He rides on a swift kerub, as he sets one of His feet upon him, before he sets the other foot upon his back, he looks through ¹⁰eighteen thousand¹⁰ worlds at one glance. And he discerns and sees into them all and knows what is in all of them—and then he sets down the other foot upon him, according as it is written (Ezek. xlvi. 35): "Round about eighteen thousand".

Whence do we know that He looks through every one of them every day? It is written (Ps. xiv. 2): "He looked down from heaven upon the children of men ¹¹to see if there were any that did understand, that did seek after God¹¹".

to the Kerubim, in ch. xxii. 13. The Chayyoth carry the Throne of Glory, the seat of Shekina.

Note the systematic order of the 'chariots' in vss. 15 seqq. The Chariots are those of 'the Chayyoth (vs. 15), the Galgallim (vs. 16), the Kerub (vs. 17), the 'Ophanim (vs. 18) and the Divine Thrones (vss. 19 seqq.)'. This order recalls the system of the Merkaba-representation in the angelological section, chh. xix-xxii, xxiv seqq.: four classes of Merkaba-angels arranged according to rank under and next to the Divine Throne. If the order here presented is intentional, it appears that the Merkaba-picture of this chapter is different from that of the angelological section referred to: the arrangement (and names) of the superior classes of angels here is not congruent with that of the latter. Cf. further note on ch. xix and Introduction.

(16) Chariots of Wheels (Galgallim). On the Galgallim cf. note on ch. xix. 2.

(17) Chariots of a Swift Kerub. Cf. P. R. 'El. iv: "When God looks out on the earth his Chariots are on the wheels (Galgallim, cf. the preceding vs.), when riding in heaven, on a swift Kerub".

before he sets the other foot etc. The expression occurs also Hek. R. iii. 2 et al. he looks through 18,000 worlds at one glance. "It was presumed that our present earth was preceded by many others which were not good in the eyes of the Creator (Gen. R. iii. 9, ix. 2) who traverses in all 18,000 worlds". The 18,000 worlds are co-existent with the present world.

The number 18,000 is here deduced from Ezek. xlvi. 35. So also in S. Razi'el, 36 (Ma'ase Bereshith).

Acc. to 'Abōdā Zārā, 3 b, the number is derived from Ps. lxviii. 18, interpreted somewhat in the following sense: 'God rides (through) twenty thousands (i.e. 20,000 worlds) less two thousand (worlds)'. This interpretation is repeated in later cabalistic works, e.g. 'Peli'a' (cited YR. i. 7 b).

In the Talmud-passages just mentioned the Holy One is represented as traversing all the 18,000 worlds "on his SWIFT KERUB".

The number 18,000 is lastly deduced even in a third way, viz. from the first word of the Tora: Bereshith. The number of the letters of this word when written in full (beth, resh, shin, etc.) is 18. Hence the interpretation: "18 (scil. thousand worlds) created God".

With the conception of 18,000 worlds may be compared that of 955 heavens: ch. xlvi. 1 (cf. note, ib.).

¹²(18) He has the "Chariots of the 'Ophannim", as it is written (Ezek. x. 12): "and the 'Ophannim were full of eyes round about".¹²

(19) He has the "Chariots of ¹³His Holy Throne¹³", as it is written (Ps. xlvii. 8): "God sitteth upon his holy throne".

(20) He has the "chariots of the Throne of Yah", as it is written (Ex. xvii. 16): "Because a hand is lifted up upon the Throne of Jah".

¹⁴(21) He has the "Chariots of the Throne of Judgement", as it is written (Is. v. 16): "but the Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment".¹⁴

(22) He has the "Chariots of the Throne of Glory", as it is written (Jer. xvii. 12): "The Throne of Glory, set on high from the beginning, ¹⁵is the place of our sanctuary¹⁵".

(23) He has the "Chariots of the High and Exalted Throne", as it is written (Is. vi. 1): "I saw the Lord sitting upon the high and exalted throne".¹⁶

'Ophphanniel, the prince of the 'Ophannim.

Description of the 'Ophannim

The word 'chariots' seems here to be merely a metaphorical expression (= the vehicle of God's manifestation?). For the different 'Thrones' of God see Mass. Hek. i, ii. All the names of 'Thrones' of the present verses recur there, partly with the same scriptural references.

Ch. xxv. The continuation of ch. xxii.

(1) Above these... The opening words of the chapter make it evident that it cannot possibly be a continuation of the preceding chapter, as it appears to be from its present place. With ch. xxii, however, it fits in well, both with regard to style, phraseology and general arrangement. It treats of the third class of Merkaba-angels, the 'Ophannim, and their prince, 'OPHPHANNIEL, in a manner very similar to that of chh. xix-xxii, with regard to Chayyoth and Kerubim. 'Ophphanniel. The name occurs, chh. xiv. 10 and xvii. 5, as the name of the angel set over the course of the moon. Cf. S. Raziël, 19 b. No instance attributing to 'OPHPHANNIEL the function assigned to him in the present chapter is found among the references in Schwab, VA.

There seem to have been two different traditions concerning the name of the

(4) His height is (as) the distance of 2500 years' journey. No eye⁵ can behold and no mouth can tell the mighty power of his strength⁶ save the King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, alone.

(5) Why is he called 'OPHPHANNIEL?

Because he is appointed over the 'Ophannim and the 'Ophannim

2-2 D om. 3 A repeats the last sentence. 4 so DE. A ins. 'to stand (and)' 5 so D. A: 'house' 6 so DE. A: 'eyes' leader of the 'Ophannim. According to one it was 'OPHANNIEL, according to the other RAPHAEL. The former tradition is represented by this chapter, the latter by Zohar, Ex. xliii. In Masseket 'Asilut the two are foisted together, so that there RAPHAEL and 'OPHANNIEL are given as the chieftains of the 'Ophannim.

(2) he has 8466 eyes etc. The number of the eyes is a calendary one. The text is, however, corrupt, the reading of DE worse than that of A. If, instead of 'days of the year', we read (as Jellinek suggests in note, ad locum, in E) 'hours of the days of the year', the number 8466 would correspond to a lunar year of 352 $\frac{1}{2}$ days; the fourth part of 8466 is 2116 (plus $\frac{1}{2}$), the number of eyes on each of the four sides, according to one of the variants of A. The other variant, 2190, is the exact fourth part of the number of hours of the solar year, if counted as 365 days of 24 hours each. The variants of A thus point to two different readings, one of which used 'solar' numbers, the other 'lunar' ones. This fact does not imply any contention between solar and lunar calculations as in the earlier Apocrypha. In the present book the solar and lunar numbers are merely cosmic numbers, used side by side, apparently of equal value, although the solar ones are more frequent. The only reason to consider the variant, giving the lunar numbers, as the original in this case, is the fact that 'OPHANNIEL elsewhere—chh. xiv. 10 and xvii. 5 of the present book and S. Raziel, 19 b—is connected with the course of the moon (notice the use of the number 354 in connection with 'OPHANNIEL, ch. xvii. 5). Besides, the numbers 8466 and 2116 may be corrupt for 8496 and 2124 resp., corresponding to a lunar year of 354 days.

A parallel passage in Mass. Hek. iv runs (using solar numbers): "In each Hall there are 8766 gates of lightnings, corresponding to the number of hours of the days of a year". This parallel is pointed out by Jellinek in his note (referred to above) and is the point of support for the emendations suggested by him.

(3) two eyes that are in his face. His face, being pictured as that of a man, has two eyes only, whereas the rest of his body is wholly covered with eyes: see the preceding verse.

And he waits upon them early and late, by day and by night, to increase their beauty, to make great their dignity and to make them 'diligent in praise of their Creator.

(6) And all the 'Ophannim are full of eyes,¹² and they are all full of brightness¹²; ¹³¹⁴ seventy two sapphire stones are fixed on their garments on their right side¹⁴ and seventy two sapphire stones are fixed on their garments on their left side¹³.

(7) And four¹⁵ carbuncle¹⁶ stones are fixed on the crown of every single one, the splendour of which proceeds in the four directions of 'Araboth even as the splendour of the globe of the sun proceeds in all the directions of the universe. ¹⁷And why is it called Carbuncle (Baréqet)?¹⁷ Because its splendour is like the appearance of a light-lost all traces of their original character of wheels (galgallim). Cf. the similar development of the traditions concerning the Galgallim (see note on ch. xix. 2).

Here the 'Ophannim are depicted as one of the classes of Merkaba-angels, with the regular appearance of angels (with eyes, garments, crowns etc. cf. vs. 6).

Later the 'Ophannim are identified with the Galgallim, e.g. in the cabbalistic treatise on the Throne, the Merkaba and the Shekina, contained in Harley Or. 5510, fol. 127 a: "the 'Ophannim, they are (the same as) the Galgallim".

When the Galgallim are identified with the spheres or heavenly bodies, the conception of the 'Ophannim as those who 'move the spheres' arises. Such is the representation of the 'Ophannim in Shefa 'Tal (by R. Sheftel Horwitz, ed. 1612), fol. 41 c: "... the 'Ophannim, who act in the 'Asiyyatic world ('the world of creative matter') and move the spheres, as it is written (Ezek. i. 15) '... behold one 'Ophan upon the earth' etc."

It was, no doubt, through the connection of the 'Ophannim with the 'globes' that 'OPHANNIEL was made the prince appointed over the 'globe of the moon'.

(6) 72 sapphire stones are fixed on their garments. Cf. ch. xii. 1, and for the use of the number 72, vs. 1 of ch. ix.

(7) four carbuncle stones on the crown.... Carbuncle stone is mentioned as one of the different kinds of precious stones fixed on "the floor of the 'Araboth'' in Mass. Hek. iv, where a similar statement is made to its splendour as here: "its splendour proceeds through the whole universe and through all the seven heavens".

why is it called Carbuncle? There is a certain confusion in the readings of the latter part of the verse. The reading of D is adopted in the translation, as being ning¹⁸ (Baraq). And tents of splendour, tents of brilliance, tents of brightness as of sapphire and carbuncle inclose them because of¹⁹ the shining appearance of their eyes¹⁹.

CHAPTER XXVI

SERAPHIEL, the Prince of the Seraphim.

Description of the Seraphim

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Above these there is one prince, wonderful, noble, great, honourable, mighty, terrible, a chief and leader¹ and a swift scribe¹, glorified, honoured and beloved.

(2) He is altogether filled with splendour, full of praise and shining; and he is wholly full of brilliance, of light and of beauty; and the whole of him is filled with goodliness² and greatness.

18 E: '(the planet) Jupiter' 19-19 A: 'the shining appearance of them (the 'Ophannim), and of their eyes and before them (=and of their faces?)'. The adopted reading is that of DE.

1-1 DE om. 2 A omitting 'goodliness' has here a lacuna.

the most plausible: the unfamiliar word 'Bareqet' is explained as derived from 'Baraq' ('lightning'). The reading of E is based on the assumption that the word to be explained is that of an angel: the expression 'wəlāmmā niqrā šēmō . . . = why is he called by the name. . . ' is the regular phrase introducing the explanation of an angel's name. Hence E presents the reading: "Why is he called by the name of ŠIDQIEL? Because his splendour is like the splendour of the planet Jupiter (Šēdeq)".

The reading of E is probably due to an emendation of a copyist. It is, however, difficult to understand why he should have substituted 'ŠIDQIEL' and 'Šēdeq' for 'Bareqet' and 'Baraq' resp. (it would have been more natural to choose, say, the name 'BARAQIEL', cf. ch. xiv. 10), unless one may assume, that he was dependent upon some tradition, according to which ŠIDQIEL was the Prince of the 'Ophannim. Acc. to Zohar and Mass. Ašilut, ŠIDQIEL is the leader of the class of angels, which is called Shin'anim. tents of splendour etc. The tents, like the clouds of ch. xxxiv. 2, serve the purpose of protecting the other angels from the splendour of the 'Ophannim.

(1) a swift scribe. As this attribute is omitted by D and E, and no second statement occurs in the chapter to the effect that SERAPHIEL had the function of a scribe, scarcely any importance can be ascribed to this single expression. It is possible that a copyist, missing a clear reference to the identity of the 'scribes' or 'scribe' in the present angelological section, there being only an occasional mention of 'scribes' in ch. xxvii. 2, concluded that SERAPHIEL, the highest of the princes of the Merkaba-angels held this function. To the 'scribes' was assigned a high position near the Throne of God. The conception is mainly connected with that of the Judgement.

(3) His countenance is altogether like (that of) angels, but his body is like an eagle's body.

(4) His splendour is like unto lightnings, his appearance like fire brands, his beauty like unto sparks, his honour like ³fiery coals³, his majesty like chashmals, his radiance like the light of the planet Venus. The image of him is like unto the Greater Light. His height is as the seven heavens. The light from his eyebrows is like the sevenfold light.

(5) The sapphire stone upon his head is as great as the whole universe and like unto the splendour of the very heavens in radiance.

(6) His body is full of eyes like the stars of the sky, innumerable and unsearchable. Every eye is like the planet Venus. Yet, there are some of them like the Lesser Light and some of them like unto the Greater Light. From his ankles to his knees (they are) like unto stars of lightning, from his knees to his thighs like unto the planet Venus⁴, from his thighs to his loins like unto the moon, from his loins to his neck like the sun, from his neck to his skull like unto the Light Imperishable. (Cf. Zeph. iii. 5.)

(7) The crown on his head is like unto the splendour of the Throne of Glory. The measure of the crown is the distance of 502 years' journey. There is no kind of splendour, no kind of brilliance, no kind of radiance, no kind of light in the universe but is fixed on that crown.

(8) The name of that prince is SERAPHIEL H'. ⁵And the crown on 4 E instead of 'the planet Venus' reads 'the shining

(6) The description of the appearance of the body of SERAPHIEL in this verse seems to indicate that his body was conceived of as having human form, in contradiction to the statement made in vs. 3.

(7) The crown on his head. On the crown as regular accompaniment-feature of descriptions of high angels, cf. ch. xii. 3 note (also ch. xviii. 1). The measure of the crown is. . . Cf. Shi'ur Qoma, Bodl. opp. 467: the measure of the crown on the head of the manifested Godhead is 500,000 by 500,000 (measures).

(8) Seraphiel H'. See Schwab, VA. p. 260. Among the different passages treating of 'SERAPHIEL' that which is nearest akin to the present representation is Zohar, ii. 252 b (Hekaloth), where SERAPHIEL is given as the name of one of the four Seraphim, viz. the first one.

Acc. to S. Raziel, 36 b, he is appointed over one of the gates of the heavenly apartments.

Acc. to Widduy Yaphe (Add. 15299, fol. 133 b) SERAPHIEL is one of the twenty-six angels who carry the Merkaba.

In S. ha Chesheq he is invoked together with other angels by the suppliant, praying for "knowledge in purity".

In Berith Menucha, fol. 47 c, SERAPHIEL is mentioned as one of the company of 'consuming' or 'burning' angels. The words 'SERAPHIEL' and 'Seraphim' are deduced from the verb 'saraph' ('burn', 'to burn'). Cf. the explanation of the his head, its name is "the Prince of Peace".⁵ And why is he called by the name of SERAPHIEL H'? Because he is appointed over the Seraphim. And ⁶ the flaming Seraphim are given in his charge. And he presides over them by day and by night and teaches them song, praise, proclamation of beauty, might and majesty; that they may proclaim the beauty of their King in all manner of Praise and Sanctification (Qēdushsha).

(9) How many are the Seraphim? Four, corresponding to the four winds of the world. And how many wings have they ⁷each one of them? Six, corresponding to the six days of Creation. And how many faces have they? ⁷Each one of them ⁷four faces.⁸

(10) ⁹The measure of the Seraphim and the height of each one of them correspond to the height of the seven heavens.⁹ The size of each wing is like the measure of all Raqia'. The size of each face is like that of the face of the East.

name 'Seraphim' in vs. 12 of the present chapter. Hence SERAPHIEL, acc. to 'Antachhat Binyanīm, fol. 38 b (cited Schwab, ib.), is invoked in case of fire.

And the crown on his head, its name is "the Prince of Peace." This statement is peculiar to A: it is not found in D and E. It is somewhat out of keeping with the style of this section, as well as of the whole book, in so far as it is the only instance where a special, artificial, name is given to any part of an angel's body or adornment. The attribution of special names to the different parts of the body of the Godhead is a marked feature of Shiur Qoma, and even of Hek. Zot. The sentence is no doubt a gloss.

in all manner of Praise and Sanctification. The Seraphim are singing praises to their Creator and especially the Qēdushsha or Trisagion. That the Seraphim perform the Qēdushsha is definitely stated also in the Testament of Adam (Patrologia Syriaca), in Ma'yan Chokma, BH. i. 58-64, and in the Qēdushsha of the Additional service for Sabbath and Festivals (the Qēdushsha le-Musaph). The last mentioned runs: "We will revere and sanctify thee as in the secret whisper of the Holy Seraphim who sanctify Thy name in Holiness, as it is written by the hand of the prophet (Is. vi. 3), 'And one cried unto another and said, Holy, Holy, Holy, etc.'"¹⁰ The entire conception of the Qēdushsha-singing Seraphim is of course deduced from Is. vi. It is uncertain whether Qēdushsha here is really = Trisagion.

The Seraphim are identical with the Chalkadri of 2 En. xii and xv. 1 (according to CHARLES) and, probably, also with the 'serpents' of 1 En. xx. 7 ("Gabriel, one of the holy angels, who is over Paradise and the serpents and the Cherubim"). Cf. 2 En. xix. 6.

In Apoc. Mosis, xxxiii. 3, the Seraphim are connected with the Merkaba as here.

They appear as one of the classes of superior angels in 1 En. lxi. 10: "And He will summon all the host of the heavens, and all the holy ones above, and the host of God, the Kerubin, Seraphin and 'Ophannin'; and ib. lxxi. 7: "And round about were Seraphin, Cherubin and Ophannin...". Cf. further 2 En. xix. 6, xxix. 3, TB. Chag. 12 b.

As the first (and highest) rank of angels they are represented (as here) in the Coptic Mysteries of St John and the Holy Virgin, fol. 6 b (Budge's ed.): "I saw all the ranks of the angels. The first rank contained the Seraphim".

(11) And each one of them gives forth light like unto the splendour of the Throne of Glory: so that not even the Holy Chayyoth, the honoured 'Ophannim, nor the majestic Kerubim are able to behold it. For everyone who beholds it, his eyes are darkened because of its great splendour.

(12) Why are they called Seraphim? Because they burn (saraph) the writing tables of Satan: Every day Satan is sitting, together with SAMMAEL, the Prince of Rome, and with DUBBIEL, the Prince of Persia, and ¹⁰they write¹⁰ the iniquities of Israel on writing tables which they hand over to the Seraphim, in order that they may present them before the Holy One, blessed be He, so that He may destroy Israel from the world. But the Seraphim know ¹¹from the secrets¹¹ of the Holy One, blessed be He, ¹²that he desires not,¹² that this Berith Menucha, 38 b, also puts the Seraphim in the highest rank, under the leadership of YEHOEL.

Further on the Seraphim, see the Introduction.

(12) Every day Satan is sitting, together with Sammael etc. Satan is here the Prince of the Accusers, SAMMAEL and DUBBIEL being merely his assistants. This function tends more and more to be transferred to SAMMAEL, who as the representative of Rome, the head of the Gentile Nations, naturally becomes the chief supraterritorial enemy of Israel. So, ch. xiv. 2, SAMMAEL is explicitly named 'the Prince of the Accusers'. Likewise, in the Pirqe Mashiach, BH. iii. 68, SAMMAEL appears as the official accuser of Israel. In the earlier Apocrypha he is the angel of death, e.g. Sir. xxv. 24; 3 Bar. iv. 8, ix. 7. He is also identified with the serpent of the Genesis narrative of the primordial sin, or at least considered as the angel who led Adam astray acc. to 3 Bar. iv. 8, ix. 7. Traces of his character as angel of death are found even in later writings, e.g. Midrash Peṭirath Moshe, BH. i. 125, acc. to which 'SAMMAEL, the head of the Accusers' aspires to fetch Moses' soul at the time of his death. In the same line fall his functions of prince of the Nehar di-Nur, the fiery river (Zohar, i. 40 a, ii. 243 b), and angel of Gehenna (Midrash Kohen, 'Arze Lebanon, 3 b, P. R. 'El. xxxi, xiii). As Prince of Rome Sammael is mentioned in Gen. R. lxxvii, in Pirqe Mashiach, ib., in Hek. R. iv, v and freq. As such he obtains a prominent place among 'the Princes of Kingdoms', even at times represented as their leader. Cf. notes on chh. xiv. 2 and xvii. 8.

For DUBBIEL as the Prince of Persia cf. TB. Yoma, 77 a. Vide Intro. sect. 7.

For 'Satan' and 'Satans' as having access to heaven, vide CHARLES, The Book of Enoch, p. 66, on the relation of 'The Parables' of 1 En. to the rest of the book. Acc. to 1 En. xl. 7, the Satans have access to heaven.

that they may present them before the Holy One. This conception of the Seraphim as having the function of handing over documents or petitions to the Holy One, is represented in a somewhat different form in the statement occurring in Lev. R. xxii and Eccl. R. x, that the record of man's deeds during the past day is during his sleep transmitted by the 'nëshāmā' to a Kerub and by the Kerub to a Seraph, who in his turn presents it before the Holy One, blessed be He. The conception is based on the assumption that the Seraphim are the class of Merkaba-angels who stand next to the Throne.

know from the secrets of the Holy One. It was thought that some of the highest angels enjoyed the privilege of partaking in the knowledge of God's secrets; people Israel should perish. What do the Seraphim? Every day do they receive (accept) them from the hand of Satan and burn them in the burning fire over against the high and exalted Throne ¹³ in order that ¹⁴they may not come¹⁴ before the Holy One, blessed be He, at the time when he is sitting upon the Throne of Judgement, judging the whole world in truth.

CHAPTER XXVII

RADWERIEL, the keeper of the Book of Records

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel ¹of H¹, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Above the Seraphim there is one prince, exalted above all the

they knew beforehand the decrees and the reasons of the decrees. Cf. chh. xxviii. 4, x. 1, xlv. 1, 2 and notes resp., xviii. 16 and note. A technical term for this knowledge of the Divine secrets was the expression "know from inside the Curtain" or "hear from behind the Curtain". Cf. Chag. 16 a (concerning the ministering angels), Chibbut ha Qeber, iv (of the angel of death), Ma'yan Chokma, et freq. (of the angel Gallisur).

receive them from the hand of Satan and burn them... that they may not come before the Holy One etc. Cf. how acc. to 1 En. xl, "the four presences on the four sides of the Lord of Spirits" "fend off the Satans and forbid them to come before the Lord of Spirits to accuse them who dwell on the earth" (vs. 7). The accusations have no power to alter the Divine decrees concerning Israel, so far as they are sufficiently counterpoised by high merits on the part of Israel (for instance their acceptance of the Tora on mount Sinai, without which acceptance the whole world could not have subsisted). Of this impotence of the accusations the burning 'of the writing tables of Satan' is a metaphor.

The Seraphim are here represented as frustrating the plottings of the accusing angels. In P. R. 'El. on the contrary, SAMMAEL, the Chayyoth and the Seraphim in unity desire man's fall and plan to bring it about.

sitting upon the Throne of Judgement, judging the whole world in truth. The interest begins to turn to the Judgement. Similarly, in the independent angelological exposition contained in ch. xviii, the functions of the last enumerated angels centre round the different aspects of the Divine Judgement. The Throne of Glory seems to the visionary as he directs his gaze higher, to reveal itself as the Throne of Judgement. For the expression 'judging in truth' cf. ch. xxxi. 1.

Ch. xxvii. Ch. xxvii, although belonging to the same angelological section as the preceding chapters, leaves the subject of the angels of the Merkaba and the princes appointed over them and approaches the subject of the Judgement, already alluded to by the last verse of the foregoing chapter. It treats of RADWERIEL, the heavenly registrar, the keeper of the Case of Writings, of which the most important is 'the Book of Records'. On 'the Book of Records' the Judgement is to be based.

(1) Radweriel H'. The name is, so far as is known to the present writer, an ἀπαξ-λεγόμενον. So is also the reading of E: 'Daryoel'. But it seems very probable that princes, wondrous more than all the servants. His name is RADWERIEL² H' who is appointed over the treasures of the books.

(2) He fetches forth the Case³ of Writings (with) the Book of Records in it, and brings it before the Holy One, blessed be He.⁴ And he breaks the seals of the case⁴³,⁶ opens it,⁵ takes out⁵ the books and delivers them before the Holy One, blessed be He⁶. And the Holy One, blessed be He, receives them of his hand and gives them in his sight to the Scribes, that they may read them⁷ in the Great *Beth Din*⁷ in the height of 'Araboth Raqia', before the heavenly household.

2 E: 'Dāryō'el' D marks, through vowel points, the pronunciation 'Radweriel', which is adopted above. 3-3 E om. 4-4 D om. 5-5 so E. A corr.: 'gives' 6-6 D om. 7-7 so DE. A (seemingly): 'before the Holy One, blessed be He, the Great One' there exists a connection as well with regard to name as function between RADWERIEL here and the 'VRETIL' of 2 En. xxii. 11, 12 (and xxiii): "And the Lord called one of his archangels, by name Vretil, who was more wise than the other archangels and wrote down all the doings of the Lord. And the Lord said to Vretil, 'Bring forth the books from my store-places, and give a reed to Enoch and interpret to him the books' etc."

The affinities between this and the features represented in the present chapter are obvious. 2 En.: VRETIL, an archangel, more wise than the other archangels—here: RADWERIEL, above the Seraphim, the highest of the Merkaba-angels, exalted above all the Princes etc.; 2 En.: VRETIL brings forth the books from God's store-places—here: RADWERIEL is appointed over the treasures of the books and fetches forth the 'Case of Writings with the Book of Records'.

The derivation of the words 'RADWERIEL' or 'VRETIL' is uncertain: from the Greek εὐπρεπής (thus signifying 'fluent speech, fluent reading'?). Cf. vs. 3. He may originally have had the function, here assigned to the scribes, of 'reading the books before the Great Beth Din in heaven'.

(2) Case of Writings. The Hebrew word, here translated 'Case', is used in this sense in TB. Soṭa, 22 d, Meg. 26 b et al., also Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter Qoph.

Book of Records (or 'of remembrance'). On the three main lines of conceptions of the 'books' at the Judgement cf. note on ch. xviii. 24. The 'book of records' evidently is conceived of as recording all the deeds of the inhabitants of the world relevant to the issues at the Judgement. The Book of Records is the basis of the Judgement also acc. to the liturgical prayer 'וַיִּתְּנָה תְּקֵף' ("and thou wilt remember all that is forgotten, and wilt open the Book of Records").

takes out the books. The plural might either refer to other books besides and inclusive of the Book of Records or be due to a confusion between two traditions, one knowing one 'Book' only, the other speaking of 'the books'. The second tradition is represented, e.g. in 4 Ez. vi. 20, Ap. Bar. xxiv. 1, Rev. xx. 12, not to mention Dan. vii. 10.

gives them... to the scribes, that they may read them. A similar situation, with the same expressions, is pictured in the Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter Qoph, only with the difference that it there takes place at the court of the Pharaoh. The illustrative features are borrowed from the writer's ideas of the proceedings at a royal court.

The Great Beth Din or Sanhedrin or Court of Justice. Cf. chh. xxviii. 9 and xxx. 1. The Sanhedrin on earth had its counterpart in heaven, the Beth Din Shel-ma'ala under the presidency of the Most High himself. The members of the Beth Din on high were the highest angels, according to ch. xxx evidently the seventy-two princes of kingdoms together with the Prince of the World, acc. to ch. xxviii. 9,

(3) And why is he called RADWERIEL⁸? Because out of every word that goes forth from his mouth an angel is created: and he stands in the songs (in the singing company) of the ministering angels and utters⁹ a song before¹⁰ the Holy One, blessed be He¹⁰ when the time draws nigh for the recitation of the (Thrice) Holy.

8 E: 'Dāryō'el'

10-10 E: 'him'

presumably, the 'Irin and Qaddishin (cf. notes, ad loca). See also Hek. R. v. 3, BH. iii. 87.

Concerning the conception of 'Scribes' cf. on ch. xxxiii. 2. Acc. to some passages, there is only one 'Scribe' as such: e.g. ch. xxxiii. 2 (in the reading of E) and Hek. R. v. 1. Acc. to chh. xviii. 23-25 and xxxiii. 2 (in the adopted reading) the Scribes are two in number. They record the deeds of the inhabitants of the world in the 'books', and also write down the divine decrees (Hek. R. v. 1). Here they are even more represented as reading what is written in the books before the Beth Din (cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter Qoph, referred to above). The last function was perhaps, as already suggested, originally assigned to VRETIL-RADWERIEL: in 2 En. xxii. 12, VRETIL is asked to "interpret to him (Enoch) the books".

(2) Why is he called Radweriel? Because out of every word that goes forth from his mouth an angel is created. This explanation of the name presupposes the form 'DIBBURIEL' or 'DABARIEL'. The form 'DABAR YAH' is found in a MS. acc. to Schwab, VA. The derivation is perhaps a mere construction on the part of the writer. Exchanging 'W' for 'B' he reads 'Ra-Dabariel' or 'Radibburiel', regarding the 'Ra' as an epenthesis.

The ascribing to an angel-prince of the faculty of creating an angel by the 'word of his mouth' is rather singular. Such a statement is otherwise made of God, e.g. ch. xl. 4, Chag. 14 a, Gen. R. Par. lxxviii, Lam. R. on iii. 23. It would seem that the present passage could be made to refer to 'RADWERIEL' only on the assumption that it is one of the different names of the Godhead, and not the name of an angel. The whole of vs. 3 might have been adduced from a treatise on the Divine Names. The instances where the same name at one time or in one writing is represented as the name of an angel, and in another as one of the names of the Godhead, are frequent in the cabbalistic literature. Cf. the case of 'TAG'AS', note on ch. xviii. 5; the 'Pardes' (quoted YR. i. 90 a) discusses the 'Akatriel' of Ber. 7 a, rejecting the view that it is the name of the Most High, and maintains that 'Akatriel' is "a Prince on high".

he stands etc. The 'he' probably refers to the created angel. in the songs. The Hebrew here might be translated 'in the service' instead of 'in the songs, i.e. in the singing company' of the ministering angels. But the latter is presumably the correct interpretation. The exact meaning is: 'he stands and sings the songs (shiroth as a technical term) which the ministering angels sing'. Cf. Gen. R. lxxviii: "God creates every day a new order of angels who utter a song, etc." See note on ch. xl. 4. On RADWERIEL vide Introd. sect. 13 A (6).

CHAPTER XXVIII

The 'Irin and Qaddishin

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Above all these there are four great princes, 'Irin and Qaddishin by name: high, honoured, revered, beloved, wonderful and glorious ones, greater than all the children of heaven. There is none like unto them among all the celestial princes and none their equal among all the Servants. For each one of them is equal to all the rest together.

Ch. xxviii. (1) 'Irin and Qaddishin, i.e. the Watchers and the Holy Ones.

The 'Irin and the Qaddishin are acc. to the present angelological system at the summit of the hierarchy of angels. They form the council of the Most High (vs. 4), have executive power over the terrestrials (vs. 6) and, acc. to the latter part of the chapter, they assist at the forensic as well as retributive judgement, being both 'court-officers' and executors of the Divine decrees.

The 'Irin are mentioned in 1 En. (as 'Watchers'), alone or together with the Qaddishin (= 'Holy Ones') in chh. vi-xvi, xix, lxxxvi et al. In 2 En. they appear as the 'Grigori', ib. xviii.

The expression 'Holy Ones' occurs frequently in 1 En. (chh. ix. 3, xii. 2, xiv. 23, xxxix. 5, xlvii. 2, lvii. 2, lx. 4, lxi. 8, 10, 12, lxv. 12, lxix. 13, lxxi. 8, lxxx. 5, cvi. 19. Vide CHARLES, 1 En. Index II, "Angels, the holy ones"). In ch. ix. 3 it refers to the four archangels or 'Presences', in ch. lxxx. 5 to the seven archangels, in ch. xlvii. 2 possibly to the Chayyoth, in chh. xxxix. 5, lx. 4, lxi. 8, lxv. 12 to the angels or 'children of heaven' in general, the distinction from other classes of angels or as a definite class being uncertain, as is the case also with chh. lvii. 2 and lxxi. 8. Of special interest here are ch. xii. 2 ("watchers and the holy ones"), ch. xiv. 23 ("the most holy ones who were nigh to him did not leave by night [= watchers] nor depart from him"). These passages indicate a conception of the 'Irin and Qaddishin as a special class of angels, intimately connected with each other, and hence show affinity with the presentations of our chapter. Cf. also ch. lxix. 13.

As regards the 'Watchers' we meet with two different traditions in 1 En. One, the more prominent, is embodied in chh. vi-xvi, xix, lxxxvi, represents the watchers as fallen angels, identifying them with "the sons of God" (Gen. vi). The other view agrees with that of the present chapter in placing the Watchers near the Divine Presence and is represented in chh. xii. 2, xiv. 23, lxi. 12 ("those who sleep not above in heaven" = 'the Watchers') and, possibly, ch. cvi. 19. (Cf. however, CHARLES's distinction in Pseudepigrapha (A and P. II), p. 188, note 5.)

Notice the expression, 1 En. xx. 1: "the holy angels who watch", with reference to the seven archangels.

The names and conception are, of course, deduced from Dan. iv. 14 (10). See vss. 4, 8 and 9 here. The present interpretation of the said passage in Daniel is, however, by no means the general one. Cf. the commentaries.

so that the brilliance of their dwelling is a reflection of the brilliance of the Throne of Glory¹. And the splendour of their countenance is ³a reflection of³ the splendour of Shekina.

(4) And not only that, but the Holy One, blessed be He, does nothing in his world without first consulting them, but after that he doeth it. As it is written (Dan. iv. 17): "The sentence is by the decree of the 'Irin and the demand by the word of the Qaddishin."

(5) The 'Irin are two and the Qaddishin are two. And how are they standing before the Holy One, blessed be He? ⁵It is to be understood, that one 'Ir is standing on one side and the other 'Ir on the other side, and one Qaddish is standing on one side and the other on the other side.

1-1 E om. 3-3 so DE. A: 'like unto, similar to' 5 here the parallel of D breaks off.

4-4 E: 'Shekina'

Holy One... the brilliance of their dwelling is a reflection of... the Throne etc. This is best paralleled by what is said with regard to Metatron, chh. vii, x. 1 seq., xlviii c 4, 5, 7. These expressions will presumably convey the exclusive position of the 'Irin and Qaddishin. They are depicted as having their abode at the very top of the hierarchical structure: face to face with the Throne of Glory and the Shekina. For 'the splendour of Shekina' see note on ch. v. 4. Ch. xxii. 7 and 13, the splendour of Shekina is said to be on the face of KERUBI'EL, resp. the Kerubim. But there the splendour of Shekina is received from above; 'the Shekina is resting upon them', ib. 13.

(3) they are glorified by the glory of the Divine Majesty and praised by the praise of Shekina. The glorification and praise directed towards the Shekina are reflected also on the 'Irin and the Qaddishin, owing to their near association with the Godhead.

(4) the Holy One, blessed be He, does nothing... without first consulting them. Cf. TB. Sanh. 38 b: "the Holy One, blessed be He, doeth nothing without consulting the heavenly household, as it is written (Dan. iv. 17): 'The sentence is by the decree of the watchers etc.'" What in Talmud is applied to the angels in general ('the heavenly household') is here referred to the definite class of angels called 'Irin and Qaddishin. The idea of God consulting the angels is common in Rabbinic: "when God wished to create the first Adam, he took counsel with the ministering angels" (e.g. Gen. R. viii. 4). The important feature here is that the function of Divine counsellors is limited to a specified class of angels; and this is evidently due to the attempt to systematize, characteristic to the present section. Of necessity the advising function could be ascribed to none but the highest class of angelic beings.

(5) The 'Irin are two and the Qaddishin are two. The 'Irin and Qaddishin are acc. to this verse only four in number. In vs. 9 they must be conceived of as being a larger number. The 'Holy Ones', 1 En. ix. 3, are four, being identified with 'the four Presences, MIKAEL, URIEL, RAPHAEL and GABRIEL'. Otherwise the "Watchers (and Holy Ones)" of 1 En. are numerous: acc. to ch. vi. 6 they are 200. There might possibly be some connection between the passage 1 En. ix. 3 and the present vs. (traces of the same tradition?). Cf. note on ch. xxviii. 9.

(6) And ever do they exalt ⁶the humble⁶, and they abase to the ground those that are proud, and they exalt to the height those that are humble.

(7) And every day, as the Holy One, blessed be He, is sitting upon the Throne of Judgement and judges the whole world, and the Books of the Living and the Books of the Dead are opened before Him,

6-6 A om.

(6) And ever do they exalt the humble. A seems to read: 'And they make high the world'. abase...those that are proud and...exalt...those that are humble. This idea is deduced from Dan. iv. 17: "the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men", which follows after the words cited in support of the conception of the 'Irin and Qaddishin. What there is said with reference to God has been transferred to the 'Irin and Qaddishin, the counsellors and executors of the Divine decrees. Cf. ch. xlviii c 9.

CHH. XXVIII. 7-XXXIII. 2.

The Divine Judgement and the Heavenly Tribunal.

With vss. 7-10 of the present chapter (xxviii) a certain change in character is noticeable. The main difference is that the systematic exposition of the foregoing part, with its specific manner of expression seems to be ended. The theme which already from ch. xxvi. 12 has begun to verge into the conceptions of the Judgement is henceforth (till ch. xxxiii. 3) altogether absorbed in the different aspects of the Divine Judgement, the heavenly assize and the execution of the Divine decrees. But, in contrast to the preceding angelological section, this section reveals no clear progressive structure in the treatment of its subject, but leaves rather the impression of a complex of culled fragments from the different traditions of the proceedings at the Divine Court of Justice.

A divergence in the present vss. of ch. xxviii from the preceding has already been referred to: the 'Irin and Qaddishin are in vs. 5 said to be four in number, vs. 9 presupposes a considerably larger number. Chh. xxix and xxx furthermore maintain the identity of the 'Irin and Qaddishin with the seventy-two princes of kingdoms. (Acc. to the angelological section the 72 princes of kingdoms probably occupy a comparatively low place in the angelic hierarchy, see note on ch. xvii. 8.)

For divergences within the section notice e.g. (1) ch. xxviii. 7, the books on which the judgement is to be based are 'the Books of the Living and the Books of the Dead'; ch. xxx. 2 speaks only of 'the book in which all the doings of the world are recorded'; and ch. xxxii. 1 of 'the book': (2) chh. xxxi. 1 and xxxiii. 1, two different representations of the same idea: the relation between the agencies of Justice and Mercy at the Judgement (esp. from the point of view of mediation between them). For the different conceptions of the Judgement cf. also the Introduction, sect. 16.

(7) every day as the Holy one...is sitting upon the Throne of Judgement, i.e. every day, at the time when. The judgement here is daily. Cf. the dictum of R. Yose, Tosefta Rosh ha Shana, i, "man is judged every day". It is both forensic and retributive. The cases (vss. 8, 9) refer to the continual happenings in the daily life of man (and the world in general), and the decrees are executed immediately.

the Books of the Living and the Books of the Dead. Cf. ch. xviii. 23 seq. In view of the character of the Judgement as daily, the Books of the Dead are here probably of the same significance as in ch. xviii. 24; they record the time destined for every man's death. The Books of the Living may be the records of the time destined for a man's entering life on earth, but are perhaps also conceived of as then all the children of heaven are standing before him in fear, dread, awe and trembling. At that time, (when) the Holy One, blessed be He, is sitting ⁷ upon the Throne of Judgement⁸ ⁹to execute judgement⁹, his garment is white as snow, the hair on his head as pure wool ¹⁰and the whole of his cloak¹⁰ is like the shining light. And he is covered with righteousness all over as with a coat of mail.

(8) And those 'Irin and Qaddishin are standing before him like court officers before the judge. And they raise and argue every case and close the case that comes before the Holy One, blessed be He, in judgement, according as it is written (Dan. iv. 17): "The sentence is by the decree of the 'Irin and the demand by the word of the Qaddishin."

(9) Some of them argue and others pass the sentence in the Great Beth Din in 'Araboth. Some of them make the requests from before ¹¹the Divine Majesty¹¹ and some close the cases before the Most High. Others ¹²finish by going down¹² and (confirming =) executing the sentences on earth below. ¹³According as it is written¹³ (Dan.

recording the deeds (merits and transgressions) of the living (= the Book of Records, chh. xxx. 2, xxvii. 2).

Throne of Judgement... garment is white as snow etc. This is deduced from Dan. vii. 9. The Throne of Judgement as a conception plays a prominent part in 1 En. xc. 20, xlv. 3, lv. 4, lxi. 8, lxix. 27 (only in the first of these instances, however, called "the Throne of Judgement", in the others "the Throne of Glory"), also 4 Ez. vii. 33 ("And the Most High shall be revealed upon the throne of judgement"). See BOX, Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 118.

(8) And those 'Irin and Qaddishin are standing before him like court officers before the judge. Acc. to Mass. Hek. "seven court-officers are sitting on seven thrones" before the Holy One. A quotation, YR. i. 7 a, from the writings of Eleazar of Worms treats of the "seven court officers (shoferim) in heaven by whose demand every decree is executed, whether for good or for evil, abundance or privation, war or peace".

they raise and argue... and close the case. The cases include all different issues arising from the course of the daily life of the inhabitants on earth. Acc. to Ex. R. xxxi, angels act as defensors and accusers of man at the judgement: "when a man has committed a transgression and stands before God to receive judgement, then some angels plead in his defence, others accuse him guilty".

(9) Some of them argue and others pass the sentence... some of them make the requests... some close the cases... others finish by... executing the sentences. Cf. Sa'adya's commentary on Dan. iv. 17: "The 'Irin are the Holy Angels of anger and fury who pass the sentence". (Notice, by the way, how Sa'adya represents the angels in question as one class only, called 'Irin, regarding the 'Qaddishin = Holy Ones' as an attribute—further, how he identifies them with "the angels of anger and fury" usually but another name for the 'angels of destruction', cf. note on ch. xxxi. 2.) Cf. also Hilkoth Mal'akim, Add. 27199, fol. 124 a: "the angel who passes the sentence and who issues the demands is called 'Ir and Qaddish".

It is evident from the way in which the various functions are depicted as divided iv. 13, 14): "Behold an 'Irin and a Qaddish came down from heaven and cried aloud and said thus, Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches, shake off ¹⁴his leaves¹⁴, and scatter his fruit: ¹⁵let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from his branches¹⁵".

(10) Why are they called 'Irin and Qaddishin? By reason that they sanctify the body and the spirit with lashes of fire on the third day of the judgement, as it is written (Hos. vi. 2): "After two days will he revive us: on the third he will raise us up, and we shall live before him."

14-14 A lacuna.

between the 'Irin and Qaddishin, that they are in this verse regarded as comprising a comparatively large number. One might, with some certainty, venture the conjecture that the underlying idea here is the representation of the 'Irin and the Qaddishin as the Heavenly Beth Din. The 'Irin and Qaddishin would then be conceived of as 70 or 72. This is confirmed by the confusion in the two chapters following next, between these angels and the 72 princes of kingdoms who acc. to ch. xxx constitute the heavenly Beth Din. Also, in Zohar, e.g. ii. 6 a, the 'Irin and Qaddishin of Dan. iv. 14 are explicitly interpreted as "the 72 members of Sanhedrin who consider the judgements of the world".

That the 'Irin and Qaddishin in 1 En., according to the prevalent representation there, are counted as a large number (e.g. ch. vi. 6: 200) is already recalled above. On the other hand, in later cabbalistic writings, they are likewise often pictured as a numerous class of angels, e.g. YR. i. 162 b (quotation from Sōdē Rāsā), they are referred to with the formula "the troops of 'Irin and Qaddishin".

(10) they sanctify the body and the spirit with lashes of fire. The expression 'the body and the spirit' may be taken in two different senses, viz. as referring either to the angels in question (the 'Irin and Qaddishin) or to the body and spirit of a man who has undergone judgement; the judgement of man, referred to here, would in this case be the so-called Din ha-qQéber, the judgement on man immediately after his death. The interpretation of the present sentence in the sense of 'sanctify the body and spirit of the judged man' is probably the correct one, esp. in view of the difficulty, that otherwise arises, of explaining the meaning of the words immediately following: 'on the third day of judgement'. 'The third day' cannot very well be meant 'absolutē', since the judgement here is daily and continual. But with the assumed interpretation it will naturally take on the meaning 'the third of the three days that man is judged', the third day being also the final one, on which the sentence passed on man is consummated through his purification in fire ('by lashes of fire'). Cf. ch. xlv.

The result thus arrived at accords with Masséket Chibbut ha-qQeber, BH. i. 151: "The ministering angels (corresponding to the 'Irin and Qaddishin of the present verse) receive man, after his death, from the hands of the angel of death; they judge him on the first two days on account of his character as developed during his life, through his observance or neglect of the statutes of Tora; on the third day they judge him, spirit, soul and body, by strokes with lashes of fire". This is a description of the Din ha-qQéber, referred to above.

The bath of sanctification or purification in fire is depicted as forming the conclusion of judgement also with regard to the ministering angels, in Revelation of Moses (tr. Gaster, rec. B. in Royal Asiatic Society's Journal, 1893): "the Almighty sits and judges the ministering angels, and after the judgement they bathe in that river of fire and are renewed". Cf. ch. xxxvi.

It is true that in other connections the Qaddishin are represented as 'sanctifying

CHAPTER XXIX

Description of a class of angels

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Each one of them ^(angel) has seventy names corresponding to the seventy tongues ¹of the world¹. And all of them are (based) upon themselves in fire'. Thus in Shemoth shel Metatron, Bodl. MICH. 256, fol. 40 b, we read: "Metatron admonishes the angels every third day to bathe and purify themselves in the fiery river (Nehar di-Nur)".

Ch. xxix. Ch. xxix contains a short description of angels, the names or class of which are not defined in the chapter. As the context now stands, the description is, by the opening words 'each one of them', made to refer to the 'Irin and Qaddishin of the foregoing chapter. On the other hand, the following chapter, xxx, in defining 'the great princes who are called H' by the name of the Holy One' as the 72 Princes of Kingdoms, seems to have in view no others than the angels of the present chapter, of which it is stated here that their names are 'based upon the Name of the Holy One'.

Thus, in the present arrangement of the context, the 'Irin and Qaddishin are, by inference, identical with the Princes of Kingdoms. The identification is justifiable, since the functions of both categories, as represented in chh. xxviii. 7-xxx, are practically congruent: they are both depicted as constituting the Celestial Beth Din, the Divine Council or Court of Justice.

It is scarcely probable, however, that ch. xxix is the original continuation of ch. xxviii. 7-10. It gives the impression of being a fragment from an angelological description from some other source. When considered by itself, it can best be understood as treating of the Princes of Kingdoms, for the reason that the expression 'seventy names corresponding to the seventy tongues of the world' naturally—and usually—connects the angels or angel of which it is used, with the conception of the seventy nations and their representative body in the heavens.

Still it seems to be a necessary conclusion that to the Redactor, responsible for the present arrangement of chh. xxviii-xxx seqq., the identity of the 'Irin and Qaddishin with the Princes of Kingdoms, did not, at least, present any difficulty. Some tradition to this effect might have obtained. As a trace of such a tradition, although from a late source, may perhaps be regarded the passage on the Princes of Kingdoms in Menahem Reqanati's Commentary on the Pentateuch, Gen. x. 5 (E^f): "70 princes are set over the 70 nations. . . they are the 70 princes who surround the Throne of Glory and they are the same that are called in the Song of Solomon (Cant. iii. 3) 'the Watchmen (Shōmērim) that go about the city', for by their hands the decrees from on high are issued (cf. ch. xxviii. 8 seq.)."

Convergences between the conceptions of the Watchers and of the Representatives of the Nations (the Princes of Kingdoms) may have occurred at an early period, although then perchance in another aspect. The Watchers (1 En.) as well as the Princes of Kingdoms, acc. to a different trend of traditions, were regarded as evil agencies in the world (cf. 1 En. lxxxix. 59-65 and note on ch. xxviii. 1). The Watchers become the leaders of corrupt mankind on earth and the Princes of Kingdoms are the rulers of the Gentile nations: occasionally the leader of the Watchers is mentioned as SATANIEL or SAMMAEL, and the Princes of Kingdoms, as evil agencies, are later regularly represented as headed by SAMMAEL. Cf. on this TB. Sota, 9 a, Sha'are 'Örā, 65 a, 'Emeq ha-mMelek, 121 b et al.

3 E: 'Understanding (Binā)'

(1) seventy names corresponding to the seventy tongues... (based) upon the name of the Holy One. Exactly the same is said with regard to Metatron, chh. iii. 1 and xlviii c 9. [The expression 'seventy names corresponding to the seventy tongues' is a formula, conveying the connection of the angels in question with the seventy nations.] So ch. xlviii c 9 the ascribing to Metatron of seventy names is clearly connected with his character of chief of the seventy princes of the seventy nations. The phrase 'based upon the Name of the Most High' with regard to a name, means that it contains the elements of the Tetragrammaton. Cf. note on ch. x. 3 and the angelic names ch. xviii. 9-24. written with a flaming style. Cf. chh. xiii. 1, xxxix. 1, xli. 4. upon the Fearful Crown... on the head of the... King. The Fearful Crown 'Kéther Nōrā' is the technical term for the crown on the head of the Most High as seated on the Throne of Glory. In magical writings the 'Fearful Crown' plays a prominent role, being, together with 'the Great Seal', the most effectual of magical formulas. Cf. Hek. Zot. (Bodl. MICH. 9, fol. 66 a): "the Fearful Crown... (follow some mystical letters)... this is the crown with which one conjures all the Princes of Wisdom". Cf. also Mass. Hek. vii: "the crown on the forehead of the Holy One, blessed be He, on which the Explicit Name is graven".

(2) And from each one of them there go forth sparks and lightnings etc. This verse repeats the phraseology of the angelological section. For 'horns of splendour' cf. ch. xxii. 6. For 'tents of brilliance', ch. xxv. 6. "not even the Seraphim and the Chayyoth etc." cf. ch. xxvi. 11. Does the present fragment know only the Seraphim and the Chayyoth as Merkaba-angels? Or does it regard the Seraphim and the Chayyōth as the two highest classes of superior angels by the Merkaba? (Cf. Zohar, ii. 252 b. תחות היא חיותא ארבעה שרפין... מאלין ארבע כד נטלי נפקי שביבין דאשא ומאלין שביבין אתעבירו שבעין ותרין גלגלין מלהמן באשא)

CHAPTER XXX

The 72 princes of Kingdoms and the Prince of the World officiating at the Great Sanhedrin in heaven

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Whenever the Great Beth Din is seated in the 'Araboth Raqia' on high ¹there is no opening of the mouth for anyone in the world save ¹those great princes who are called H' by the name of the Holy One, blessed be He.

1-1 E om. corr.

Ch. xxx. Another representation of the daily judgement in the Celestial Beth Din. The function of court-officers (ch. xxviii. 8) is here attributed to the Princes of Kingdoms with their leader, the Prince of the World. In contrast with ch. xxviii. 8, 9, this function is here seen exclusively from the aspect of defence or plea in favour of the world (vs. 2). The accusing part is hereby implicitly reserved for the Most High himself.

(1) Whenever (lit. every fixed time that) the Great Beth Din is seated. Every day, at a fixed time, the Great Sanhedrin assembles in the highest of the heavens, the 'Araboth', under the presidency of the Holy One. This is explicit from vs. 2: 'every day at the hour that', and 'pleads... before the Holy One, blessed be He'. The sittings of the Beth Din are here for judgement, although the judgement may include all the various decisions with regard to the affairs of the world. But the Celestial Beth Din has even a wider scope. So, e.g. in Gen. R. xlix. 6, it is said that God introduces new Halakas daily in His Celestial Beth Din. For the Beth Din Shelma'ala as giving daily decisions with regard to the happenings of the world cf. Hek. R. i-iii seqq.

there is no opening of the mouth for anyone in the world etc. For the expression in this sense cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 57. Cf. also the phrase 'opening of the mouth for the Minim (heretics, Christians)' = scriptural points of support for heretical beliefs. Here it apparently means that no one is allowed to speak either as accuser or defender except the Great Princes called H'.

great princes... called H' by the name of the Holy One. Ch. x. 3 speaks of '8 great princes called H' by the name of their King', to whom also is assigned an exceptional status. Cf. note, ib., and Hek. R. xxi. 'called H'' etc. In most cases simply means that the Tetragrammaton forms the latter part of the name. It seems to have been a general assumption, that the highest circle of angels were marked out from the other angels by the common distinction of the Tetragrammaton as part of their name, whereby their names were 'based upon the Name of the Holy One'. But the traditions are at variance as to the further character, number and function of these highest angels. Thus, in the present book, ch. x. 3 (already referred to), 'the 8 Great Princes, called H' etc.' occupy so high a position as to be above the jurisdiction of Metatron (the Lesser ימחנן), which includes all the other angels and princes; in the angelological classification of ch. xviii each one of the sixteen highest princes have the 'H'' at the end of their names; in the angelological section, chh. xix-xxii, xxv-xxvii (xxviii), the six princes there named have likewise all the Tetragrammaton as part of their names. (It is in fact altogether in harmony with that angelological section, when ch. xxix, the 'Irin and Qaddishin, the highest of the princes acc. to ch. xxvii. 1-6, are in ch. xxix represented, or made to be represented, as having their names 'based upon the name of the Holy One'. Acc. to Hek. R. xxii. 1, the highest angels who are there the door-keepers of the Seventh Hall and seven in number, have all names of the form X-H'; in the preceding chapter of Hek. R. one meets with the statement that the awe-inspiring power of these guardians of the seventh Hall and of their names lies just in the fact that "each one of them, his name is called (based) upon the name of the King of the Universe".

(2) How many are those princes? Seventy-two princes of the kingdoms of the world besides the Prince of the World who speaks (pleads) in favour of the world before the Holy One, blessed be He,

In the present chapter again, the Princes H' are defined as the

(2) Seventy-two princes of the kingdoms, and this evidently because, acc. to the view contended here, the seventy-two princes of kingdoms, inclusive of the Prince of the world, form the highest angelic order in their capacity of constituting the Celestial Beth Din.

For the different conceptions of the Princes of Kingdoms, cf. note on ch. xvii. 8. Here they are decidedly conceived of as the REPRESENTATIVES OF THE NATIONS OF THE WORLD. The conception of representatives in heaven of the various kingdoms on earth is a well-known, early idea attested in the O.T., Dan. x. 20, 21; it occurs in Sir. xvii. 17 ("for every nation He appointed a ruler. But Israel is the Lord's part"). Since the nations were counted as seventy, the number of these representatives was at first usually given as seventy (cf. ch. xlviii c 9); so in 1 En. lxxxix. 59 (seventy shepherds). Apposite for the resemblance to vs. 2 of the present chapter is Targ. Yer. to Gen. xi. 7, 8 ("every nation has its own guardian angel who pleads the cause of the nation under his protection"). In Talmud the conception occurs, e.g. TB. Yoma, 77 a (MIKHAEL, the prince of Israel, DUBBIEL, the prince of Persia etc.), Sukka, 29 a (the Gods of the nations suffer punishment with them). Cf. further Gen. R. lxviii, lxxvii, Ex. R. xxi, Lev. R. xxix, Pesikta R. xxiii, xxvii, P. R. 'El. xxiv. Notice, how in Mass. Hek. the conception of seventy princes is replaced by that of "70 thrones of the Holy One, blessed be He, corresponding to the nations of the world".

For discussion of the origin of the number 72 as ascribed to these princes, see note on ch. xvii. 8. In the present connection—the seventy-two princes of kingdoms constituting the Great Sanhedrin of heaven—one is reminded of the fact that the Great Sanhedrin proper, of which the Beth Din shelma'ala is a counterpart, is in a few Mishna passages represented as consisting of seventy-two members: M. Zebachim, i. 3, Yad. iii. 5, iv. 2.

For the princes of kingdoms as the Celestial Beth Din cf. also Bachya's Commentary on the Pentateuch, Par. Beha'aloteka (162 b): "The Holy One, blessed be He, said to the 70 angels who surround the Throne of Glory... and they are the Beth Din of the Holy One". Cf. Zohar, i. 173 b, and Mass. Hek. v. 70, thrones always surrounding the Shekina. The 'thrones' in Zohar are angelic beings when termed כְּרִסְיוֹן, and similarly their 'thrones' are termed קְהָלֵי־רִצְוִי.

the Prince of the World who speaks in favour of the world. The Prince of the World is here, then, the leader of the princes of kingdoms. He combines the functions of the rulers of the nations: they plead each one the cause of his nation, the Prince of the World pleads the cause of all the nations together, of the world in its entirety. There is no reference here to any contrast between the Gentile Nations, the idolaters, and Israel. On the contrary, the representation is strikingly universal in its character. The Accuser is God himself, whereas acc. to other views, the Prince of Israel and the princes of the nations, especially the prince of Rome (or of Persia) are represented as accusing each other before the Most High. Cf. the Introduction.

For the conception of the nations (or their representatives) appearing before God in judgement or pleading before God, cf. inter alia 4 Ezra vii. 37, and the reference in BOX, Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 124, note ad loc., to the passage in TB. 'Aboda Zara, 2 a b = every day, at the hour when the book is opened in which are recorded all the doings of the world, according as it is written (Dan. vii. 10): "The judgement was set and the books were opened."

CHAPTER XXXI

(The attributes of) Justice, Mercy and Truth by the Throne of Judgement

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) At the time when the Holy One, blessed be He, is sitting on the Throne of Judgement, (then) Justice is standing on His right and Mercy on His left and Truth¹ before His face.

"the nations appear before God in the future age to receive their reward. They are summoned up singly, are asked what they have done in the world, and each is condemned (Rome, Persia and other nations)".

On the Prince of the World see note on ch. xxxviii. 2, and cf. notes on chh. iii. 2, ix. 2-3, x. 3, xlviii c 9. In the Enoch-Metatron pieces, chh. iii-xv and xlviii c, Metatron occupies the same position as the Prince of the World here, i.e. leader of the princes of kingdoms and, notably, Metatron and the Prince of the World are acc. to one trend of traditions, identical. Here, in so far as Metatron is represented as the speaker, this is not the case.

at the hour when the book is opened etc. This is the same view of the book, forming the base of the judgement, that we meet with in ch. xxvii. 2, 'the Book of Records'. Cf. note, ib. The 'records' are here perhaps conceived of more from the point of view of the nations or the world at large than of the individual.

Ch. xxxi. Another short, independent, piece on the Judgement, characterized by the representation of the hypostasized attributes of Justice, Mercy and Truth as agencies at the Divine Judgement.

Justice and Mercy as attributes of God is a subject of speculation from the earlier periods: "Palestinian as well as Alexandrian theology recognized the two attributes of God, 'middath ha din' and 'middath ha rahamim'" (Sifre Deut. 27, Philo, De Opific. Mundi, 60) and the contrast between justice and mercy is a fundamental doctrine of the Cabala" (JE, article 'Justice'). Among the Tannaites the doctrine of Justice and Mercy as the two main attributes of God was connected particularly with the name of R. Meir. Cf. Bacher, Agada der Tannaiten, vol. ii. p. 60, and TB. Ber. 48 b, Gen. R. xxvi, Ab. R. Natan, xxxii, R. 'Aqiba, TB. Sanh. 67 b.

(1) At the time (or: in the hour) when the Holy One... is sitting on the Throne of Judgement. Although not clearly indicated, the judgement is probably here, as in the preceding chapters, the daily judgement, for which is appointed a fixed time, cf. ch. xxx. 2 and note.

Justice is standing on His right hand, Mercy on His left and Truth before His face. Since Mercy in vs. 2 is represented as supporting man, Justice probably stands for the accusing function at the judgement. Justice and Mercy as agencies at the judgement or of attributes of God as Judge are perhaps indicated in the Talmudic dictum as to the two Thrones, one of Justice, the other of Mercy (Sedaqa), TB. Chag. 14 a, Sanh. 38 b (attributed to R. 'Aqiba from R. Jose the Galilean).

(2) And when man² enters before Him to judgement, ³(then) there comes forth from the splendour of the Mercy towards him as (it were) a staff³ and stands in front of him. Forthwith man falls upon his face, (and) all the angels of destruction fear and tremble ⁴before him⁴, according as it is written (Is. xvi. 5): "And with mercy shall the throne be established, and he shall sit upon it in truth."

2 E: 'a wicked man' 3-3 E prob. corr.: 'the Mercy goes out from judgement towards him' 4-4 E: 'on his right'

For the hypostasized attribute of Justice as accusing cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, 2nd rec., BH. iii. 50: "In that hour the attribute of Justice said before the Holy One, blessed be He, 'Lord of the Universe, even the righteous are designated for death (i.e. have sinned—according to Law no man shall be justified)'"

For a later representation of the roles of Justice and Mercy cf. Sha'are 'Ora, quoted YR. 7 b, vol iii: "The attribute of Justice gives to the supplicant... riches and all good things, but the attribute of Justice prevents (interrupts, annuls) the decision and says, Let us consider whether this supplicant is worthy that his supplication be granted him, and if not, let him be judged in the Great Sanhedrin etc." Notice the combination here of the two conceptions of Justice-Mercy and of the Great Sanhedrin.

The distinctive feature of the present chapter, vs. 1, is the introduction of the third attribute, the Truth, as mediating between Justice and Mercy. The combination of truth with judgement is deduced from or, rather, occurs already in the O.T. Reference is in vs. 2 explicitly made to Is. xvi. 5. Then in 4 Ezra, vii. 34 ("But judgement alone shall remain and truth shall stand"). For references to parallels in Rabbinic see BOX, Ez. Apoc. p. 122, note ad loc. Cf. further Alph. R. 'Aqiba, beg. ("The Holy One... is called Truth, and He sits on His Throne... in Truth... all his judgements are judgements of truth, and all his ways are Mercy and Truth"), and ch. xxvi. 12. The mediating character of the attribute of Truth is here symbolically indicated by the place assigned to it 'before the face of the Most High' between 'Justice' to the right and 'Mercy' to the left. Another expression of the mediation at the judgement is found, ch. xxxiii. 1 ("Angels of mercy, of peace, and of destruction").

The distinction involved in the expressions 'to the right', 'to the left', does not carry the extreme symbolical significance of certain gnostic systems and esp. the later Qabbala: there the accusing role is always assigned to the left side, the favour-pleading to the right. In the system of Ten Sefiróth Justice is on the left, Mercy on the right (contrast here).

(2) when man enters before Him to (receive) judgement, i.e. immediately after death, cf. note on ch. xxviii. 10. there comes forth from the splendour of the Mercy towards him as (it were) a staff and stands in front of him. This evidently means that the attribute of Mercy wields a protecting, supporting influence over man against forces working for the strict application of the principles of justice. And this influence is represented as prevailing over the latter, at least such seems to be the import of the words following: all the angels of destruction fear and tremble before him. The angels of destruction represent the execution of the decrees of justice (cf. ch. xxxii. 1), i.e. the punishment of man's sin. Here it appears that 'the staff' from the 'splendour of the Mercy' protects man from the rage of the angels of destruction.

For the conception of the angels of destruction cf. 1 En. liii. 3 ("I saw all the angels of punishment abiding and preparing all the instruments of Satan [for the sinners]"), lvi. 1, lxiii. 1 ("In those days shall the mighty and the kings... implore God to grant them a little respite from His angels of punishment"). 2 En. x. 3; Ap. Petri, 6, 8. TB. Shab. 55 a, presents an instance of the connection between the

CHAPTER XXXII

The execution of judgement on the wicked. God's sword

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) ¹When the Holy One, blessed be He, opens¹ the Book half of angels of destruction and the attribute of Justice (as accusing and desiring the strict enforcement of the Law): "God said to Gabriel (with reference to the situation, Ezek. ix. 4 seqq.), 'Go and write on the forehead of the righteous a mark of ink, that the angels of destruction may not get power over them, but on the forehead of the wicked a mark of blood, that the angels of destruction may have power over them'. Then said the attribute of Justice before the Holy One... '... In what respect are those better than these?'" Cf. ib. 152 b, 89 a; Yer. Shebu'oth, vi. 37 a; Rev. vii. 2, xii. 7; Test. Abr. xii, xiii; Gēdullath Moshe, section Gehinnom; Masseketh Gehinnom, BH. i. 142; Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 62. See also ch. xlv. 2 and note. In these instances they appear mainly in two aspects: one is that of executors of punishment and of the divine decrees in general in the world, the other that of officials of Gehenna appointed over the wicked (and intermediate).

On their number and names the different sources are at variance, from those speaking of two angels of destruction, usually called 'APH and CHĒMA (i.e. anger and fury), cf. SIMKIEL and ZA'APHIEL, ch. xlv. 2, to those counting them in thousands and myriads. Rev. of Moses (tr. Gaster, RAS's Journal, 1893, p. 589) represents the angel-prince QEMU'EL as the chieftain of 12,000 angels of destruction.

The 'man' who acc. to the present chapter, obtains the support of the attribute of Mercy is apparently man in general, the vast majority, perhaps those who elsewhere (e.g. ch. xlv) are referred to as the class of intermediate, 'bēnōniyyim'.

Instances of the attribute of Mercy pleading for man in opposition to the prosecuting activity of the attribute of Justice are numerous in later Qabbala. YR. i. 94 a, quotes from 'Asara Ma'amaroth the following passage: "The attribute of Mercy occupies itself with the merit of every creature... if a man commits a transgression, then the attribute of Justice comes to punish the man on account of the transgression but the attribute of Mercy says: 'Even if the man's hand has sinned, lo, yet his eye has not sinned... if thou wilt punish his body on account of the sin of the hand, lo, even the eye will suffer, and so it will be punished unjustly'", and continues the passage: "in this way the Mercy prevents tribulations and plagues from visiting the world (as punishments for the sins of mankind)".

Ch. xxxii. This chapter treats of the aspect of the judgement consisting in the execution of judgement on the wicked. The execution of the Divine decrees is referred to in ch. xxviii. 9, the executors there being the 'Irin and Qaddishin. The identity of the executors of judgement is in the present chapter not revealed. Regarded as immediate continuation of ch. xxxi. 1 of this chapter would imply that they are 'the angels of destruction'. That is, however, the natural conclusion presenting itself at a slight examination of the chapter, since the execution of judgement is here that on the wicked only, not of the Divine decrees in general. The plurality of angelic beings indicated by the words 'they go out from before Him in every moment' can in this connection scarcely be interpreted as any others than the angels of destruction, whose essential function is the punishment of the wicked.

(1) When the Holy One... opens the Book etc. One book as the basis of judgement here as chh. xxx and xxvii. 2 (i.e. the Book of Records). Cf. notes, ib.

which is fire and half flame, (then) they go out from before Him in every moment to execute the judgement on the wicked ²by His sword (that is) ²drawn forth out of its sheath and the splendour of which shines like a lightning and pervades the world from one end to the other, ³as it is written (Is. lxvi. 16): "For by fire will the Lord plead (and by his sword with all flesh)."

(2) And all the inhabitants of the world (lit. those who come into the world) fear and tremble before Him, when they behold His sharpened sword like unto a lightning from one end of the world to the other³, and sparks ⁴and flashes⁴ of the size of the stars of Raqia' going out from it; according as it is written (Deut. xxxii. 41): "If I whet⁵ the lightning of my sword".

they go out from before Him in every moment. 'They' is best understood as 'the angels of destruction'; cf. above and note on ch. xxxi. 2. For the angels of destruction as executing punishment on the wicked in the world, cf. Hek. R. v: "R. Ishmael said: 'What did the Beth Din on high do? In that hour they commanded the angels of destruction and they went down (to earth) and made a "consumption even determined" upon Caesar Lupinus". Further Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 50, 51 (with reference to the destruction of Jerusalem): "In that hour six angels of destruction were sent down on Jerusalem, and they destroyed the people in it... and these they were: 'Aph, Chema (cf. note, ch. xxxi. 2), Qeseph (= 'wrath'), Mashchith (= 'destroyer', Ex. xii. 23), Mashmid (also = 'destroyer'), Mekallé (= 'consumer')... And each one of them had a two-edged sword in his hand"; ib. BH. iii. 62 (in a context, treating of the idolaters of the world), "Forthwith 'Aph and Chema, two angels of destruction... drew their sword... in order to destroy the world". Cf. further the references adduced in the note on ch. xxxi. 2. The expression every moment prompts the conclusion that the execution of the punishment is one that takes place in this world continually (as well as through periods of great crises); this is confirmed by pointing to the parallel passages just referred to. We are even in this chapter concerned with the daily judgement. Against this conclusion does not speak what follows:

by His sword (that is) drawn forth out of its sheath. In the two passages from R. 'Aqiba cited above, the angels of destruction are represented as armed with swords. Here the sword by means of which the punishment is executed is 'the sword of God', a conception, acc. to the statements in the present chapter itself, deduced from Is. lxvi. 16 and Deut. xxxii. 41. The sword of God is a well-known, eschatological, symbol of the O.T. Cf. Is. xxvii. 1, xxxiv. 5, xlvi. 10, xlvii. 6, lxvi. 16, Ezek. xxi. 3 seqq. Later we meet with the same symbol of punishment and vengeance in 1 En. e.g. xc. 17, 19 (connected with the opening of the 'book'), "opened the book... and a sword was given to the sheep"; ib. xci. 12, "and a sword shall be given to it, that a righteous judgement may be executed". Add ib. xc. 34, lxxxviii. 2. Other instances of the same symbolic use of 'the sword' are Rev. i. 16, ii. 12, 16, vi. 3, 4, xix. 15. It may be noted that 'the sword' in this chapter again, as in the O.T., is God's sword, although wielded by the angels of destruction.

(3) And all the inhabitants of the world fear and tremble... when they behold His... sword... from one end of the world to the other. This is more in the style of a description of the Last Judgement. Perhaps the writer unconsciously falls in with the eschatological phraseology. Or, more probably, the situation in

CHAPTER XXXIII

The angels of Mercy, of Peace and of Destruction by the Throne of Judgement. The scribes. (vss. 1, 2)

The angels by the Throne of Glory and the fiery rivers under it. (vss. 3-5)

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) At the time that the Holy One, blessed be He, is sitting on the Throne of Judgement, ¹ (then) the angels of Mercy are standing on His right, the angels of Peace are standing on His left and the angels of Destruction are standing in front of Him.

1 E adds: 'of truth' the writer's mind may be that of a great general Divine visitation, such as a war. Passages representing the Divine sword as visible to an assembly or large number of people simultaneously, occur in Rabbinic: e.g. Sifre on Deut. xi. 12 (cf. Lev. R. xxxv, Deut. R. iv): "(At Sinai) A book and a sword came down from heaven... and the Voice was heard, saying: 'If you practise the doctrine of this book, you shall be saved from the sword, but if not, you shall be punished by it'". It should be noted that the 'sword' in this passage is said to be identical with the sword of Gen. iii. 24, which is another of the fundamental references on which the conception of the 'sword' is based. See Gen. R. xxi. 14 (the sword personified).

Ch. xxxiii. 1-2. Vss. 1 and 2 of the present chapter constitute the last fragment of the context treating of the Judgement. The representation of vs. 1 is but another version of the conception of the principal agencies at the Judgement, already met with in ch. xxxi. The hypostasized attributes of Justice, Mercy and Truth of ch. xxxi. 1 are here replaced by the angels of mercy, peace and destruction. It is safe to assume that the angels of mercy here more or less exactly correspond with the attribute of Mercy there as to significance and function, i.e. represent the activity of plea in favour of man. As regards the angels of peace their character of mediating forces is confirmed by the frequent usage of the term 'peace' for the mediation between two opposites, see ch. xlii. 7. The correspondence between the angels of destruction and the attribute of Justice was attested, note on ch. xxxi. 2, esp. in the passage quoted from TB. Shab. 55a. The attribute of Justice perhaps more emphasizes the accusing part, the angels of destruction, again, the punishment, the strict carrying out of the principles of justice.

(1) the angels of Mercy are standing on His right. In contrast with ch. xxxi. 1, the defending agencies, the 'melammedim zakuth' are assigned the place to the right side, cf. note, ib. The strict system of the later Qabbala is however not applied even here, since the opposing agency of the 'melammedim choba' on the left is missing.

For the angels of mercy pleading in favour, cf. Hilkot ha-hKisse (Add. 27199, fol. 139 a): "211 myriads of angels of mercy are standing there (by the Throne) and they plead in favour of Israel". ib. fol. 125 a (Hilkot Mal'akim): the 'angels of mercy' are the performers of the Thrice-Holy part of the Qēdushsha, perhaps a symbolic expression of the meritorious properties of the performance of the Qēdushsha (ch. xl. 1). The angels of mercy have their attentions and efforts fixed on the 'merits': cf. end of note on ch. xxxi. 2.

(2) And one scribe is standing beneath² Him, and ³another scribe³ above Him.

(3) And the glorious Seraphim surround the Throne on its four sides with walls of lightnings, and the 'Ophanim' surround them with fire-brands round about the Throne of Glory.

2 so E. A: above Him'

3-3 so E. A: 'a Kerub'

The expression 'angels of peace' is perhaps derived from Is. xxxiii. 7. The 'angel of peace' is Enoch's guide acc. to 1 En. xl. 8, lii. 5, liii. 4, lvi. 2 et al. Cf. also Test. Dan. vi. 5, Asher, vi. 6.

On the angels of destruction see notes on chh. xxx. 2 and xxxii. 1 (xliv. 2).

(2) one scribe is standing beneath Him, and another scribe above Him (acc. to the reading of E adopted above). The scribes record all the facts that have regard to the Divine Judgement, the fixed times appointed for man's entering and leaving this world (ch. xviii. 23, 24), his observance or non-observance of the Divine statutes, all 'the doings of the world', not only as to individuals but with reference to nations and the world at large (chh. xxvii. 2, xxviii. 7, xxx. 2). Besides such 'facts' the scribes also write down the decisions of judgement, the Divine decrees with regard to man after death as well as to the living.

For instances related to the ideas here presented cf. Chibbut ha-qQeber, BH. i. 150: "a scribe and one appointed with him (function at man's death)... counting the number of his days and years"; Sefer Chasidim (EJ. ii. 333): "two scribes record the place assigned for every man, whether in Paradise or Hell"; Hek. R. v. 1 (in the Legend of the Ten Martyrs): "in that hour, the Holy One, blessed be He, ordered the Scribe incessantly to write down dire decrees and terrible plagues... for the wicked Rome". Note also Hek. R. xx, where GABRIEL, the scribe, is represented as writing down the merits and deeds of a man, desiring to behold the vision of the Merkaba, and also his application for the grant of this privilege.

Ch. xxxiii. 3-5. With vss. 3 seqq. of the present chapter the theme of the Divine Judgement is abandoned. What follows in this chapter is a short representation of the Throne of Glory, the Merkaba-angels surrounding it and the seven fiery rivers flowing through all the seven heavens down to Gehenna, thus forming a concise summary of the Merkabah-picture: the heavenly glories with the Throne at their centre. Since the emphasis here is neither on the Judgement-Throne—as in the section on the Judgement, just concluded—nor on the angelic classes of the heavenly hierarchy—as in the angelological section—it may be convenient to include these verses in the section comprising chh. xxiii, xxiv, xxxiv, xxxvii, which deals with various wonders of the heavens (the Throne of Glory, the 'Araboth' and the seven heavens in general), esp. from the quasi-physical aspect. This section is of the same fragmentary, unsystematical character as the section on the Judgement.

As regards the relation between vss. 1, 2 on one hand and vss. 3-5 on the other, it is quite probable that they belong together even originally, the compiler having put this chapter in its present place merely because the two opening verses referred to the subject of the preceding chapters, the Judgement.

Considered as a unity the present chapter forms another instance of the Merkabah picture revealing the Throne in its highest aspect as a Judgement-Throne. This tendency is noticeable in both the angelological expositions: ch. xviii and chh. xix-xxviii. Cf. note on ch. xxvi. 12.

(3) This verse presents three classes of Merkaba-angels: acc. to A, Kerub,

And clouds of fire and clouds of flames compass them to the right and to the left; and the Holy Chayyoth carry the Throne of Glory from below: each one ⁴with three fingers. ⁵The measure of the fingers of each one ⁴is 800,000 and 700 times hundred, (and) 66,000 ⁶parasangs.

(4) And underneath the feet of the Chayyoth seven fiery rivers are running and flowing. And the breadth⁷ of each river is 365 thousand parasangs ⁸and its depth is 248 thousand myriads of parasangs⁸. Its length is unsearchable and immeasurable.

(5) And each river turns round in a bow in the four directions of 'Araboth Raqia', and (from there) it falls down to Mā'ōn and is Seraphim and Chayyoth; acc. to E (probably the correct reading), Seraphim, 'Ophanim and Chayyoth; thus in both readings omitting one of the classes of the angelological section (besides the wheels of Merkaba). Apart from this, the adopted reading presents the same order as that of the angelological section: Seraphim, 'Ophanim, (Kerubim), Chayyoth.

For the 'clouds of fire and clouds of flames' cf. the 'four clouds', ch. xix. 4 and chh. xxxix and xxxvii.

the Holy Chayyoth carry the Throne of Glory. This is a frequent statement. Cf. Gen. R. lxxviii, Lam. R. to iii. 23.

each one with three fingers. Cf. ch. xvii. 6. The measures of the fingers present some difficulty. Originally the passage might have contained some reference to the different measures ascribed to each of the three fingers, e.g. the first one 80,000, the second 70,000, the third 66,000, in a gradation intended to convey a correspondence in proportions to the second, third and fourth fingers of a human hand, respectively. For measures of the Chayyoth cf. ch. xxi. 1-3 and note, Chag. 13 a.

(4) seven fiery rivers running and flowing underneath the feet of the Chayyoth. Cf. ch. xix. 4 (under the wheels of the Merkaba, upon which the feet of the Chayyoth are resting, four fiery rivers are continually running) and note, ib., ch. xviii. 19 and note (the four heads of the fiery river), the fiery river of ch. xxxvi, the fiery rivers between the camps of Shekina in ch. xxxvii. Note also 'the rivers of fire', flowing in the midst of rivers of water', ch. xlii. 7. In 1 En. cf. ch. xiv. 19: "from underneath the throne came streams of flaming fire so that I could not look thereon" (seven rivers, ib. lxxvii. 5-7). 365 number of positive, 248 of negative statutes.

The conception of 'rivers of fire' from underneath the Throne of Glory or the Chayyoth is an amplification of that of the fiery river, derived from Dan. vii. 10, "a fiery stream issued and came forth from before him", and after this passage frequently called Nehar di-Nur and sometimes Rigyon (e.g. Rev. of Moses, BH. i. 59). Acc. to Gen. R. lxxviii, Lam. R. iii. 21 (with reference to Lam. iii. 23); the Nehar di-Nur goes forth from the perspiration of the Chayyoth who are perspiring under the burden of the Throne(s). Acc. to Mass. Geh. simply "from under the Throne of Glory".

The amplification of the conception of one fiery river into that of several rivers of fire, beginning with the assumption of four heads of the Nehar di-Nur (ch. xviii) is at variance as to the number of these rivers, one tendency being to make them into four (corresponding to the number of the Chayyoth and the 'winds'), another to count them as seven (so here).

(5) And each river turns round in a bow in the four directions of 'Araboth Raqia'. Cf. ch. xxiii. 17, 18. and (from there)... to Ma'ōn and is stayed (?), and from Mā'ōn to Zebul, from Zebul to Shechaqim, from Shechaqim to Raqia', from Raqia' to Shamayim and from Shamayim upon the heads of the wicked who are in Gehenna, as it is written (Jer. xxiii. 19): "Behold a whirlwind of the Lord, even his fury, is gone, yea, a whirling tempest; it shall burst upon the head of the wicked".

stayed (?), etc. The heavens are enumerated with the omission of Makon and the substitution of the Hebrew name Shamayim for the Latin Wilon (velum or Greek βήλον). In ch. xvii. 3 both these names are given for the first heaven. In Seder Rabba di Ber. Rabba the Wilon and Shamayim appear as two different heavens, viz. the first and second respectively.

A parallel to the present conception of the fiery river(s) going through all the heavens and eventually falling down upon the heads of the wicked in Gehenna is found in Mass. Geh. iv (BH. i. 149): "the fiery river goes down upon them (the wicked in Gehenna) and it runs from one end of the universe to the other". Similarly in the fragment, translated by Gaster, RAS's Journal, 1893, pp. 599-605, called Description of Hell: "the river Di-nur floweth from beneath the Throne of Glory and falleth over the heads of the sinners". Cf. 2 En. x. 2: "in Gehenna there is a fiery river coming forth and it floweth from one end of the world to the other". In TB. Chag. 13 b, the fiery river from the perspiration of the Chayyoth is said to "fall down upon the heads of the wicked in Gehenna" with reference to Jer. xxiii. 19, the scriptural passage adduced also by our verse. Cf. further Apoc. Petri, 8, Apoc. Pauli, 57. Hek. R. xiii (Rigyon surrounds His Throne... and covers all the chambers of the Hall of 'Araboth Raqia' with fire-smoke).

In the vss. 4 and 5 of the present chapter we meet with a conception of fiery rivers that is brought about through an amalgamation of various views concerning the Nehar di-Nur.

(1) Founding upon Dan. vii. 10 the Nehar di-Nur became a constituent part of the picture of the splendours by the Throne. Flowing from underneath the Throne its origin was explained from the perspiration of the Chayyoth, heavily burdened by the weight of the Throne. In this aspect it serves no definite purpose other than to add to the glory of 'the Holy One, blessed be He, who sitteth on the Throne of Glory'.

(2) Brought into connection with the 'thousand thousands and ten thousand times ten thousand' angels ministering before the Throne acc. to the same passage, Dan. vii. 10, from which the conception of the Nehar di-Nur was deduced—especially in their function of performers of the Qēdushsha or 'the Song' the fiery river became the bath of purification, by which the song-uttering angels were thought to prepare themselves for the saying of the Thrice Holy: see ch. xxxvi.

(3) Once connected with the ministering angels even other functions than the last named were assigned to the Nehar di-Nur. In the fiery river the angels were "renewed every morning" (in accordance with Lam. iii. 23). To the tradition holding the view that the song-uttering angels live only so long as to perform the Qēdushsha and then perish, the fiery river was the substance from which they were formed and whither they were sent back again: TB. Chag. 14 a, Gen. R. lxxviii, Lam. R. iii. 21. From this conception there is only a short step to that of the fiery river as the place of punishment for those of the ministering angels who uttered the Song untimely or improperly: ch. xlvii. 2.

(4) Lastly the Nehar di-Nur, as derived from Dan. vii. 10, is brought to bear upon the "judgement and the books" mentioned ib. Already serving the purpose of sanctification, purification and punishment of the ministering angels, it was easily made an integral part of the Divine Judgement. On one hand it served to purify man in general from sin after death (on the third day of judgement: cf. the purification with lashes of fire, ch. xxviii. 10, Chibbut ha-qQeber, BH. i. 151),

CHAPTER XXXIV

The different concentric circles round the Chayyoth, consisting of fire, water, hailstones etc. and of the angels uttering the Qëdushsha responsorium

R. Ishmael said: Metatron; the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) The hoofs of the Chayyoth are surrounded by seven clouds of the means of purification and preparation of the Intermediate (the 'benoniyyim', cf. ch. xlv. 5), on the other hand it became the means of punishment of the wicked (in Gehenna), a conception which is attestedly old and related to that of the punishment of the wicked in a sea of fire etc. Cf. Rev. xix. 20, compared with 2 En. x. 2, CHARLES's notes on both passages, and Boeklen, Die Verwandtschaft der jüd.-christlichen mit der persischen Eschatologie, pp. 119 seqq.

In the present vss. it is primarily the conceptions indicated in the points (1) and (4) that have been foisted together. As the place of the wicked was conceived of as Gehenna, Gehenna being situated below the heavens, it was necessary, in order to reconcile the different views (Nehar di-Nur in 'Araboth and as means of punishment) to present the Nehar di-Nur or the fiery rivers as flowing from the Throne of Glory in the 'Araboth through the heavens down to Gehenna. In Ma'yan Chokma (Rev. Mosis), BH. i. 58-64, the points (3) and (4) are combined: "after having undergone the judgement the ministering angels bathe in the fiery river and are renewed. And then the fiery river... falls down upon the heads of the wicked in Gehenna, as it is written (Jer. xxiii. 19): 'Behold a whirlwind of the Lord... it shall burst upon the head of the wicked'". Cf. vs. 5 above.

Ch. xxxiv. This chapter, in common with the latter part of the foregoing chapter, treats of the glories of heaven with emphasis laid on the celestio-physical parts of these. The centre is the Throne of Glory, the feet of the Chayyoth carrying the Throne, and out from this centre the heavenly splendours are represented as evolving in concentric circles. This tendency towards a view arranging the heavenly objects concentrically round the Throne of Glory is noticeable in a number of earlier and later cabalistic writings, and is, moreover, extended to the cosmological theories of the structure of heavens and earths and their foundations. Cf. especially Midrash Kōnēn.

A parallel to the present chapter is ch. xxxvii. For parallels in other writings reference can be made to Midrash Kōnēn, BH. ii. 33, Seder Rabba di Bereshit Rabba (in Werthheimer's Batte Midrashot) and Helak Merkaba, Add. 27199, fol. 126 a.

In Midrash Kōnēn, ib., where the 'concentricism' is already extended so as to include the whole cosmos—the lowest of the seven earths, the 'Ereṣ ha-tTachtona', and the highest of the heavens, the 'Araboth with the Throne of Glory, being on the same circle—the passage runs: "the outside of the 'Eres ha-tTachtona is surrounded by fire and water, the water by earthquake and trembling, these by lightning and thunder, the lightning and thunder by sparks and commotion, the sparks and commotion by the likeness of the Chayyoth (Ezek. i. 5), the likeness of the Chayyoth by 'Rāsō wā-Shōb' (Ezek. i. 14), the Rāsō wā-Shōb by (those who utter) the Voice of Speech (Ezek. i. 24)... (these by) the still small Voice (1 Kings xix. 12)... (this by) those who utter the 'Holy',... (these by) those who utter the 'Blessed be the Glory of H from His place'... (these by) those who say 'Blessed be the Glory of H for ever and ever'..." Seder R. di Bereshith R., repeating this, adds (after "those who utter the Holy"): "and behind all these are the Holy Chayyoth, and the 'Ophannim and burning coals. The clouds of burning coals are surrounded on the outside by seven walls of flame(s). The seven walls of flame(s) are surrounded on the outside by seven walls of hailstones (stones of 'El-gabish, Ezek. xiii. 11, 13, xxviii. 22). The hailstones are surrounded on the outside by ¹stones of hail (stone of Bārād). The stones of hail are surrounded on the outside by stones of "the wings of the tempest". The stones of "the wings of the tempest" are surrounded on the outside by ¹flames of fire. The flames of fire are surrounded by the chambers of the whirlwind. The chambers of the whirlwind are surrounded on the outside by ²the fire and the water².

(2) Round about ²the fire and the water² are those who utter the the Throne of Glory (cf. here ch. xxxiii. 3 and beginning of this chapter) and the feet of Shekina are resting upon their heads... and thousand thousands and ten thousand times ten thousand ministering angels are standing round the feet of Shekina (cf. 'thousand camps of fire etc.', vs. 2 here)".

Helak Merkaba, referred to above, has the following representation: "Behind the Throne is the Wind, that surrounds the Throne, and Light surrounds the Wind, and splendour surrounds the light, fire surrounds the splendour etc.... and the colour of chashmal (Ezek. i. 4) surrounds the flames, and clouds surround the chashmal etc."

are surrounded on the outside by, lit. 'in front of' or 'before... are placed in a circle, are surrounded'. hailstones—stones of hail—stones of the wings of the tempest. These are used as mystical terms, and it is difficult to determine to what extent the writer when using them has a definite or clearly conceived idea in his mind as to what they represent. The 'el-gabish' seems, like 'chashmal', to have been a difficult and hence mysterious word which, especially as it occurs only in Ezekiel, was thought to have a deeper mystical connotation. It is then natural that it came to be regarded as denoting a celestial substance or object. 'Wings of the tempest' as a technical term occurs also e.g. in ch. xviii. 25. In Midrash Kōnēn, beginning of the Ma'ase Bereshith, the "wings of the tempest" appears as a definite part of the cosmological structure (after 'the mountains' and 'the wind' and next to 'Ereš ha-tTachtona'). As an illustration of the use of expressions like those of the present chapter in a mystical-technical sense, attention may be drawn to the passage preceding the one just referred to, Midrash Kōnēn (BH. ii. 32 seqq.): in a long enumeration of the foundations of the universe (the one resting upon or in the other) we meet with the statement: "the 'Ereš ha-tTachtona' is stretched out upon (over) the waters, the waters upon pillars of chashmal, the pillars of chashmal rest upon mountains of hailstones, the mountains of hailstones upon the mountains of hail, the mountain of hail upon the treasures of snow etc." See also ch. xix. 3, 4.

For the walls of flames, walls of fire, flames of fire etc. (fire being the celestial substance, κατ' ἐξοχήν), cf. Mass. Hek. iv, according to which four walls surround the splendours in 'Araboth Raqia', "one of lappid (firebrands), another of flames, the third of burning fire, the fourth of lightnings". And ib. "the seven Halls (of 'Araboth) are all of them full of coal, firebrands, sparks, lightnings, pillars of coal, pillars of burning fire, pillars of lightnings, pillars of fires, pillars of flames".

fire and water. Cf. ch. xlii. 7. The counterbalance of the two polar opposites of fire and water is a well-established part of the cosmological speculations as well as of those of the mysteries of the heavens.

(2) Round about... are those who utter the "Holy"... those who utter the "Holy". Round about those who utter the "Holy" are those who utter the "Blessed". Round about those who utter the "Blessed" are the bright clouds. The bright clouds are surrounded on the outside by coals of burning juniper; and on the outside surrounding the coals of burning juniper there are thousand camps of fire and ten thousand hosts of flame(s). And between every several camp and every several host there is a cloud, so that they may not be burnt by the fire.

CHAPTER XXXV

The camps of angels in 'Araboth Raqia': angels performing the Qēdushsha

¹ R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

This in the present context forms the transition to the section, beginning with the following chapter, a section which has the performance of the Qēdushsha in the heavens as main theme. Cf. Introduction, section 17.

between every several camp... there is a cloud lest they be burnt by fire. For 'clouds' as protecting the angels cf. Mass. Hek. iii: "and clouds (are set) to protect the ministering angels from the splendour of the Throne of Glory".

Section 5. The Celestial Qēdushsha.

(Chh. xxxv, xxxvi, xxxviii, xl.)

Ch. xxxv. With this chapter begins a new section centering round the conception of the heavenly Qēdushsha, the counterpart of the Qēdushsha on earth. Vss. 1-4 form an introduction, treating of the numerous camps in which the song-uttering angels are arranged. The different fragments all begin with an explicit reference to the performance of the '(Thrice) Holy' ("When the time for the saying of the 'Holy' draws nigh" or "when the ministering angels utter the Song") and are contained in chh. xxxv. 5, 6, xxxvi, xxxviii, xxxix, xl.

On the conception of the celestial Qēdushsha see Introduction, section 17.

(1) The number of camps: 506 thousand myriads of camps has the Holy One... each camp... 496 thousand angels. For parallels cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 21, and Hilkoth ha-mMal'akim (Add. 27199), fol. 125 a.

The passage of Alph. R. 'Aqiba, placing the camps in Shechagim (the third heaven) instead of, as here, in the 'Araboth (the highest of the heavens)—by reason of the assigning of the celestial Sanctuary to the Shechaqim—runs: “In Shechaqim 1018 camps are standing before the Shekina in the Sanctuary which is the Shechaqim, saying before Him the ‘Holy’ every day, and each camp is (composed of) 1008 myriads of ministering angels. For ‘Shechaqim’ is by Gematria 1018... From the morning until the evening they say before Him: ‘Holy, Holy, Holy’, and from the evening until the morning they say ‘Blessed be the glory of H from His place’”.

Hilkoth Mal'akim, ib., presents both conceptions, that of the present chapter and that of Alph. R. ‘Aqiba, in a developed form: “(Of) the angels 906,000 myriads (the number 906 is developed from ‘506’ of vs. 1 here through the addition of a ‘ת’ to the numerical letters: ‘תתקן’ instead of ‘תקן’) are standing to the right of the Throne and as many are standing to the left of the Throne, together with a troop without number and a host without reckoning. They teach song(s) and hymn(s). And in Shechaqim there are 1018 camps of angels (cf. the passage in Alph. R. ‘Aqiba above) who say ‘Holy’ and ‘Blessed’ from morning until evening. Before Him there are 496,000 angels who utter the ‘Holy’ by day and the ‘Blessed’ by night. And all the angels and all the camps bathe in fiery rivers seven times and restore themselves by fire 365 times (cf. ch. xxxvi. 2).”

Vss. 1 and 4 seem to indicate that the ‘camps’ here represent all the ministering angels. But the emphasis is clearly on the song-uttering angels and in the two parallel passages just referred to as well as in ch. xl. 3 the ‘camps’ refer only to the angels as performing the Qēdushsha. There was, moreover, a definite tradition current, to the effect that the number of ministering angels in general was countless, infinite (basing upon Job xxv. 3: “Is there any number of his armies?”). Cf. Hilkoth Mal'akim above (“a troop without number etc.”) and esp. TB. Chag. 13 b, where it is said expressly, that the passage Dan. vii. 10, which vs. 4 here uses as scriptural support, is to be interpreted as referring to the number of one troop only, “for the troops are without reckoning”. The ‘camps’, then, are understood as the armies of angels which have the performance of the Qēdushsha for their special object. Apart from this, of course, the view obtains that all the higher (and lower) classes of angels utter the ‘Thrice Holy’ or the ‘Blessed’. Cf. chh. xx. 2, xxv. 5, xxvi. 8.

The numbers ‘506’ and ‘496’ are arrived at by means of gematrical calculations, as it is expressly stated to be the case with the number ‘1018’ of the camps of Shechaqim in Alph. R. ‘Aqiba, referred to above. (506 = kingdoms, 496 = kingdom. See Introduction, section 17 E.)

(2) From ‘the appearance of their countenance’ the description of the angels in this verse is in the literal terms of Dan. x. 6. The speculations concerning the song-uttering angels and the judgement are to a large extent drawn from interpretations of different passages of Daniel. Cf. vs. 4.

(3) they are all standing before the Throne of Glory in four rows. Cf. ch. xxxvi. 2. The four rows here represent the same idea as ‘the four camps of Shekina’, chh. xviii. 4, xxxvii. 1 (see note on ch. xviii. 4) and as “the four camps of angels” glorifying the Most High, P. R. 'El. iv. the princes of the army at the head of the rows (the meaning is probably “one prince at the head of each row”) are,

(4) And some of them utter the "Holy" and others utter the "Blessed", some of them run as messengers, others are standing in attendance, according as it is written (Dan. vii. 10): "Thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set and the books were opened".

(5) And in the hour, when the time draws nigh for to say the "Holy", (then) first there goes forth a whirlwind from before the Holy One, blessed be He, and bursts upon the camp of Shekina and there arises a great commotion among them, as it is written (Jer. xxx. 23): "Behold, the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a continuing commotion".

(6) At that moment ⁴thousand thousands of them are changed into sparks, thousand thousands of them into firebrands, thousand thousands into flashes, thousand thousands into flames, thousand thousands into males, thousand thousands into females, thousand thousands into consequently, a parallel representation to that of 'the four great princes...over the four camps of Shekina', ch. xviii. 4, and identical with the "four angels at the head of the four camps of angels etc.", P. R. 'El, ib., whose names are MIKAEL, URIEL, GABRIEL and RAPHAEL. On these grounds it is possible to point to a connection between the tradition preserved in the present chapter and 1 En. The four 'Presences' of 1 En. xl, uttering praises before 'the Lord of Glory', MIKAEL, RAPHAEL, GABRIEL and PHANUEL, are there introduced in the close company of "the thousands of thousands and ten thousand times ten thousand etc.", xl. 1, and of "those who stand before Thy glory and bless, praise and extol, saying, 'Holy, Holy, Holy', and, 'Blessed be Thou and blessed be the name of the Lord for ever and ever'", ch. xxxix. 12 f. Cf. ib. ch. ix. 1 and lxxi and 2 En. xviii. 9 ("the Grigori are standing in four orders, when singing [the Praise of the Holy One] with one voice"). Cf. Zohar, iii. 50 a: "four משריין". (Vide Introduction, section 17 A.)

(4) Some of them utter the "Holy" etc. some of them run as messengers etc. Cf. note above on vs. 1. Thousand thousands ministered unto him etc. Dan. vii. 10. This verse seems to have been used as an epitome of mystical gnoseis: it was the starting-point for the computation of the number of the angels, was used as support for the conception of the Nehar di-Nur, the fiery river(s), the ministration of the Qēdushsha by hosts of angels, the Celestial Beth Din, the Judgement and the Book(s) of judgement.

Some say the 'Holy', some the 'Blessed', i.e. the Qēdushsha, consisting of the Thrice Holy and the response 'Blessed', of which latter there are at least two forms within the present book: (1) 'Blessed be the glory of H' from His place (ch. i. 13), and (2) 'Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom for ever and ever' (ch. xxxix. 2). The Qēdushsha responsorium, as performed by the angels, is attested in 1 En. xxxix. 12 f., referred to above note on vs. 3. (Notice the form of the 'Blessed' there.)

(5) when the time draws nigh for the recital of the Holy...there goes forth a whirlwind. The moment before the Qēdushsha was one of commotion and shudder through all the heavens, of a 'momentous' significance. Cf. chh. xviii. 7, xix. 6, xxxviii. 1.

(6) thousand thousands of them are changed into sparks...flames...males...females...light etc. The angels are thus represented as changeable winds, thousand thousands into burning fires, thousand thousands into flames, thousand thousands into sparks, thousand thousands into chashmals of light⁴; until they take upon themselves the yoke of the kingdom of heaven, the high and lifted up, of the Creator ⁵of them all⁵ with fear, dread, awe and trembling, with commotion, anguish, terror and trepidation. Then they are changed again into their former shape to have the fear of their King before them alway, as they have set their hearts on saying ⁵the Song⁵ continually, as it is written (Is. vi. 3): "And one cried unto another and said (Holy, Holy, Holy, etc.)".

4-4 E corr. (mistaking the abbreviation 'י'דננ'—thousand thousands of them are made into—for: saying Amen) 5-5 ins. with E. A: lacuna into various forms from their original state of angels with bodily form. This is stated Gen. R. xxi. 13, with reference to Ps. civ. 4: "'(who maketh his angels spirits), his ministers a flaming fire', which changes, for they change, appearing at one time as males, at another as females, now as winds (or, spirits), now as angels". This dictum (attributed to Rab?) is quoted and commented upon by Maimonides in his More Nēbukim, vol. 1, ch. xlix. The expression 'are made into males...made into females' is somewhat suspect in its present connection, where the changing of the angels into all sorts of fiery, lifeless substances, is apparently conceived of as a punishment ad premonitum, till they acquiesce in performing their duty, the performance of the Qēdushsha.

until they take upon themselves the yoke of the kingdom of heaven, the high and lifted up, of the Creator. By the recitation of the Qēdushsha, the angels take upon themselves the yoke of heaven. In the Qēdushsha they recognize the Holy One, blessed be He, as the king of the heavens—cf. the response in the Qēdushsha of the Liturgy: "H' shall reign for ever etc." Ps. cxlvi. 10. So the Israelites every day, when they recite the 'Shema' take upon themselves the yoke of the kingdom of heaven, M. Ber. ii. 2, and when praying in general, TB. Ber. 10 b. The Qēdushsha is in itself the religious duty of the song-uttering angels. In the performance of the Qēdushsha they put themselves as a harmonious unity in the heavenly kingdom, hence they are changed again into their former shape, described in vs. 2 as individual, manifested angelic beings, in which existence they remain only as long as they continue in the performance of the duty that is their only raison d'être. Cf. chh. xl. 3, xlvii. 1 f.

On the meaning of the expression 'take upon oneself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven' see article "Kingdom of heaven" in JE and Abelson, Jewish Mysticism, p. 84.

CHAPTER XXXVI

The angels bathe in the fiery river before reciting the 'Song'

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) At the time when the ministering angels desire to say (the) Song, (then) Nehar di-Nur (the fiery stream) ¹ rises with many "thousand thousands and myriads of myriads" (of angels) of power and strength of fire¹ and it runs and passes under the Throne of Glory, between the camps² of the ministering angels and the troops of 'Araboth.

(2) And all the ministering angels first go down into Nehar di-Nur, and they dip themselves in the fire³ and dip their tongue and their mouth seven times; and after that they go up and put on the garment of 'Machage Samal' and cover themselves with cloaks of chashmal and stand in four rows over against the Throne of Glory, in all the heavens.

Ch. xxxvi. The ministering angels, before singing the 'Song', i.e. in this connection presumably the Qēdushsha, purify their bodies, in particular their tongue and mouth, in the Nehar di-Nur, the fiery river, see note on ch. xxxiii. 5.

(1) Nehar di-Nur rises etc. The beginning of the verse is a covert interpretation of Dan. vii. 10. The fiery river is represented as bringing with it the "thousand thousands etc." of Dan. vii. 10, all of which are fire "in strength and might". of power and strength of fire. The present writer is unable to translate this into intelligible English: it means that the fiery substance of the angels is on this occasion intensely radiant and sparkling.

The camps probably stand for the song-uttering angels, the troops for the rest: 'the host without reckoning'. Cf. 1 En. xl. 1 and note, ch. xxxv. 1.

(2) the angels... go down into Nehar di-Nur. Cf. May'an Chokma, BH. i. 58-64: "in the fiery river the ministering angels bathe themselves and are renewed every morning". their tongue... seven times, the special organ for the recital of the Thrice Holy needs special purification. CHAPTER XXXVII

The four camps of Shekina and their surroundings

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) In the seven Halls there are standing four chariots of Shekina, and before each one are standing the four camps of Shekina. Between each camp a river of fire is continually flowing.

(2) Between each river there are bright clouds [surrounding them], and between each cloud there are put up pillars of brimstone. Between one pillar and another there are standing flaming wheels, surrounding them. And between one wheel and another there are flames of fire ¹round about¹. Between one flame and another there are treasuries of lightnings; behind the treasuries of lightnings are the wings of ²the stormwind². ³Behind the wings of the storm-wind are³ the chambers of the tempest; ⁴behind the chambers of the tempest there are⁴ winds, voices, thunders, sparks ⁵[upon] sparks and earthquakes [upon] earthquakes⁵.

1-1 E: 'riding' 2-2, 3-3 E om. 4-4 E om. 5-5 E: 'and behind the sparks there are earthquakes'

Ch. xxxvii. This chapter belongs to the same category as ch. xxxiv. Cf. notes, ib. The reason why it was placed in its present context is probably the mention in vs. 1 of 'the four camps of Shekina' since the 'camps' are understood of the song-uttering angels.

(1) seven Halls, in 'Araboth, the highest of the heavens. Cf. note on ch. xviii. 3. The camps are conceived of as filling all the Halls, radiating from the centre of the Throne of Glory. The chariots of Shekina are here four, corresponding to the four Chayyoth of the Divine Chariot, an amplification of the One Chariot similar to that of the fiery river into four or seven. four camps of Shekina. See note on chh. xviii. 4, xxxv. 3. E misreads 'seven', probably by false analogy to the seven Halls.

(2) The text has probably suffered a confusion. Instead of 'between...and' read throughout 'behind' as in the latter part of the verse and as in the parallels of Midrash Kōnēn and Seder Rabba di Bereshith Rabba referred to note on ch. xxxiv, Introduction. The reading 'between...and' was presumably caused by the use of this expression with reference to the rivers as flowing between the camps of ministering angels. Cf. how in ch. xxxiii it is said about the fiery rivers: "each river turns round in a bow in...'Araboth Raqia'". The original intent of the chapter was to picture the concentric circles of flames, treasuries of lightnings, chambers of the tempest etc. surrounding the Throne of Glory and the camps. The confusion is, even after the suggested emendation, too great as to allow any clear reconstruction of the intended picture.

CHAPTER XXXVIII

The fear that befalls all the heavens at the sound of the 'Holy,' esp. the heavenly bodies. These appeased by the Prince of the World

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) At the time, when the ministering angels utter (the Thrice) Holy, then all the pillars of the heavens and their sockets do tremble, and ¹the gates of the Halls of 'Araboth Raqia''¹ are shaken and the foundations of Shechaqim and the Universe (Tebel) are moved, and the orders² of Ma'on and the chambers³ of Makon quiver, and all the orders⁴ of Raqia' and the constellations and the planets are dismayed, and the globes of the sun and the moon haste away and flee out of their courses⁵ and run ⁶ 12,000 parasangs and seek to throw themselves down from heaven, (2) by reason of the roaring voice of their chant, and the noise of their praise and the sparks and lightnings that go forth from their faces; as it is written (Ps. lxxvii. 18): "The voice of thy thunder was in the heaven (the lightnings lightened the world, the earth trembled and shook)".

1-1 E: 'the gates of the Halls and 'Araboth Raqia'' 2 E: 'chambers' 3 E: 'Halls' 4 E: 'secrets' 5 so E. A corr. 6 E ins.: 'back(ward)'

Ch. xxxviii. The importance of the Celestial Qēdushsha is illustrated by a description of the commotion that seizes the whole Universe at the time appointed for its recital by the ministering angels.

(1) all the pillars of the heavens... tremble etc. This description is supplemented by the description of the fear of all the angelic hosts and different classes of angels at the time of the 'Song' in ch. xix. 6. A parallel in similar terms as those of the present verse and of ch. xix. 6 and of the same import is found in Ma'yan Chokma, BH. i. 59 seqq.: "all the heavenly hosts shake and tremble, and the Holy Chayyoth are struck dumb, the Holy Seraphim roar like lions... the Galgallim of the Throne... are moved, the thresholds of brilliancy quake and all the heavens are seized with terror". A similar expression in Assumption of Moses, x. 5: "and the circuit of the stars shall be disordered". Of the various heavens are here named: 'Araboth', the 7th, Shechaqim, the 3rd, Ma'on, Makon, Raqia', the 5th, 6th, 2nd resp. foundations of Shechaqim and... (Tebel), may be a hint of the connection of each of the seven earths with the corresponding heaven (elaborated in Midrash Kōnēn and often repeated in cosmological Qabbala), only that usually Shechaqim is represented as connected with the earth called 'Arqa', whereas the earth called Tebel is combined with the Raqia'-heaven.

the orders of Raqia' and the constellations and planets... and... the sun and the moon. The heavenly bodies are situated in the Raqia', the second heaven (cf. Chag. 12 b).

(3) Until the prince of the world calls them, saying: "Be ye quiet in your place! Fear not because of the ministering angels who sing the Song before the Holy One, blessed be He". As it is written (Job xxxviii. 7): "When the morning stars sang together and all the children of heaven shouted for joy".

CHAPTER XXXIX

The explicit names fly off from the Throne and all the various angelic hosts prostrate themselves before it at the time of the Qēdushsha

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) When the ministering angels utter the "Holy" then all the explicit names that are graven with a flaming style on the Throne of

(3) until the Prince of the World calls them. The Prince of the World is here the ruler or prince of the heavenly bodies, the constellations, planets, sun and moon. Ch. xxx. 2, he is the leader of the 72 princes of kingdoms and pleads the cause of the world (i.e. all the inhabitants of the world) before the Most High when seated on the judgement-throne. These two functions, leader of the planets-constellations and of the princes of kingdoms are naturally combined, when, according to the development of the conception of the princes of kingdoms, they are represented as the rulers of the planets and constellations (so even in this book, ch. xvii. 8, in its present redaction).

The Prince of the World has been identified with Metatron by one party of cabalistic traditionists. Within the present book functions are attributed to Metatron that are essential to the Prince of the World. Metatron is indicated as the ruler over the princes of kingdoms, chh. x. 3, xlviii c 9 et al., and he has authority over the planets (and constellations) acc. to ch. xlvi. 2, and over the princes of kingdoms and the rulers of the world, ch. xiv. 1, 3.

The Prince of the World was present at the Creation and in the days of Creation he uttered the words of Ps. civ. 31 ("The glory of the Lord shall endure for ever: the Lord shall rejoice in his works"). TB. Chullin, 60 a, hence to him refers the passage, Ps. xxxvii. 25, "I have been young and now am old": TB. Yebam. 13 a. Cf. further, note on ch. iii. 2.

Ch. xxxix. This chapter continues the picture of the preceding chapter (the commotion of all the heavens with the inclusion of the constellations and the planets at the sound of the Thrice Holy): the Explicit Names on the very Throne of Glory and the highest classes of angels are all moved into expressions of glorification of the Most High at the time of the Qēdushsha.

(1) all the explicit names that are graven with a flaming style on the Throne of Glory. The explicit names are represented as a plurality; hence we are here on the ground of mystical speculations concerning the different Divine Names consisting of various permutations of the Tetragrammaton and of the other names of God and expressions representing the Godhead occurring in the O.T. For the various meanings attached to the term 'Shem Mēphorash' see JE (e.g. vol. i. 622); Gaster, The Sword of Moses, intr.; Bousset, Ry. pp. 344 et al. The meaning that suggests itself in the present connection is that of "names that are explicit, have an individual, fixed form or appearance". Cf. ch. xlviii B 1, acc. to the reading of FGH: "The Holy One, blessed be He, has 70 names that are explicit, the rest that are not explicit are innumerable and unsearchable". The Explicit Names are here distinguished as being graven on the Throne of Glory (with a flaming style; cf. chh. xiii. 1, xxix. 1, xli. 4). Cf. the enumeration of the different categories of Names in Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 26. The Explicit Names are there in a separate class from those on the Throne, if the reading is correct: "The Holy One, blessed be He, revealed to Moses all the Names: both the Explicit Names, the Names that are graven on the royal crown on his head, the names that are graven on the Throne of Glory, the names that are graven on the ring of his hand, the names that are standing as pillars of fire round his chariots, the names that surround the Shekina like eagles of the Merkaba, and the names by which heaven and earth are sealed...". The intent of the passage is probably to denote all these names as Explicit Names.

(2) And the angels of the host, and the flaming Servants, and the mighty 'Ophannim, and the Kerubim of the Shekina, and the Holy Chayyoth, and the Seraphim, and the 'Er'ellim, and the Taphsarim ²

fly off like eagles. Cf. above, 'the names that surround the Shekina like eagles'. For the names flying off, cf. TB. 'Ab. Zar. 18 a (the letters fly off from a scroll of the Tora, when burning), Pesachim, 87 b (when the tables of the testimony were broken by Moses, acc. to Ex. xxxii. 19, the letters graven on them, flew off). Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 53: "The letter Kaph went down from its place on the Fearful Crown and stood before the Throne of Glory". Similarly, ch. xlviii B 1, the Names of the Holy One are represented as going forth 'from before the Throne of Glory'. The names are thus represented as self-existent and capable of taking on the form of living beings. The object of the names flying off as eagles (angels of the form of eagles) is their participation in the responses of the Qēdushsha. This is explicitly stated with regard to the letters (the letters and the Names being vastly interchangeable terms) in the quotation from "the book of Enoch" in Mishkan ha-'Edu by Moses de Leon (BH. ii. p. xxxi): "the letters in the four different quarters round the Throne (cf. here: on the four sides of the place of His Shekina (fly off... and when flying off say: 'Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom for ever and ever'".

(2) And the angels of the host, and the flaming Servants etc. The Explicit Names surrounding the Holy One are accompanied by great armies of princes of fire and mighty regiments of troops (gēdudim) of fire, says Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 25. For the present enumeration of various angelic classes cf. chh. vi. 2, vii, xiv. 1. xix. 6. No doubt the present verse is to be regarded as presenting a tradition of the orders of the highest angel-classes. This is indicated by the mention of the four classes of 'Merkaba-angels' ('Ophannim, Kerubim, Chayyoth and Seraphim).

angels of the host. Cf. the expression 'prince of the host' applied to the princes of the seven heavens, ch. xvii. 2 f. In each heaven there is one 'host'. The term 'host' need not necessarily refer to the whole multitude of angels, it might also mean one special class of angels. 'The angels of the host' would then, here, mean. 'the angels of the host of the highest of the heavens'. Cf. ch. xiv. 1.

the flaming Servants. This expression occurs also ch. vii. Cf. note, ib.

CHAPTER XL

The ministering angels rewarded with crowns, when uttering the "Holy" in its right order, and punished by consuming fire if not. New ones created in the stead of the consumed angels also means the Divine Majesty. The 'Ophannim, Kerubim, Chayyoth and Seraphim are the four classes of Merkaba-angels, described in the angelological section, chh. xx-xxii, xxv, xxvi. Cf. also ch. vi. 2. The 'Galgallim' or 'Wheels of the Merkaba' are missing here.

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

the holy princes. This might refer to the 'princes of Kingdoms', ch. xiv. 2 (mentioned after the 'Er'ellim and Taphsarim), ch. xvii. 8 ('crowned with royal crowns, clad in royal garments etc.', cf. here: 'adorned with crowns, clad in kingly majesty', in the present connection of course referring to all the enumerated angels and princes), chh. xxix and xxx (identical with the Watchers and Holy Ones, cf. note on ch. xxix, intr.).

Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom for ever and ever. This is then the form of the response to the 'Holy, Holy, Holy...' according to the present chapter. Ch. i. 13 has the regular response: 'Blessed be the glory of H' from His place'. The present response is a glorification of God as King, of the Kingdom of Heaven, a form implied by ch. xxxv. 6.

Ch. xl. The ministering angels receive crowns as reward when uttering the 'Thrice Holy' in the proper manner. Hereby the performance of the Qēdushsha is indicated as a meritorious act, an observance of a religious duty. As such it is already characterized, ch. xxxv. 6 (the angels when singing the 'Holy' take upon themselves the yoke of the Kingdom of heaven). It signifies the sustainment of the whole order of the heavens by the recognition of God's sovereignty (the whole earth is sustained by the Qēdushsha, TB. Soṭa, 49 a). The reward of the ministering angels performing the Qēdushsha is hence exactly paralleled by the rewarding of the Israelites with crowns at the time when they said, "We will do and hear (Ex. xxiv. 7)", related in TB. Shabb. 88 a ("60 myriads of ministering angels put crowns on every single one of the Israelites etc.")—but for the acceptance of the blessed be He, in the proper way, then the servants of His Throne, ¹the attendants of His Glory,¹ go forth with great mirth from under the Throne of Glory. (2) And ²they all carry in their hands, each one of them² thousand thousand and ten thousand times ten thousand crowns of stars, similar in appearance to the planet Venus, and put them on the ministering angels and the great princes who utter the "Holy". Three crowns they put on each one of them: one crown because they say "Holy", another crown, because they say "Holy, Holy", and a third crown because they say "Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of Hosts".

(3) And in the moment that they do not utter the "Holy" in the right order, a consuming fire goes forth from the little finger of the Holy One, blessed be He, and falls down in the midst of their ranks

1-1 E om.

Tora implied in those words the whole world could not have subsisted. The importance of the Qēdushsha in the present section always refers to the Celestial Qēdushsha, at any rate in the first place. The importance of the earthly Qēdushsha is the subject of Sota, 49 a, and Hek. R. ix et al.; to the latter at times the greater importance is assigned (the angels must be silent while the Israelites say the 'Holy' on earth).

(1) the servants of His Throne... go forth... from under the Throne. The servants of His Throne are the angels entrusted with the care of the treasures of the crowns which are under the Throne of Glory and hence also over the other treasures that are conceived of as having their place under the Throne. From under the Throne was brought forth the fire of deafness for the Chayyoth acc. to ch. xv B, and go forth the 'horns' acc. to Hek. R. xii. In the secret chamber under the Throne God hid Moses away from the fury of the ministering angels acc. to Ex. R. xxiii.

(2) they all carry in their hands... crowns... and put them on the ministering angels. The crowns are made of stars, in appearance like unto the splendour of the planet Venus. The 'planet Venus', 'the shining star', is a frequent term of comparison, cf. ch. xxvi. 6 et al. one crown, because they say 'Holy' etc. One would have expected 'one crown for each "Holy"' or similar. The same division of the Thrice Holy is found in the Siddur of R. 'Amram Ga'on, Morning Prayer, p. 4 (ed. Warsch), closely connected with the present chapter by reason of its being attributed to R. Ishmael: "R. Ishmael said: There are three companies of ministering angels who say the 'Holy' every day. One company says 'Holy', the other says 'Holy, Holy', and the third company says 'Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of Hosts. The whole earth is full of His glory'". The same is repeated in a different version, ib., Evening Prayer, fol. 18, and also, with slightly corrupt readings, in Seder Rabba di Bereshith Rabba (ed. Werthheimer, Batte Midrashot). Vide Introduction, section 17 D.

(2) And in the moment that they do not utter the Holy in the right order or in the right time a consuming fire... consumes them in one moment. The same punishment of the ministering angels that utter the song out of order is set forth in ch. xlvii. 2. The fire is here not the fiery river, the regular means of punishment, but a fire sent out for the purpose from the little finger of the Holy One. In ch. xlvii. 2 the two ideas of the fire from the Most High and the fiery river are combined: the immediate extinction of the angels is effected by the fire 'from their Creator', but their continued punishment takes place in the fiery river.

and is divided into 496³ thousand parts corresponding to the four camps of the ministering angels, and consumes them in one moment, as it is written (Ps. xcvi. 3): "A fire goeth before him and burneth up his adversaries round about".

(4) After that the Holy One, blessed be He, opens His mouth and speaks one word and creates others in their stead, new ones like them. And each one stands before His Throne of Glory, uttering the "Holy", as it is written (Lam. iii. 23): "They are new every morning; great is thy faithfulness".

3 E: '796'

The idea of the punishment by extinction in fire of the angels who utter the 'Holy' in the wrong way is echoed in Hilkoth Mal'akim, Add. 27199, fol. 123 a: "Every angel who begins earlier or later than his fellow-angels when singing the Song, is immediately burnt by lashes of fire through CHAYYIEL, the Prince who attends the Chayyoth" (cf. ch. xx. 2).

Rekanati quotes from Sepher Hekaloth (one of the names of the present book), cited BH. ii. p. xvii: "All the ministering angels... who are standing before Him... none of them begins (the Song) too early or too late: anyone who tarries with his voice after his neighbour as much as a hair's breadth is instantly pushed into fire and flames". The singing the 'Song' in the wrong order is acc. to both these passages understood of the time. Cf. ch. xlvii. 2.

is divided into 496 thousand parts corresponding to the four camps of the ministering angels etc. This is apparently a confusion of the two conceptions of the four camps of Shekina (consisting of song-uttering angels) and the 496 (or 506) thousand myriads of camps each composed of 496 thousand angels. It seems to imply that the whole multitude of camps of song-uttering angels are destroyed. They are treated as a whole, a unity. (Contrast the quoted passages, Hilkoth Mal'akim and Recanati.)

a fire goeth before Him and burneth up his adversaries. The angels who do not utter the Song in the right way are identified with the 'adversaries of God' of Ps. xcvi. 3; this is altogether in accordance with the view of the performance of the Qēdushsha as an all-important religious duty attested in the present chapter. The neglect of or unwillingness to perform the Qēdushsha is an act of enmity against the Kingdom of the Most High. The punishment in fire here should be compared with the changing of the angels into all kinds of lifeless fiery substances until their acquiescence in the performance of their duty, depicted ch. xxxv. 5, 6.

(4) After that the Holy One, blessed be He, opens His mouth and speaks one word and creates... new ones. Hence, according to the view of the present chapter (and section) the angels who continue their existence as individual, corporeal beings as long as they rightly perform their duty: the uttering of the Trisagion, are consumed by fire only as punishment for their non-observance of this duty after which new ones are created by a word of God. This view is a harmonization of the different views concerning the origin and fate of the song-uttering angels recorded TB. Chag. 14 a, Gen. R. lxxviii, Lam. R. iii. 21: (1) the angels are created out of the fiery river and thither they are sent back again after they have uttered a Song; (2) the angels are created from the 'dibbur (word)' of God.

Cf. ch. xxvii. 3 and note on ch. xlvii. 2 (the angels after being consumed in the fire, viz. as corporeal beings, subsist in soul and spirit).

They are new every morning; great is thy faithfulness: Lam. iii. 23. This was the fundamental starting point and basis of the speculations on the creation and duration of the angels. It is used, TB. Chag. 14 a, as support of view (1) above, and the review of the various traditions in Lam. R., ib., is attached to this passage.

CHAPTER XLI

Metatron shows R. Ishmael the letters engraved on the Throne of Glory by which letters everything in heaven and earth has been created

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the Angel, the Prince of the Presence, said to me:

(1) Come and behold¹ the letters by which the heaven and the earth were created,

²the letters by which were created the mountains and hills, the letters by which were created the seas and rivers, the letters by which were created the trees and herbs², the letters by which were created the planets and the constellations, ²the letters by which were created² the globe of the moon and the globe of the sun, Orion, the Pleiades and all the different luminaries of Ragid'.

(2) ³ the letters by which were created the Throne of Glory and the Wheels of the Merkaba,

1 E: 'I will show thee' Cf. the opening words of the following chapters. 2-2 E om. 3 E ins.: 'the letters by which were created the ministering angels; the letters by which were created the Seraphim and the Chayyoth'

In ch. xlv. 4 this passage is used with reference to the renewal of the planets (stars) in the time to come.

Ch. xli. This chapter marks the beginning of a new section distinguished from the rest of the book by the setting in which the revelations of the heavenly mysteries are here framed. Whereas according to the preceding chapters the various celestial facts are represented as orally transmitted to R. Ishmael by Metatron, the various wonders of heaven are acc. to this section actually shown to R. Ishmael.

The contents of the revelations thus presented in this section are greatly varied and can scarcely be comprised under one heading. Three main themes are, however, discernible. One is the physical-cosmological aspect of the heavenly mysteries; to this may be reckoned the letters engraved on the Throne of Glory (in the present chapter), the various polar opposites (ch. xlii)—in which the cosmological interest is apparent—the Curtain spread before the Holy One (ch. xlv), and the stars and planets (ch. xlv).

The second theme is that of the conditions of the souls and spirits, comprising not only the spirits and souls of the departed (righteous, wicked and intermediate chh. xliii, xlv), but also those of the unborn, and, even more, those of the punished angels (chh. xliii, xlvii).

The third theme, connected with and partly interwoven in the others is of eschatological character: chh. xlv. 7-10, xlv. 5, xlviii A. Ch. xlviii A forms the conclusion of the section.

(1) This verse is an almost literal copy of ch. xlii. 1, on which see note, ib.

(2) by which were created the Throne of Glory and the Wheels of the Merkaba. The letters are thus prior even to the Throne of Glory, the vehicle of the letters by which were created the necessities of the worlds⁴,

(3) the letters by which were created wisdom, understanding, knowledge, prudence, meekness and righteousness by which the whole world is sustained.

(4) And I walked by his side and he took me by his hand and raised me upon his wings and showed me ⁵those letters, all of them⁵, that are graven with a flaming style on the Throne of Glory: and sparks go forth from them and cover all the chambers of 'Arabôth.

CHAPTER XLII

Instances of polar opposites kept in balance by several Divine Names and other similar wonders

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, ¹the Angel, the Prince of the Presence,¹ said to me:

(1) Come and I will show thee, where the waters are suspended in the highest, where fire is burning in the midst of hail, ²where lightnings lighten out of the midst of snowy mountains,² where thunders are roaring in the celestial heights, where a flame is burning

God's manifestation in the heavens. The Throne of Glory (pre-existent before the creation of the world) created, cf. Gen. R. i. 5.

(3) the letters by which were created wisdom etc.—by which the whole world is sustained. By ten things the world was created (wisdom, knowledge, etc.), TB. Chag. 12 a, 'Aboth R. Natan, xxvii; upon three things the world is based, Pirqe Ab. i; by "knowledge, wisdom, understanding and faculty of speech the whole world is sustained", Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 43. The conceptions of creative agencies and of sustaining ideal forces are here recognizable together with an initial tendency towards the speculations emerging in the ideas of the Sephiroth.

(4) graven with a flaming style etc. Said of the Divine Names, ch. xxxix. 1. The mystical letters are the constituents of the Divine Names. A reads: "showed me the Ophan (i.e. circle, circuit) of the letters". The expression "Ophan of the letters" occurs in Berith Menucha, 3 b (ed. Amsterdam, 1648).

Ch. xlii. (For this chapter cf. notes on ch. xlii and 1 En. lxix. 14-25.)

The central idea of the present chapter is the COUNTERBALANCE OF POLAR OPPOSITES, effected by one of the Divine Names in each case. The instances refer to the physical aspect of the highest of the heavens, where R. Ishmael is represented as shown the various wonders by Metatron. They are, however, certainly of cosmological significance, since the heavens, esp. the 'Araboth, are the realm of causes and the correspondence between the 'upper world' and the 'lower world' is a fundamental presumption of the present book in general. Hence what R. Ishmael beholds in the 'Araboth is the fountain of cosmical realities, which although they are the basis of the terrestrial world, are hidden from the eyes of man on earth.

in the midst of the burning fire and where ³voices make themselves heard³ in the midst of thunder and earthquake.

(2) Then I went ⁴by his side⁴ and he took me by his hand and lifted me up on his wings and showed me all those things. I beheld the waters suspended on high in 'Araboth Raqia' by (force of) the name YAH 'EHYE 'ASHER 'EHYE (Jah, I am that I am), ⁵and their fruits going down from heaven and⁵ watering the face of the world, as it is written (Ps. civ. 13): "(He watereth the mountains from his chambers:) the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy work".

(3) And I saw fire and snow and hailstone that were mingled together within each other and yet were undamaged, by (force of) the name 'ESH 'OKELA (consuming fire), as it is written (Deut. iv. 24): "For the Lord, thy God, is a consuming fire".

3-3 E: '(the) voice makes itself heard'

4-4 E om.

5-5 E om.

(2) I beheld the waters suspended on high in 'Araboth Raqia'. The waters suspended on high are in all probability the 'Upper Waters', divided from the 'Lower Waters' by the Divine command, Gen. i. 6, 7. The cosmological speculations concerning these form a prominent part of Midrash Kōnēn and the tractate called Ma'asē Bereshith (e.g. in S. Raziēl and Seder Rabba di Bereshith, 9 a). The polar opposition is here not apparent, but is implied in the relation of the 'suspended waters' to the lower waters. The upper waters are referred to in a similar form in Test. Levi, ii. (6), 7: "I saw there (in the first heaven) a great sea hanging".

The upper waters are also conceived of as male, the lower as female (an ancient idea of cosmology), a clear polar opposition. This is attested in 1 En. liv. 8: "(And all the waters shall be joined with the waters): that which is above the heavens is the masculine, and the water which is beneath the earth is the feminine"; and in Gen. R. xiii. 14, where the fructifying, engendering function of the upper waters is connected with their nature of 'zēkārīm, males' (with reference to Isa. xlv. 8). Of this idea the expression in the present verse, 'their fruits going down from heaven', is a trace.

by the name YAH 'EHYE 'ASHER 'EHYE. The expression 'bēshēm, in the name...' is in this chapter to be understood literally, as referring to a Divine Name. The names are here all such as are derived from the O.T. YAH: Ex. xv. 2, xvii. 16, Isa. xxvi. 4, Ps. lxxviii. 5. 'EHYE 'ASHER 'EHYE: Ex. iii. 14. The names here in general represent the mediating, sustaining force, and this is probably conceived of as depending upon their character as expressing the creative and ever-sustaining activity of the Most High himself. Their function is hence to be understood in a similar way as that conveyed by the frequent expression "the Holy One created... and sealed with the Name...".

What significance is to be assigned to the YAH 'EHYE 'ASHER 'EHYE here is not evident. Perhaps simply the permanence, inalterability of the suspension of the waters. The important rôle played by the name 'EHYE asher 'EHYE in cabbalistic speculations is well known. It is invariably repeated in the different enumerations of the Divine Names set forth in Shi'ur Qoma and Hek. Zot. Seder R. di-Bereshith speaks of 'טבעת איהיה אשר איהיה'. In Zohar this name ('EHYE asher 'EHYE as distinguished from the 'EHYE alone) represents the Godhead as containing and contained in the first pair of Sephiroth, the Wisdom and Intelligence, which are of course polar opposites, distinguished as masculine and feminine respectively (Zohar, iii. 65 b).

(3) Fire and snow and hailstone... mingled together... by (force of) the name

(4) And I saw lightnings that were lightening out of ⁶mountains of snow⁶ and yet were not damaged (quenched), by (force of) the name YAH ⁷*ŠUR* ‘OLAMIM (Jah, the everlasting rock), as it is written (Is. xxvi. 4): "For in Jah, YHWH, the everlasting rock".

(5) And I saw thunders and voices that were roaring in the midst of fiery flames and were not damaged (silenced), by (force of) the name ⁸*‘EL-SHADDAI RABBA* (the Great God Almighty) as it is written (Gen. xvii. 1): "I am God Almighty".

(6) And I beheld a flame (and) a glow (glowing flames) that were flaming and glowing in the midst of burning fire, and yet were not damaged (devoured), by (force of) the name⁸ YAD ‘AL KES YAH (the hand upon the Throne of the Lord) as it is written (Ex. xvii. 16): "⁹And he said⁹: for the hand is upon the Throne of the Lord".

(7) And I beheld rivers of fire in the midst of rivers of water ¹⁰and they were not damaged (quenched) by (force of) the name ‘OSE

6-6 E: 'flames of fire' 7 E ins.: 'YHWH' 8-8 E om. from 'EL-SHADDAI RABBA' vs. 5. to 'YAD 'AL KES YAH' vs. 6. 9-9 E om. 10 E adds: 'and rivers of water running in the midst of rivers of fire'

‘ESH ‘OKELA (consuming fire). Here the name seems to be chosen simply with regard to the fire, which is represented as unquenched in spite of its surroundings of snow and ice. For the idea of fire and its opposites kept in balance see vs. 7. ‘Esh ‘Okela as attribute of God, see Alph. R. ‘Aqiba, BH. iii. 37. In fact ‘ESH ‘OKELA, in later Qabbala, very often follows immediately on ‘EHYE ‘asher ‘EHYE in enumerations of the Divine Names, a fact that drew the special attention of Reuchlin who comments upon it in his De Verbo Mirifico, chh. xvii, xviii.

(4) lightnings... out of mountains of snow... by (force of) the name YAH ŠUR ‘OLAMIM. This is only another instance of the contraries of fire—ice (snow, water). The connection between instance and name seems to be, that the word ‘ŠUR: Rock' suggests a relation to the 'mountains (of snow)'. Else this verse, Is. xxvi. 4, is the regular point of support for the statement: God created the worlds by the letters Yod He (of YaH). In that case the ‘Šur is interpreted from the root ‘ŠUR: to form, to create. Cf. note on ch. xiii. 1.

(5) thunders and voices... roaring in the midst of flames of fire... by force of the name ‘EL SHADDAI RABBA. The voice of God was thought to go forth in the midst of fire. The connection of the Voice with the name ‘EL SHADDAI is established by Ezek. x. 5: "as the voice of the Almighty God when he speaketh". Cf. 2 En. x. 2.

(7) And I beheld rivers of fire in the midst of rivers of water... Cf. 2 En. xxix. 2: "And fire is in the water and water in the fire and neither is the one quenched nor the other dried up". The juxtaposition of fire and water is a frequent cosmological simile. TB. Pes. 3 a, Yer. Rosh. ha-shShana, 58 a, Cant. R. to iii. 11: "the sky is made of water, the stars of fire and yet they do not damage each other". Gen. R. iv. 9: "The Holy One, blessed be He, took fire and water, mixed them together and out of them the heavens were created". Gen. R. x. 3: "The Holy One, blessed be He, took fire and snow, mixed them and so out of them the universe was created". In the last two passages the cosmology is apparent.

Emphasis is laid on the mediating function of the Divine Name, in this verse most significantly ‘OSE SHALOM, i.e. 'maker of peace'. 'Peace' is the technical term for the mediation, the synthetical agency or Divine activity. Cf. the 'angels SHALOM (Maker of Peace) ¹¹ ¹²as it is written (Job xxv. 2): "He maketh peace in his high places¹²". For he makes peace between the fire and the water, ¹³between the hail and the fire,¹³ between the wind and the cloud, between the earthquake and the sparks.

CHAPTER XLIII

Metatron shows R. Ishmael the abode of the unborn spirits and of the spirits of the righteous dead

R. Ishmael said: Metatron said to me:

(1) Come and I will show thee¹ where are¹ the spirits of the righteous that have been created and have returned, and the spirits of the righteous that have not yet been created.

of peace', ch. xxxiii. 1. Midrash 'Aseret Ma'amaroth, BH. i. 66: "the angels are made of fire and water, and there is peace between; neither does the water extinguish the fire nor the fire lick up the water". As denoting mediation and synthesis the 'OSE SHALOM, 'maker of peace', was understood and used in Qabbala. Cf. e.g. the quotation from the 'Pel'ā', YR. i. 7 b: "Why is it called heaven (Shamayim)? Because water (shemmayim) is to the right and fire to the left and it is in the middle and receives from both, and to this is to be referred the 'OSE SHALOM and the (saying) 'he mixed fire and water and made out of them the heavens', and it is called 'truth' (the mediating agency, ch. xxxi. 1) and 'mercy' and receives from (i.e. stands in the middle between) the Mercy and the Fear (= the second pair of opposites in the Sephiroic system, also called 'Mercy and Justice', cf. ch. xxxi. 1)".

for he makes peace between the fire and the water, between the ice and the fire, between the wind and the cloud. This, referring to God, denotes that the names set forth in the present chapter represent God himself in his different aspects as sustainer and mediator between the dual forces, the syzygies. The Names are part of God's being and essence.

Ch. xliii. This chapter enters upon the subject of the condition of the 'spirits', one of the traditional subjects of mystical literature in general and of the Enoch-literature in particular acc. to 2 En. xxiii: among the secret instructions given to Enoch were those of "the souls of men, those of them which are not yet born and the places prepared for them for ever", further represented in Apocalyptic (Ap. Bar., 1 En.).

(1) Come and I will show thee the spirits of the righteous that have been created... the spirits of the righteous that have not yet been created...

(2) lifted me near by the Throne... revealed the Throne of Glory... showed me the spirits that have been created and had returned. The spirits of the righteous dead are here represented as having their abode by the Throne of Glory. Cf. TB. Chag. 12 a: "the 'Arabothe Raquia', the highest of the heavens, contains the Throne of Glory and the spirits and souls of the righteous"; ib. 12 b: "the spirits of the righteous dead under the Throne of Glory"; TB. Shab. 152 b: "the spirits of the righteous are hidden under the Throne of Glory"; contrast here 'flying above'

(2) And he lifted me up to his side, took me by his hand and lifted² me up near the Throne of Glory³ by the place of the Shekina; and he revealed the Throne of Glory to me³, and he showed me the spirits the Throne. The idea of the spirits of the righteous dead being hidden or stored (gēnūzoth) under the Throne is clearly connected with the conception of "the chambers of the righteous", 4 Ezra iv. 35, 41, vii. 32, 80, 95 etc., 2 Bar. xxi. 23. xxx. 2, 1 En. xxii. 3 ff. On this conception see BOX, Ezra-Apocalypse, pp. 33, 34 (note on ch. iv. 35), 37 (note on ch. iv. 41), 119-21 (note on ch. vii. 32). Cf. also CHARLES, Comm. Revel. note on Rev. xx. 13. Vs. 1 here refers to the spirits of those not yet born as well as to those of the righteous dead. Besides, the expression 'that have returned' of the righteous dead presupposes the pre-existence of the spirits. Acc. to vs. 2, however, R. Ishmael is only shown the spirits of the righteous dead that have returned and have their place by or above the Throne of Glory, but to the unborn spirits there is no reference. There is thus no explicit statement as to the place of the pre-existent souls. As the intent of vs. 1 is to reveal the abode of both the 'returned' and the 'unborn' spirits and acc. to vs. 2 R. Ishmael for that purpose is taken to the Throne of Glory, it is possible that the unborn souls were conceived of as having their place by the Throne in common with those of the righteous dead. How far one can press the expression 'have returned' (whether as referring to a fixed place in heaven—in such a case the Throne—or to the heavens in general) is uncertain. The other possibility is that the unborn spirits are conceived of as having a different abode from that of the righteous dead, e.g. in special chambers under the Throne of Glory. On this assumption it would be necessary to conclude that a piece describing the place of the 'spirits of the righteous that have not yet been created' has fallen out. For the possibility of this place having been the traditional 'GUPH' see below, note on vs. 3.

The place of the spirits yet unborn is acc. to 2 Bar. xxiii. 5 et al. 'the chambers' referred to above (which acc. to 4 Ez. iv. 35, are the abode of the righteous dead). Acc. to TB. Chag. 12 b, "the souls and spirits that are to be created together with the spirits of the righteous (scil. dead) are in 'Araboth, the highest of the heavens". Acc. to Ber. R. viii. 6, the souls of the righteous "dwell with their King (in accordance with 1 Chron. iv. 23)" already before the Creation of the world: with them God took counsel before creating man. Acc. to a dictum of R. Assi (repeated TB. Nidda, 13 a, 'Aboda Zara, 5 a, 'Yebamoth, 62 a) the unborn spirits await creation in the GUPH, the storehouse of souls. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 26 (apparently dependent upon the same tradition as that of Chag., 12 b) mentions in the 'Araboth: "the Throne of Glory, the stores of life, the treasures of blessings, of dew... and the treasuries (contrast Chag., ib.) of the spirits of the living and of the dead", the "treasuries of the spirits of the living" being a rather singular expression, probably meaning the treasures of the unborn spirits (cf. Sifre, 143 b). Acc. to Tub ha-'Ares, i. 50 a, the spirits "go out to the world from the Libnat ha-sSappir (one of the seven Halls of 'Araboth)."

Hence one might conclude that the unborn spirits here referred to have their place in the proximity of the Throne of Glory, whether in special chambers or not.

The expression 'the spirits of the righteous, that have not yet been created' compels the question whether this implies a distinction between the righteous, wicked (and intermediate) even before this life. Such a distinction is met with in Wisdom of Solomon, viii. 19, 20 ("For I was a witty child, and had a good spirit. Yea, rather, being good, I came into a body undefiled. . ."). This idea in its strictest connotation implies that the moral character of the spirits is already determined before their embodiment—the different courses of the living on this earth being merely a consequence of their qualities as developed in their pre-terrestrial existence; it reappears in Zohar in contexts treating of the problems of metempsychosis.

that have been created and had returned: and they were flying above the Throne of Glory before the Holy One, blessed be He.

(3) After that I went to interpret the following verse of Scripture and I found in what is written (Isa. lvii. 16): "for the spirit clothed itself before me, and the souls I have made" that ("for the spirit was clothed before me") means the spirits ⁴that have been created in the chamber of creation of the righteous and that have returned

4-4 E om.

The fully righteous spirits are there termed "the spirits from the side of Shekina"; cf. Zohar, ii. 94 a b. But another interpretation of the expression 'spirits of the righteous not yet born' is "the spirits that when once having entered earthly life will turn out righteous. They are foreseen to be righteous". Their future perfection reacts upon their pre-existent state. This seems to be the underlying idea of the passage Ber. R. viii. 6 referred to above, and is represented in Zohar, ii. 96 b. (Cf. ib. iii. 168 a and ii. 94 a b, referred to above, et al.)

If chh. xliii and xliv be treated as a whole, it is evident that here the life on earth is regarded as determining the character of man, and indeed so that it is the terrestrial life that taints the previously pure souls. Treated as a whole then, these chapters convey an interpretation of the words 'spirits of the righteous not yet created' more in line with the latter of the two connotations just referred to, but rather to the effect that there are no unrighteous spirits in the pre-existent state. No other unborn spirits are referred to in these chapters. Although only available as a demonstratio e silentio, this fact tends to show that at least the compiler of the present section moves on the basis of the orthodox conception expressed in the prayer 'Elohe Nēshāmā' (given in TB. Ber. 60 b): "O God, the spirit which thou hast set within me is pure etc." (BOX, Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 120). Cf. Eccl. R. xii. 7: "the spirit I have given thee is pure; if thou give it back to me in the same state it is good for thee; if not, I will burn it before thee". (Cf. ch. xliv. and TB. Nidda, 30 a, Shab. 32 b, Baba Batra, 16 a.) Also 4 Macc. xviii. 23 ("having received pure and immortal souls from God").

Still it is evident that the expression by itself presupposes a distinction between righteous and not righteous already in the pre-existent state, in one form or the other. Hence the impression is left, that this tradition is suppressed in the present context and the possibility remains, that a fragment describing the conditions and abodes of the unborn spirits is missing, which originally would have had its place after vs. 2.

(3) After that I went to interpret etc., lit. 'after that I went and studied this scriptural passage and I found according as it is written etc.' 'This scriptural passage' means the well-known scriptural passage traditionally used as support for the doctrines concerning the subject in question. The passage, Isa. lvii. 6, adduced here, is the starting point for the speculations as to the conditions of the unborn spirits both in TB. Chag. 12 b and Yeb. 62 a, 'Aboda Zara, 5 a, Nidda, 13 a (see above). Acc. to the J. Targum, ad locum, it is also used with reference to the doctrine of resurrection. Here the way in which the passage is used for its present purpose is set forth thus: the former part of the verse, 'the spirit was clothed before me', is made to refer to the spirits that have been created, that is to say, apparently, clothed with a body, the latter part, 'the souls I have made', is interpreted as referring to the spirits that are formed by God but not yet created, invested with a body.

that have been created in the GUPH of creation of the righteous, the chamber of creative forms designed for the righteous. The GUPH (= body) is then here not the chambers where the spirits dwell until the time appointed for before the Holy One, blessed be He; (and the words:) "and the souls I have made" refer to the spirits⁴ of the righteous that have not yet been created in the chamber (GUPH).

CHAPTER XLIV

Metatron shows R. Ishmael the abode of the wicked and the intermediate in Sheol. (vss. 1-6)

*The Patriarchs pray for the deliverance of Israel
(vss. 7-10)*

R. Ishmael said: Metatron, ¹the Angel, the Prince of the Presence,¹ said to me:

their life on earth arrives, but evidently the chamber where they are conducted just at the time when they are to enter terrestrial bodies. In this chamber they are then first 'created', i.e. invested with a body, a creative form, which presumably determines the individual, animal or terrestrial body they are to join. The passage, Zohar, iii. 107, referred to by Abelson, Jewish Mysticism, p. 166, could be used as a commentary on the present verse, and one can safely assume that it belongs to the same line of traditions or development of traditions: "when the souls are about to quit their heavenly abode each soul appears before the Holy One, blessed be He, clothed with an exalted pattern (or image or form) on which are engraven the features which it will bear here below". The GUPH is here rather the chamber containing "the pre-existent forms or types of bodies" (Abelson's expression, ib. p. 165) than the abode of the spirits. The unborn spirits "have not yet been created in the Guph" of creation.

It should be added that there is a certain indication here of a beginning differentiation of the 'world of Creation' (Bêrî'ā) as a form of existence different from the higher world of 'the Throne'.

Lastly the qualifying addition 'of the righteous' (the GUPH of creation of the righteous) raises again the question of the distinction between righteous and non-righteous in the pre-existent state. Is there also a division in the GUPH between the compartment for the righteous and that or those for the others? Or did the original tradition maintain the existence of several GUPHs? In its strict connotation the distinction between righteous and non-righteous spirits has as a necessary corollary the distinction between different bodily forms for these two classes.

Ch. xlv. The preceding chapter, in so far as it dealt with the abode of the righteous dead, is in this chapter continued by a description of the two remaining classes of spirits who have left earthly life, i.e. the intermediate and the wicked. The intermediate undergo a purgatorial process in fire in She'ol, assisted and supported in their purification by an angel, SIMKIEL, whereas the wholly wicked are delivered to the wrath of the angel ZA'APHIEL who punishes them in Gehenna with staves of fire.

(1) the spirits of the wicked and the... intermediate where they are standing, of the intermediate, whither they go down, ³and the spirits of the wicked, where they go down³.

(2) And he said to me: The spirits of the wicked go down to She'ol by the hands of two angels of destruction: ZA'APHIEL and SIMKIEL are their names. (3) SIMKIEL is appointed over the intermediate to support them and purify them because of the great mercy of the Prince of the Place (Māqōm). ZA'APHIEL is appointed over the spirits

3-3 E om.

i.e. probably at or immediately after the judgement which is daily acc. to the section on the judgement, chh. xxviii. 7-xxxiii. 2. the spirits of the intermediate whither they go down and the spirits of the wicked whither they go down, i.e. acc. to the following verses, Sheol.

(2) The spirits of the wicked (supply here, in accordance with the following verse: 'and the spirits of the intermediate) go down to She'ol through two angels of destruction. They are sent down from the Throne of Glory, before which they have undergone judgement. For the angels of destruction see notes on chh. xxxi. 2 and xxxii. 1. The angels of destruction carry out the judgement on the wicked, and are appointed over the different compartments of Gehenna according to numerous descriptions of the punishments assigned for the wicked in Gehenna. (Cf. 'Descriptions of Hell' and other translations by Gaster, RAS's Journal (1893), further Masseket Chibbut ha-qQeber, BH. i. 150, Masseket Gehinnom, ib., i. 147-149, Gan 'Eden we-Gehinnom, ib., v. 49 seqq., Test. R. Eliezer, Seder Yesirat ha-wWalad, ib., i. 151-158.) They are then usually represented as numerous and as being assigned to a leader, 'the Prince of Gehenna' (Gedullat Moshe, Gehenna) (cf. QEMU'EL, note on ch. xxxi. 2). Here only two angels of destruction are mentioned. The older traditions speak of two angels of destruction as executioners of the divine decrees, 'APH and CHEMA. The angels of destruction function at the judgement, acc. to chh. xxxi-xxxiii, but represent there altogether the severe execution of judgement. Here one represents the attribute of Mercy, SIMKIEL (support of God), who is appointed over the intermediate to 'support and purify them' (cf. the staff of Mercy, ch. xxxi. 2).

The idea of the 'bēnōniyyim', the intermediate class, the large majority of those who are neither wholly righteous nor wholly wicked, belongs to "the orthodox Rabbinic theology" of Palestine. See BOX, Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 155. The classical passages are TB. Rosh ha-shSHana, 16 b, 17 a, Tos. Sanhedrin, xiii. 3, Aboth R. Natan, xli, TB. Shab. 33 b. In Rosh ha-shSHana, ib., it is the second dictum introduced there that is particularly apposite in this connection ("there are three divisions [companies] for the day of judgement: one that of the fully righteous, another that of the fully wicked, the third that of the intermediate. The fully righteous are immediately written down and sealed for eternal life, the fully wicked... for Gehenna, the intermediate go down into Gehenna, but when they scream in prayer [transl. of BOX] they are permitted to come up again" (acc. to Zech. xiii. 9: "And I will bring the third part through the fire... they shall call on my name and I will hear them...") "and of them said Hanna (1 Sam. ii. 6): the Lord killeth and maketh alive (cf. ch. xviii. 24)").

because of the great mercy of the Prince of the Place. The Place, the Maqom, is the Divine Majesty. The Prince of the Place is an unusual expression. It may be a synonym for 'Prince of the Presence'. A better reading would perhaps be obtained by substituting 'shel' (of) for 'sar' (Prince) and transl. simply: 'because of the great mercy of the Place, i.e. the Divine Majesty'.

ZA'APHIEL, 'the wrath of God'. In contrast to the supporting and helping attitude shown the intermediate from the Divine Mercy, expressed by the name of the wicked⁴ in order to cast them down from the presence of the Holy One, blessed be He, and from the splendour of the *Shekina*⁵ to She'ol, to be punished in the fire of Gehenna⁵ with staves of burning coal.

(4) And I went by his side, and he took me by his hand and showed me all of them with his fingers.

(5) And I beheld the appearance of their faces (and, lo, it was) as the appearance of children of men, and their bodies like eagles. And not only that but (furthermore) the colour of the countenance of the intermediate was like pale grey on account of their deeds, for there are stains upon them until they have become cleaned from their iniquity in the fire.

(6) And the colour of the wicked was like the bottom of a pot on account of ⁶the wickedness of their doings⁶.

4 E: 'intermediate' 5-5 so E. A corr.: 'to heat them for judgement in fire to Gehenna' (confusion of two variant readings?). 6-6 E: 'the multitude of their wicked deeds' to be punished in the fire of Gehenna with staves of burning coal, probably pictured similarly to the passage BH. ii. 51 (of the angels punishing the wicked in Gehenna): "angels stand close by and with their staves drive them back into the fire and burn them". Cf. the punishment with lashes of fire, chh. xvi. 5, xx. 2 (the word translated 'lashes' Rashi interprets 'staves').

SIMKIEL, "support of God", stands the attitude of merciless wrath with regard to the wicked, symbolically expressed by the name ZA'APHIEL.

(5) the appearance of their faces as the appearance of children of men etc. The spirits have bodily form and actual bodies—like eagles, i.e. winged. These bodies are of course different from those they were invested with in the GUPH. The spirits of the righteous, that are 'flying above the Throne' are probably pictured in bodies of similar form. For the souls or spirits as having bodily form cf. 1 En. xxii. 9-14 ("these hollow places have been made that the spirits of the dead might be separated... their spirits shall be set apart in this great pain... scourgings and torments of the accursed for ever"), 4 Ex. vii. 78 seqq. (see BOX, Ezra-Apocalypse, note p. 121: "it seems clear that they (the souls of the unrighteous) are already endowed with bodies suitable to their altered condition... This conception apparently characterizes also 2 Enoch"). Cf. also how acc. to ch. xlvii. 4 the spirits and souls of the punished angels whose 'manifested' bodies have been consumed with fire, are represented as having bodily form, 'their countenance like that of angels and their wings like those of birds'.

the colour of the countenance of the intermediate was like pale grey... (6) And the colour of the wicked was like the bottom of a pot. The sins are depicted as having tainted the spirits—originally white and pure—the intermediate being merely stained so that their original nature is still recognizable, but the wicked black 'like the bottom of a pot': their original character is totally blotted out. This simile presupposes the conception of the absolute purity of the pre-existent spirits, cf. note on ch. xliii. 1-2 (end).

like the bottom of a pot is used of the wicked also in Masseket Gehinnom, BH. i. 149, and Pirke Mashiach, BH. iii. 75 ("their faces were black like the bottom of a pot"). As to the special sins that caused such an entire corruption there is no explicit reference here. The traditions were different on this point. TB. Baba Mešia', 58 b, mentions three sins that consign for ever to Gehenna (cf. the fate of

(7) And I saw the spirits of the Patriarchs Abraham Isaac and Jacob and the rest of the righteous whom they have brought up out of their graves and who have ascended to the Heaven (Raḡia'). And they were praying before the Holy One, blessed be He, saying in the wicked as compared with that of the intermediate), and the same is repeated in the 'Treatise on Hell' which appeared in translation by Gaster, RAS's Journal, 1893, p. 602: "(three sins cause those who commit them to go down to Gehenna and never return:) blaming one's neighbour in public, slandering him and adultery". Masseket Gehinnom, i. BH. i. 147, apparently follows another tradition as to the distinction between wicked and intermediate: there the full punishment—in the class of the wicked—is designed for those who cannot point to one single act of fulfilment of the Tora, "who have not one single statute in their hands". This corresponds with the statement, TB. 'Aboda Zara, 5 a: "the fully righteous are those who have fulfilled the Tora from the beginning to the end, from 'Aleph to Taw'. The bēnōniyyim acc. to this view are those who have endeavoured to fulfil the Law but have failed to keep all the statutes. A third view identifies the bēnōniyyim with those who have kept the negative statutes only, the fully righteous with those who have kept all the positive statutes as well as the negative ones.

As to the length of the period of purification assigned for the intermediate it is probably here conceived of as proportionate to the degree in which the sins have tainted them: they are kept in the purgatory until 'they have become cleaned from their iniquity'. Cf. the passage Rosh ha-shSHana etc. above note on vs. 2 and the transl. in BOX, Ezra Apocalypse, p. 155, where it is pointed out that the bēnōniyyim were thought to go up after screaming in prayer for one hour, acc. to Yalqut on Zech. xiii. 9. Rashi likewise (ad loc. Rosh ha-shSHana) puts as an explanatory remark on the difficult word 'mešafsefīm': "it means: they cry and weep in their agony for one hour and then (are permitted to) come up again". Cf. Se'uddath Gan 'Eden, BH. v. 45, OM. i. 89 b: "the wicked of Israel tormented in Gehenna are brought up from Gehenna to partake in the Feast of the Righteous".

CH. XLIV. 7-10.

Vss. 7-10 contain an apocalyptic-eschatological fragment with the motto: "Israel's deliverance is prevented by the sins of the wicked".

The fragment does not fit in here. The theme of the chapter, acc. to vs. 1, is the conditions of the spirits of the intermediate and the wicked after death. If it had originally belonged to the exposition of the conditions of the spirits it would have had its place in ch. xliii which treats of the spirits of the righteous. But the interest of the present fragment is not focussed on the various conditions of the spirits of the dead but on the deliverance of Israel from the oppression under the 'nations of the world', the establishment of God's Kingdom on earth and the 'wicked' to which it refers are not the spirits of the wicked but the living evil-doers within Israel who through their transgressions prevent the establishment of the heavenly kingdom. It is, moreover, probable, that this fragment represents a different outlook upon the fate of man after death from that of the preceding context (vide below).

The frame is that of the rest of the section: R. Ishmael beholds various wonders in heaven under the guidance of Metatron. It is in this respect closely related to the Apocalyptic Fragment (e.g. BH. v. 167-169): "R. Ishmael said: the Prince of the Presence said to me: sit here in my bosom and I will tell thee what shall befall Israel etc. . . .". An apocalyptic fragment of similar character with Metatron, the Prince of the Presence, as informant of R. Ishmael is contained in Bodl. MICH. 175, foll. 25 b, 26 a (part of the Pirge R. Ishm.).

(7) And I saw the spirits of the Patriarchs . . . and the rest of the righteous who they have brought up out of their graves etc. This evidently marks the beginning of a new fragment. R. Ishmael is already shown the spirits of the righteous, acc. to ch. xliii. The expression 'have been brought out of their their prayer: "Lord of the Universe! How long wilt thou sit upon (thy) Throne like a mourner in the days of his mourning with thy right hand behind thee ⁷and not⁷ deliver thy children and reveal thy Kingdom in the world? ⁸And for how long wilt thou have no⁸ pity upon thy children who are made slaves among the nations of the world? Nor⁹ upon thy right hand that is behind thee wherewith thou didst stretch out ¹⁰the heavens and the earth and the heavens of heavens? When wilt thou have compassion?"

(8) Then the Holy One, blessed be He, answered every one of them, saying: "Since these wicked do sin so and so, and transgress with such and such transgressions against me, how could I deliver my great Right Hand in the downfall by their hands (caused by them)¹¹."

(9) In that moment Metatron called me and spake to me: "My servant! Take the books, and read their evil doings!" Forthwith I took the books and read their doings and there were to be found

7-7 E: 'when wilt thou' 8-8 E: 'When wilt thou have' 9 E: 'And' 10 E ins.: 'and didst span' 11 E reads: '(my great Right Hand) that has fallen down in the downfall at their hands' graves and have ascended to Raqia' is also suspect in this connection: it sounds as if we were here confronted with a different conception as to the fate of men after death, according to which the Patriarchs and (some of) the righteous enjoy the privilege of bodily resurrection before the final consummation.

How long wilt thou sit... thy right hand behind thee. The Right Hand or the Right Arm of the Lord represent the actualization of the kingdom of God on earth, the deliverance of Israel. That the Right Hand is laid behind the Lord is a symbol of cessation in His activity for this purpose. The deliverance of the Right Hand, hence, becomes synonymous with the deliverance of Israel. Cf. ch. xlviii A. It was God's Right Hand that stretched out the heavens and the earth, and so it must be His Right Hand that shall bring about the final establishment of the Kingdom on earth.

(8) Since these wicked do sin... how could I deliver my great Right Hand etc. The delay in the deliverance of Israel is caused by the wicked in their own ranks. That the downfall of Israel was caused by the wicked among them is a dictum attributed to R. Gamaliel II. In particular the idolatry was made responsible for the delay in the establishment of God's Kingdom. The coming of Messiah is suspended for a period which exactly corresponds to the number of years that Israel has been worshipping idols, acc. to 'Echa R. Proëm. 21. Similarly, in the Apocalyptic Fragment, Bodl. MICH. 175, referred to above, R. Ishmael is represented as asking for the reason of the present sufferings of Israel, whereon he is informed that the deliverance is to be suspended for a time corresponding to that of their idolatry (700 years). Here evidently—see vs. 9—the 'sins' of the wicked comprise all 'transgressions of the Tora'.

'These sinners' was perhaps by the compiler thought to refer to the wicked of vss. 1-6, this being then one of the reasons why this fragment was given its present place.

(9) Take the books, and read their evil doings! On the conception of books recording the deeds of righteous or unrighteous etc. see note on ch. xviii. 24. The books here seem to be the records of the deeds of the wicked, cf. 1 En. lxxxix. 4 (book of unrighteousness), ib. xcvi. 7-8 ("every sin is every day recorded in heaven—all your oppression... is written down every day till the day of your

36 transgressions (written down) with regard to each wicked one¹² and besides, that they have transgressed¹² all the letters in the Tora, as it is written (Dan. ix. 11): "Yea, all Israel have transgressed thy Law". It is not written 'al torateka but 'et (ת) torateka, for they have transgressed from 'Aleph (א) to Taw (ת), 40¹³ statutes have they transgressed for each letter.

(10) Forthwith Abraham, Isaac and Jacob wept. ¹⁴ Then said to them the Holy One, blessed be He: "Abraham, my beloved, Isaac, my Elect one, Jacob, my firstborn! ¹⁵ How can I now¹⁵ deliver them from among the nations of the world?" And forthwith MIKAEL, the Prince of Israel, cried and wept with a loud voice and said (Ps. x. 1): "Why standest thou afar off, O Lord?"

judgement"). Since Metatron here seems to have the 'books' in his charge, there must be a trace here of Metatron's function of scribe (Chag. 15 a).

36 transgressions (written down) with regard to each wicked one... Both readings (A and E) seem to be corrupt. The meaning seems to be: for each wicked one were recorded 36 transgressions of the Tora and in addition thereto a great many transgressions of each single letter of the Tora. from 'Aleph to Taw. Cf. Lam. R. Proëm. 24: "the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Abraham: 'thy children have sinned and have transgressed the whole Tora and the 22 letters of Tora, as it is written (Dan. ix. 11), all Israel have transgressed thy Law' (thus here also the passage, Dan. ib., is used as point of support)". The transgressing a letter of the Tora is in Lam. R. ib., understood as equivalent to the transgressing a commandment beginning with that letter, or vice versa. But the expression 'from 'Aleph to Taw' represents the entirety of a thing, in this case the Tora, any part of which is based upon one or the other of the letters. In an absolute sense it represents the entirety of things in general, and is to be compared with the expression 'Alpha and Omega', Rev. i. 8. (See CHARLES, Comm. on Rev. i. 20, and Riedel in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, 1901, pp. 297 seqq., both regarding the 'Alpha and Omega' as an imitation of the 'Aleph to Taw'.)

(10) Mikael, the Prince of Israel, cried and wept with a loud voice. This is the only passage in the present book where Mikael is explicitly referred to as the Prince of Israel. Ch. xvii. 3, Mikael is the prince of the seventh (highest) heaven. The scarce occurrence of 'Mikael' (only twice) is remarkable. His position seems to have been taken over by Metatron. Ctr. the frequent reference to Mikael as the prince of Israel in 1 En. (ix. 1, x. 11, xx. 5, xxiv. 6, xl. 9, liv. 6, lx. 4, 5, lxvii. 12, lxviii. 2-4, lxix. 14 f., lxxi. 3, 8, 9, 13).

For Mikael bewailing calamities that have befallen Israel, cf. Pesik. R. xlv and the parallel trait there: God answers that the deliverance is dependent upon Israel: "(the apostates of) Israel must first turn to me, even if it were only as much as the point of a needle". Cf. also Midrash Petirath Moshe: when Sammael is about to take away Moses' soul, Mikael "cried and wept with a loud voice".

CHAPTER XLV

Metatron shows R. Ishmael past and future events recorded on the Curtain of the Throne

R. Ishmael said: Metatron said to me:

(1) Come, and I will show thee the Curtain of MAQOM (the Divine Majesty) which is spread before the Holy One, blessed be He, (and) whereon are graven all the generations of the world and all their doings, both what they have done and what they will do until the end of all generations.

(2) And I went, and he showed it to me pointing it out with his fingers ¹like a father who teaches his children the letters of Tora. And I saw each generation, the rulers of each generation¹,

1-1 so E. A.: 'and like a father who teaches his children (he showed me) each generation'

Ch. xlv. R. Ishmael is shown the Curtain (Pargod) of MAQOM (the Place, i.e. the Divine Majesty as manifested on the Throne of Glory). This Curtain is spread before the Holy One. The Curtain of the Throne of Glory is referred to also, ch. x. 1. The Curtain separates the Throne of Glory and its innermost mysteries from the other parts of the highest heaven and from the world of angels in general, just as the curtain veiled off the Holy of Holies in the sanctuary. (Cf. TB. Yoma, 77 a.) The Curtain hence becomes the symbol of the last secrets of heaven and earth which are kept with the Godhead, hidden even from the angels. Occasional revelations of these secrets—the reasons of the Creator—are described either as obtained by 'hearing from behind the Curtain' or expressed by the phrase 'to know from behind the Curtain': this is one line of ideas. Or, according to another line, the secrets are represented as 'written down on the (inside of) Curtain'. As instances of the former line of conception reference may be made to the tradition concerning GALLIŠUR-RAZIEL (see note on ch. xviii. 16), further to Mekilta on Ex. xix. 9 (voices from behind the Curtain announce the answers of prayers), and TB. Ber. 18 b (there is heard 'from behind the Curtain, what tribulations are in store for the world'). It seems, that this tradition also contained the idea of special high angels being allowed inside or having their place inside the Curtain, in the immediate Presence of the Holy One, thus partaking of the Divine secrets: so acc. to ch. x. 1 in the reading of BC (cf. note, ib.) the case of GALLIŠUR, and in Mass. Hek. vii ("A curtain is spread before the Holy One... and the seven angels who were created first, minister before Him [i.e. inside the Curtain]"). The second conception is represented here and also Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 44—where it is as here called the Pargod of MAQOM. As a parallel in earlier Enoch-literature is to be noted especially 1 En. xciii. 2 and cvi. 19: "I Enoch will declare them unto you... acc. to that which appeared to me in the heavenly vision, and which I have known through the word of the holy angels and have learnt from the heavenly tablets" (the heavenly tablets correspond to the Pargod here).

(1-3) R. Ishmael is shown all generations and their doings, both past and coming. This implies the idea of pre-determination. In TB. Sanh. 38 b, one finds: "The Holy One, blessed be He, showed Adam every generation and its learned men (inter-

Aqiba on the Curtain of Maqom how he was lecturing on the letters of Tora, expounding on each of the ornaments of each single letter 365 different significations of the Tora etc." The Curtain is here the repository of all past, present and future events, and it seems, as if the idea were rather, that the events, the 'generations,

16 so E. A corr. from here to 'the people of Israel': '(that the nations) of Israel wrought against the people of Israel' 17-17 E: 'and all the deeds of the nations of the world at that time'

(5) And I saw Messiah son of Joseph etc. From here to the end of the verse there follows a short eschatological piece. R. Ishmael, through the medium of the Curtain of the Throne, sees the events of the last times. The end of the course of the present world is marked by the appearance of Messiah ben Joseph and Messiah ben David in whose times there will be wars between Israel and 'Gog and Magog'; the final consummation will then, so it seems, be brought about by the Holy One Himself.

For the conception of the two Messiahs, reference may be made to the scholarly expositions by Dalman (Der leidende und sterbende Messias, pp. 1-26), Buttenwieser (in JE. viii. 511 b, 512 a), Klausner (Die messianischen Vorstellungen des jüdischen Volkes, etc., pp. 86-103), Rabinsohn (Le Messianisme dans le Talmud et les Midrachim). Vide also Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum, ii. 729, Schoettgen, Horae Hebraicae et Talmudicae, i. 139, 267, 360-5, Wuensche, Die Leiden des Messias, pp. 65 seqq., Castelli, Il Messia secondo gli Ebrei, pp. 224-9.

It will perhaps be best to follow Klausner (and Dalman) in assuming that the origin of a double Messiah was the realization of the duplicity inherent in the traditional Messianic picture, e.g. the political and military traits as against the spiritual and ethical (esp. of Isa. xi and Zech. ix. 9). "Die Doppelnatur des Messias muss in einen Doppelmessias umgesetzt werden" (Klausner). (Cf. Dalman in a somewhat different vein: "es muss als möglich gelten, dass überhaupt ein etwa durch die hadrianischen Verfolgungen neu hervorgerufenes Interesse an dem Trost der Messias Hoffnung zu erneutem Schriftstudium trieb... Alles was in der heiligen Schrift darauf zu deuten schien, dass Edom-Rom gestürzt und Jerusalem, wenn auch nur vorläufig, an Israel zurückgegeben wird, musste dad en Forscher anziehen, und das Unbestimmteste gewann für das nach Erlösung dürstende Gemüt deutliche Umrisse und konkrete Gestalt. So erstand Messias ben Joseph, der sterbende Messias des Judentums".)

As to the designation 'ben Joseph' (son of Joseph), Klausner (op. cit. p. 97) holds that "when once a second Messiah has become necessary, he cannot be taken from any other tribe but that of Joseph" ("Der erste Messias ist ein Davidide, also ein Judäer. Was sollte nun der zweite Messias anders sein, als Josephite, beziehungsweise Ephraimite" [Messiah ben Ephraim is sometimes a variant of Messiah ben Joseph, vide below]). Also should be noted Klausner's remark that it "is highly all the fights and wars, and their works and their doings that they probable that Bar Kochba's death as hero in the war with the enemies of Israel, after having for a time been victorious and even reigned as a king, became the starting-point (Vorbild) for the conception of a Messiah who at first is victorious but in the end is overcome by the enemies of Israel". This is, most probably, the right explanation of the conception of a Messianic forerunner of the real Messiah: One had long been conscious of the duplicity in the Messianic picture; the Hadrianic persecutions and the Bar Kochba incident forced the attention on the Messianic ideas and hopes; the circumstances made one conscious of Israel's fate of having to go through many tribulations, temporal victories followed by severe débâcles: from this consciousness grew the picture of a forerunner-Messiah whose essential characteristic was described by the words of the Baraita (TB. Sukka, 52 a): "he will be killed".

Dalman explains the designation 'ben Joseph' from Deut. xxxiii. 17 ("His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh"). "The 'firstling of his (Joseph's) bullock' is nearly as much the emblem of Messiah ben Joseph: Ren. R. lxxv. 6, Ex. R. to xlix. 14 acc. to Pugeo Fidei, Num. R. xiv. 2, Midrash Tanchuma, ed. Buber, 82 b, as the 'foal of an ass' of Zech. ix. 9 is the emblem of Messiah ben David". "Was dort (Deut. xxxiii. 17) von Joseph gesagt ist, führt den Gedanken an das spätere Königtum Ephraims, oder, wenn man das Wort zu der messianisch verstandenen Weissagung auf Juda in Gen. xlix in Parallele setzt, an einen in der Endzeit auftretenden mächtigen König Israels aus Josephs Stamm, einen Messiah ben Joseph. Die Rabbinen, welche in Deut. xxxiii. 17 wirklich einen Messias geweissagt glaubten, wurden dann in diesem Glauben durch ein Wort Jeremias bestärkt (viz. Jer. xlix. 20)".

[Schoettgen (op. cit.), adducing, apart from earlier sources, Zohar and Zohar Chadash, arrives at the conclusion that Messiah ben Joseph and Messiah ben David are identical, and that the former represents the human nature of Messiah, destined to suffer death. The designation 'son of Joseph' Schoettgen believes to be derived from the Christian designation of Christ, the Messiah, as 'the son of Joseph' and points out how, in the genealogy of St Matthew (i. 1), Christ is called 'the son of David', in that of St Luke, on the other hand, 'the son of Joseph'.

Wuensche, in his first discourse on the present problem (op. cit.), also maintained that Messiah ben Joseph and Messiah ben David really were identical. The identity he found established already in TB. Sukka, 52 a (where he, however, mis-translates; vide below and Klausner, op. cit. p. 91, note 2); in common with Schoettgen he further pointed to the fact that scriptural passages which receive Messianic interpretation are promiscuously referred now to Messiah ben Joseph, now to Messiah ben David—although passages interpreted as referring to the suffering Messiah are, according to Wuensche, more often applied to the former than to the latter; from the last-named fact he concluded that the figure of Messiah ben Joseph really symbolized the atoning function of Messiah.

Acc. to Friedmann (Seder Eliyah, Introduction, 20) the conception of Messiah ben Joseph goes back to the expectations among remnants of the tribes belonging once to the Northern Kingdom in Palestine for a Messiah from מלכות אפרים.

Bertholdt (in Christologia Judaeorum, 157) conjectures that the origin was from certain Messianic speculations among the Samaritans.

Castelli (op. cit. pp. 234-6) thinks that Messiah ben Joseph was the Messiah contrived for the ten tribes exiled in Media who was to lead them back to Palestine from their distant abode beyond the river Sambatyon (on the river Sambatyon, a definite detail of the eschatological scheme, vide box, Ezra-Apocalypse, pp. 296, 298, 300 seq.).

Hamburger (Messianische Bibelstellen, 111) and Levy (Wörterb.) think that the Messiah ben Joseph originated from the Bar Kochba incident. Bar Kochba, who will do with Israel both for good and evil. And I saw all the fights had been proclaimed as Messiah even by the great R. 'Aqiba (so Yer. Ta'an, iv. 68 d) was made to retain his Messianity by the formation of the doctrine of Messiah ben Joseph as the forerunner of the victorious Messiah ben David.

Jellinek (BH. iii. xlvi seqq.) expresses the view that the victory of Joseph Flavius in Galilee (thought as the region of the ten tribes or as part of the Northern Kingdom) followed by his defeat through Vespasianus influenced the 'saga' of the Messiah ben Joseph.

Buttenwieser (in JE. loc. cit.) says: "it is possible that the idea of Messiah ben Joseph is connected in some way with the Alexander-Saga". He points out how Messiah ben Joseph and Alexander (in the Koran) both are represented as horned.

Rabinsohn (op. cit.) finds the explanation of the 'son of Joseph' in Deut. xxxiii. 17. Cf. above on Dalman's theory.]

The conception of a Messiah ben Joseph goes back to Tannaitic times. The most important passages speaking of Messiah ben Joseph are found in TB. Sukka 52 a, dated by Levy, Hamburger, Friedmann, Dalman and Klausner as post-Hadrianic. One of the said passages is a Baraita (תנן רבנן) running as follows: "Messiah, the son of David, who will shortly be revealed in our days, to him says the Holy One, blessed be He: 'Beg of Me anything and I will give thee' as it is written (Ps. ii. 8): 'Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession'. As soon as he (i.e. Messiah ben David) saw Messiah, the son of Joseph, that he was (or: would be) killed, he says before Him: 'Lord of the Universe! I do not ask of Thee anything but Life'. He says to him: 'Life! Before thou didst say it, David, thy father, has already prophesied (this, i.e. life) concerning thee, as it is written (Ps. xxi. 4): He asked life of thee and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever'".

The other passage (according to Klausner, "eine amoräische Überlieferung einer tannaitischen Deutung") runs: "(Zech. xii. 12): 'And the land shall mourn, every family apart; the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart'; They say: 'Must not the rule qal wachomer (a minori ad majus) be applied here: if with reference to the time to come when they are occupied with wailing and the evil inclination does not have power over them, the Scripture says "men apart and women apart" how much the more (ought this to be the law) now when they are occupied with pleasure and the evil inclination does have power over them?' This wailing, what does it really signify? Rabbi Dosa and our teachers are divided on this point. The one says: 'It (refers) to Messiah the son of Joseph who is (will be) killed', and the other says: 'It (refers) to the evil inclination which will be exterminated'. Surely (the right lies) with the one who says (that it refers) to Messiah the son of Joseph who will be killed, according as it is written (Zech. xii. 10): 'And they shall look upon the one whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son'".

'En Ya'aqob preserves the following version of TB. Sukka, 12 b: "(Zech. i. 20, Hebrew Bible, ii. 3): 'And יַהְוָה showed me four charashim'. What are they (i.e. the charashim)? R. Chunna bar Bizna says: R. Sim'on the Chasid says: this means Messiah ben David, Messiah ben Joseph, Elijah and the Priest of Righteousness."

Targ. Yer. i to Ex. xl. 11 speaks of Messiah the son of Ephraim through whom Israel will in the end of time overcome Gog ("uthērabbe yath kiyyura wēyath bēsisēh uthēqaddesh yatheh mē'ul Yehošūa' mēšumshanakh rabba dē-Sanhedrin dē 'ammeh dē'al yēdoz 'āthida' ar'a de-Israel le-'ithpēlaga umēšhicha bar Ephraim denafiq minneh dē'al yēdoz 'āthidin beth Israel līmēnašha le-Gog ulēsi'atheh bēsof yomayya").

Targ. Yer. to Canticles iv. 5 and vii. 4 speak of Messiah ben David and Messiah ben Joseph as deliverers of Israel like Moses and Aaron.

The earlier passages represent Messiah ben Joseph merely as the forerunner of Messiah ben David and as the Messiah "who is killed". The passage in our book and wars that Gog and Magog will fight ¹⁸ in the days of Messiah, and all that the Holy One, blessed be He, will do with them in the time to come.

18 A ins.: 'with Israel' goes no further: he is to appear before Messiah ben David and will be engaged in warfare. Though it is not expressly stated here that Messiah ben Joseph will be killed, this is probably presupposed.

Later passages in Num. R. xiv. 2, in Pesiqtha Zut. to Num. xxiv. 13, Midrash 'Asereth Melakhim, Pirge Mashiach, BH. iii. 70, Pereq R. Yoshiyahu, BH. vi. 115 (Messiah ben Joseph called Nehemyah ben Hushiel) appears after the victory over Rome, is killed in the struggle with the Arabs and resuscitated by Elijah in the time of Messiah ben David. Midrash Wayyosha', Nistaroth de R. Shim'on ben Yochai (BH. iii. 80), Tefillath R. Shim'on ben Yochai (BH. iv. 124), Othoth ha-mMashiach (BH. ii. 58), Sefer Zerubbabel (BH. ii. 55) (vide Introduction, Sources and Literature, A 3 (B)) give the tradition that Messiah ben Joseph will be killed in the war with Armilos. In the Nistaroth de R. Shim'on ben Yochai there are three names of Messiah(s): Messiah ben Joseph, Messiah ben Ephraim and Messiah ben David. Num. R. xiv. 2, evidently dependent upon the tradition preserved in TB. Sukka, 12 b (acc. to 'En Ya'aqob, vide above), interprets the four charashim of Zech. ii. 3 as: "Elijah, the Messiah who shall rise from the children of Manasse, the Anointed for War (meshu"ch milchama) who will come from Ephraim and the Great Redeemer who is one of the sons of the sons of David".

Attempts at systematization of the various traditions in respect of the two Messiahs were made by Sa'adya in 'Emunoth we De'oth, viii, and Hai Gaon in Ta'am Zegenim (ed. Frankf. am Main, 1854, pp. 59 seq.). For these vide Dalman, op. cit. and Buttenwieser (in JE. loc. cit.). A display of still later, especially cabalistic, traditions on Messiah ben Joseph is given in Eisenmenger's Entdecktes Judenthum, ii. 729 seqq. (from Menorath ha-Ma'or, Shene Luchoth ha-bBerith, Yalqut Chadash, 'Emeq ha-mMelek, etc.). Passages in the Zohar treating of Messianic times are: Zohar, i. 118 a, 119 a, 134 a b, 139 a b; ii. 7 a b, 32 a, 105 b, 109 b; iii. 67 b, 124 b, 125 a b, 153 a b, 212 b; in the Tiqqunim, 78 a, 95 a.

Gog and Magog play the rôle of "a collective anti-Messiah" (M. Friedlander, Der Antichrist, pp. 171-3). The war with Gog and Magog was speculated upon already in pre-Hadrianic Tannaitic times. Klausner says (op. cit. pp. 90, 100), basing upon Siphra, Par. Bechuqqothai, 2, Siphre Deut. Pisqa. 343: "We can with some certainty maintain that the belief current in pre-Hadrianic times was that the Messias ben David, supported by the presence of the Divine Glory (the Shekina), would wage war against and overcome the enemies of Israel (i.e. Gog and Magog), but in the post-Hadrianic times the warfare was assigned to Messiah ben Joseph destined after a temporal victory to be conquered, and the final victory, brought about by God Himself without shedding of blood, crowns Messiah ben David". This distinction is evidently correct. It will easily be seen that our passage reflects the post-Hadrianic belief in respect of the Messianic times; but it may also be noticed that the vivid impression of the fate of the Messiah ben Joseph characteristic of the Tannaitic dicta has been somewhat blurred out; there is not the same nearness of the picture of war and the conquering and death of Messiah ben Joseph; on the other hand there are no traces of new developments and elaborations of the original conceptions found in later sources. This suggests that the present passage belongs to a time of peace not too far removed however from the time of origin of the Messiah ben Joseph conception, probably some time during the third century A.D.

and all that the Holy One... will do with them: the final consummation will be brought about by the Holy One Himself.

(6) ¹⁹And all the rest of all¹⁹ the leaders of the generations and all the works of the generations both in Israel and in the nations of the world, ²⁰both what is done and what will be done hereafter²⁰ to all generations until the end of time, (all) were graven on the Curtain of MAQOM. And I saw all these things with my eyes; and after I had seen it, I opened my mouth in praise of MAQOM (the Divine Majesty) (saying thus, Eccl. viii. 4, 5): "For the King's word hath power (and who may say unto him: What doest thou?) Whoso keepeth the commandments shall know no evil thing". And I said: (Ps. civ. 24) "O Lord, how manifold are thy works!"

Ch. xlv. In this chapter R. Ishmael is shown the place of the stars who are standing by the 'Throne of the Merkaba' praising the Holy One during the time that they are not occupied by 'doing service to the world'—in Raqia', the second heaven. For the stars, acc. to vs. 3, have two functions: one (during the night) of lighting the world, the other of singing hymns to their Creator.

(1) The text of the chapter is in a bad state, both acc. to the reading of A and acc. to that of E. Especially is this the case with vs. 1. Emendations have been made in the translation with the help of a comparison of the two readings. (Come and I will show thee) is omitted in both readings but is obviously to be inserted by analogy with the opening words of the surrounding chapters, since the rest of the present chapter follows the scheme and phraseology of the other chapters of the section.

(2) standing on sparks of flames round the Merkaba of the Almighty (MAQOM) ... flew off on flaming wings. The stars are depicted as standing by the Merkaba

Metatron do? At that moment he clapped his hands and ⁶chased them⁶ off from their place. Forthwith they flew off⁷ on flaming wings, rose and fled from the four sides of the Throne of the Merkaba, and (as they flew) he told me the names ⁸ of every single one. As it is written (Ps. cxlvii. 4): "He telleth the number of the stars; he giveth them all their names", teaching, that the Holy One, blessed be He, has given a name to each one of them.

(3) And they all enter in counted order under the guidance of (lit. through, by the hands of) RAHAṬIEL to Raqia' ha-shSHamayim to serve the world. And they go out in counted order to praise the

6-6 E: 'made them to fly' 7 E adds: 'from their place' 8 E adds: 'and the additional names (kinnuyim)'

and evidently conceived of as living beings, presumably as angels, cf. vss. 3 and 4. 'Wings' are the regular attribute of angels and angelicized beings, cf. ch. ix. 2 and 'the Names flying off like eagles', ch. xxxix. 1. The stars are hence probably pictured as having bodies and wings after the scheme of the description of angels. Cf. the representation of the fallen stars as having bodily form, in 1 En. lxxxvi. 1 seqq., lxxxviii. 1, xc. 21.

Metatron...clapped his hands and chased them off. Metatron here is represented as having authority over the stars—although their special 'mēmūnne' (appointed one) is RAHAṬIEL. The authority over the heavenly bodies is a special distinctive mark of the Prince of the World, acc. to ch. xxxviii. 3—hence this may be regarded as a trace of the identity between Metatron and the Prince of the World, maintained by one trend of traditions: cf. note on ch. iii and intr. told me the names...has given a name to each one. Cf. 1 En. lxix. 21: "through that oath (i.e. Akæe) the stars complete their course. And He calls them by their names. And they answer Him from eternity to eternity". (Charles, 1 En. p. 140.)

(3) they all enter in counted order under the guidance of RAHAṬIEL. For RAHAṬIEL as the ruler of the constellations, planets or heavenly bodies in general, see ch. xvii. 6 and note, ad loc. to Raqia' ha-shSHamayim, i.e. the second of the seven heavens, which is the region of the heavenly bodies (Chag. 12 b, chh. xvii. 4, 7, xxxviii. 1). Here the stars are represented as entering the Raqia' in order to serve the world, i.e. to give light, etc. to serve the world. For the expression and idea cf. 4 Ezra vi. 46: "and didst command them (the sun...moon and order of the stars) that they should do service unto man"; and see BOX, Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 88, note ad locum, where attention is called to parallels in Clemens, Recogn. v. 29 and Hom. x. 25 ("the sun daily waits upon the world", etc.), and where also is pointed out that the underlying idea of the expression is to "emphasize the thought that the stars are man's servants because by all the rest of the world they were regarded as gods".

And they go out in counted order. 'go out' is here obviously meant as the opposite of 'enter (the Raqia')'. Hence the stars are here thought to leave the second heaven after having fulfilled their function of 'serving the world'. From the Raqia' they are presumably pictured as proceeding to the 'Araboth', the seventh heaven, since they are said (vs. 2) to be standing round the Merkaba or 'the Throne of the Merkaba'.

to praise the Holy One, blessed be He, with songs and hymns. In their function of praising the Most High 'with songs and hymns' the stars are clearly conceived of as angelic beings, and this is especially marked by the manner in which their fate is associated with that of the song-uttering angels (see next verse). For the conception of the stars as angels, cf. Bousset, Rel. des Judentums, p. 315.

Holy One, blessed be He, with songs and hymns, according as it is written (Ps. xix. 1): "The heavens declare the glory of God".

(4) But in the time to come the Holy One, blessed be He, ⁹will create them anew⁹, as it is written (Lam. iii. 23): "They are new every morning". And they open their mouth and utter a song. Which is the song that they utter? (Ps. viii. 3): "When I consider thy heavens".

9-9 E corr.: 'and will help them anew'

Maimonides, More Nebukim, vol. ii, ch. v, uses the same scriptural reference as the present verse (Ps. xix. 2) in support of his view, that "the globes are living and rational beings... and they serve their Master and praise and glorify him with great praise and mighty glorification, as it is written (Ps. xix. 2): 'the heavens declare the glory of God'". The idea of the planets and stars as living, acting and dominating gods is, of course, fundamental in Babylonian and, by influence therefrom, in Persian religion—accompanied by the conception of special rulers of the stars. In the Pehlevi literature the planets and stars are represented as demons or else as animated or ruled by demons. See Bundahish, iii. 25, xxviii. 43, 44, Zad sparam, ii. 10, iv. 3, 7, 10, etc. In Jewish remodelling the planet-gods naturally become planet-angels, whereas the conception of special angels as rulers of the stars, constellations etc. or of the whole of the heavenly bodies is uncommonly frequent. The 70 princes of kingdoms are sometimes identified with the planets and constellations, although more often they are represented as the rulers of them. 'The angels are the souls of the heavenly spheres' is a comparatively frequent dictum. The 'Ophannim are the angels who move the spheres, cf. note on ch. xxv. 5. The identification of the heavenly bodies with angel-princes or demons was also prompted by the astrological speculations. The archangels are identified with the seven planets or represented as rulers of the seven planets, thus preserving the old conception of the seven sidereal rulers from which the conception of the seven archangels is supposed to have originated. (See YR. i. 16 a.)

(6) But in the time to come the Holy One, blessed be He, will create them anew... and they open their mouth and utter a song. The creating the stars and planets anew is here explicitly connected with their character of song-uttering angelic beings. It is, moreover, supported by the scriptural reference which traditionally was used as basis for the speculations concerning the song-uttering angels, who also are said to 'be created anew': 'They are new every morning, great is thy faithfulness', Lam. iii. 23. See ch. xl. 4, Chag. 14 a, Lam. R. iii. 21, Gen. R. lxxviii. 1. The creation anew in the case of the angels is depicted as going on continually every day, whereas that of the stars is designed for the 'time to come'. The future world is sometimes represented as referred to in the said passage (Lam. iii. 23), cf. Gen. R. ib. and Alph. R. 'Aqiba.

NOTE. It is significant that there seems to be no remnant in 3 En. of the Gnostic idea of the planets and constellations as evil agencies, as enemies of the spirit and the spiritual world. Contrast e.g. the 'Seven Great Princes' and the 'Seventy-two Princes of Kingdoms' of 3 En. xvii. with the 'Seven' in Mandaitic. Vide also 1 En. xix. 13-16, xxi. 3-6. There are, however, indications that this idea was known at the time of our book. Thus the inimical rôle of the planets is in our book replaced by that of 'Uzza', 'Azza' and 'Azrael' (chh. iv, v), and the opposing angels in general. Possibly the present chapter is intentionally directed against the Gnostic (Parsic-Iranian) idea in question. (Cf. also Zimmern in Schrader, Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, 8th ed., p. 459, and Reitzenstein, Das iranische Erlösungsmysterium, pp. 59 seq.)

CHAPTER XLVII

Metatron shows R. Ishmael the spirits of the punished angels

R. Ishmael said: Metatron said to me:

(1) Come and I will show thee the souls ¹of the angels¹ and the spirits of ²the ministering servants² whose bodies ³have been burnt in the fire of MAQOM (the Almighty) that goes forth from his little finger. And they have been made into fiery coals in the midst of the fiery river (Nehar di-Nur). But their spirits and their souls are standing behind the Shekina.

(2) Whenever the ministering angels utter a song at a wrong time

1-1 E om. 2-2 so E. A om., but 3 A has a lacuna which represents 2-2 and is wrongly put there instead of before its antecedent word.

Ch. xlvii. As a sequel to the exposition in chh. xliii, xlv—the spirits of the righteous, the wicked and those not yet born—the spirits and souls of the song-uttering angels who have been burnt by the fire from their Creator (cf. ch. xl. 3) are here made the subject of treatment in the general scheme of the section: they are shown to R. Ishmael by Metatron who superadds divers explanations and informations.

The angels in question are those who have uttered a song in a wrong time or improper way, and therefore, as stated in ch. xl. 3, have been consumed by fire. The object of this chapter is apparently to show that this destruction by fire refers only to the bodies of the angels, whereas their spirits and souls 'return to their Creator and stand behind the Shekina'. (On the real object, vide Introd. sect. 15.)

Thus the nature and fate of the song-uttering angels who have failed in their duty are pictured in analogy with those of failing men. Yet there are a few differences between the representations of chh. xliii, xlv and the present chapter. Whereas in chh. xliii, xlv only the term 'spirit' (něshāmā) is used, the present chapter uses both 'soul' (něshāmā) and 'spirit' (rūāch)—although practically synonymously. And whereas acc. to ch. xlv the punishment by fire is for the 'spirits', it is here the bodies only that are represented as destroyed in fire, the spirits (and souls) on the other hand are said to return to 'their Creator', i.e. to their abode behind the Shekina, thus rather reflecting the picture of the spirits of the righteous above the Throne in ch. xliii.

(1) the souls of the angels and the spirits of the ministering servants. The terms 'soul' and 'spirit' are here evidently synonymous. whose bodies have been burnt in the fire of MAQOM. . . made into fiery coals in the midst of the fiery river. The two traditions of the fire from God's little finger (ch. xl. 3) and the Nehar di-Nur (see note on ch. xxxiii. 5) as means of punishment of the angels, are here harmonized, see further vs. 2. but their spirits and their souls are standing behind the Shekina. Even here the two terms 'spirit' and 'soul' are best understood as being synonymous. The juxtaposition of 'spirit' and 'soul' is a mere repetition of that in the beginning of the verse.

(2) Whenever the ministering angels utter a song at a wrong time. . . they or as not appointed ⁴ to be sung^{4 5} they are burnt ⁶ and consumed⁶ by the fire of their Creator and by a flame from their Maker, into the Nehar di-Nur; and there they are made into numerous mountains⁷ of burning coal. But their spirit and their soul return⁸ to their Creator, and all are standing behind their Master.

are burnt... by the fire of their Creator. Cf. on ch. xl. 3. and drives them into the Nehar di-Nur. This is to be understood as an harmonization between the view, acc. to which the song-uttering angels, when uttering the Song untimely or improperly, are consumed by a fiery stream from the little finger of the Holy One, and that, acc. to which the Nehar di-Nur is the place and medium of extinction of the angels. The latter view includes that represented in Lam. R. iii. 21, Gen. R. lxxviii. 1, which maintains that new angels are created continually to sing the song and then disappear—whither? answer: into the Nehar di-Nur from which they were created. there they are made into numerous mountains of burning coal. This should be compared with the statement of ch. xxxv. 5 seq.: the angels, until they acquiesce in performing the Qēdushsha, are changed into all sorts of lifeless, fiery substances,—by a 'whirlwind from before the Holy One' (cf. here). Cf. also 1 En. xxi. 3: "I saw seven stars of the heaven bound together in it (the place of punishment), like great mountains and burning with fire".

their spirit and their soul return to their Creator... standing behind their Master. This recalls ch. xliii, where the spirits of the righteous who have been created are said to 'return'. It implies that the spirits of the song-uttering angels like those of men are pre-existent before being manifested with bodies for the purpose of performing the Qēdushsha or singing hymns and songs. But in contrast with the case of men the punishment of the failing angels is assigned not to their spirits but to their bodies alone. That the permanent abode of the spirits of the angels, not only after the severance from their bodies but even in their pre-existent state, is the place 'behind the Shekina' may be hinted at in vs. 3: R. Ishmael sees 'all the souls of the angels and the spirits of the ministering servants' standing behind the Shekina. Such a view may have developed from a wish to harmonize the different traditions concerning the creation or origin of the angels, one maintaining their pre-existence or creation on the second or fifth day of Creation, the other their continual or successive creation daily. The first view would then be made to apply to the creation of the spirits and souls, the second to their bodily manifestation. In fact the wish to harmonization in this case is sometimes attested in cabbalistic commentaries, cf. the statement: 'the angels who are created daily, sing a song, and then perish, are those who were created on the fifth day; those who were created on the second day do not perish'. On the other hand the view that the angels continue to exist in spirit after their destruction in fire is explicitly refuted in Hilkoth Mal'akim (Add. 27199, fol. 123 a): "for the angels who have been burnt, there is no kind of continued life (or resurrection). It is not as with men, whose bodies die, their souls however are living on high and their spirits return to God—

(3) And I went ⁹by his side⁹ and he took me by his hand; and he showed me all the souls of the angels and the spirits of the ministering servants who were standing behind the Shekina ¹⁰upon wings¹¹ of the whirlwind¹⁰ and walls of fire surrounding them.

(4) At that moment Metatron opened to me the gates of the walls within which they were standing behind the Shekina. And I lifted up my eyes and saw them, and behold, the likeness of every one was as (that of) angels and their wings like birds' (wings), made out of flames, the work of burning fire. In that moment I opened my mouth in praise of MAQOM and said (Ps. xcii. 5): "How great are thy works, O Lord¹²".

9-9 ins. with E. 10-10 E: 'forthwith a whirlwind passed by' 11 emendated (cf. chs. xxxiv. 1, xxxvii. 2): כְּרִי instead of כָּנָף. 12 Emend. E quotes Ps. cxi. 2: 'the works of the Lord (are great)' A confuses Ps. xcii. 5 with cxi. 2.

for them there is continued life. Not so with the angels: they return to the Nehar di-Nur".

(3) who were standing behind the Shekina upon wings of the whirlwind and walls of fire surrounding them. This is of course not indicative of any idea of punishment being assigned to the spirits of the song-uttering angels. Cf. how acc. to ch. xviii. 25 the two high angels SOPHERIEL H' MECHAYYE and SOPHERIEL H' MEMITH are said to be standing on the wheels of the stormwind. The Kerubim acc. to ch. xxii. 13 are surrounded by 'columns of fire on their four sides and columns of firebrands beside them'. Acc. to ch. xxxiii. 3 'clouds of fire and clouds of flame compass the angels to the right and to the left'. Cf. also the Enoch-Metatron piece, ch. xv. 2.

the likeness of every one was as angels and their wings like birds' (wings). Although separated from their bodies of manifested existence, the spirits and souls of the angels have bodily form; cf. chh. xliii. 2 and xlv. 5 and note on the latter.

NOTE. The juxtaposition רוּחוֹת וְנִשְׁמוֹת occurs in TB. Chag. 12 ב, רוּחוֹת וְנִשְׁמוֹת שְׁעָתִיד לְהִבְרָאוֹת, but immediately preceding: נִשְׁמָתָן שֶׁל צַדִּיקִים. Is this passage dependent upon our book, chh. xliii and xlvii? Also in Mandaic the juxtaposition of 'spirit' and 'soul' in a similar vein is quite frequent. On the spirit (or perhaps better 'soul') as the non-physical body of the soul (spirit) in Mandaic vide Reitzenstein, Das iranische Erlösungsmysterium, p. 35. Cf. Introd. section on 'the conception of spirit and soul'.

CHAPTER XLVIII (A)

Metatron shows R. Ishmael the Right Hand of the Most High, now inactive behind Him, but in the future destined to work the deliverance of Israel

R. Ishmael said: Metatron said to me:

(1) Come, and I will show thee the Right Hand of MAQOM, laid behind (Him) because of the destruction of the Holy Temple; from which all kinds of splendour and light ¹shine forth¹ and by which the 955 heavens were created; and whom not even the Seraphim and

1-1 ins. with E. A has a lacuna.

Ch. xlviii (A). Ch. xlviii (A) is an apocalyptic eschatological fragment, closely connected with that contained in ch. xlv. 7-10. Like the latter it uses the symbolical expression of the Right Hand of MAQOM as representing Israel and the Kingdom of Heaven on earth. The inactivity of God's Right Hand—its being laid behind him—is the symbol of Israel's oppression and sufferings among the nations of the world and the temporary suspension of the realization of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth. The deliverance of God's Right Hand is the deliverance of Israel and the establishment of the Heavenly Kingdom. Besides, God's Right Hand also represents God's activity for bringing about the deliverance, and is the instrument of the realization of the Kingdom.

Vss. 1-4 are in the frame of the present section: R. Ishmael is represented as shown the Right Hand of Maqom and sees the five streams of tears that go forth from its five fingers: it is bewailing the downfall of Israel. Vss. 5-10 on the contrary cannot in a strict sense be joined into that frame: without any transition we are there presented with a picture entirely eschatological and treating of the end of times that will see the final redemption: God himself will deliver His right Hand and by it work salvation for Israel and set up His Kingdom, the establishment of which will be marked by the appearance of Messiah and the banquet for the righteous in the restored earthly Jerusalem.

The fragment is distinguished by a more frequent use of scriptural quotations than the other chapters of the section and of the present book in general (with the exception of chh. xxiii and xxiv).

(1) the Right Hand of MAQOM, laid behind (Him) because of the destruction of the Holy Temple. The inactivity of God's Right Hand is here connected with the destruction of the Holy Temple. The cause of its continued inactivity is acc. to ch. xlv. 7-10 the sins of the wicked, here it is hinted that the dearth of saints and righteous in Israel accounts for its present downfall.

The destruction of the Holy Temple, the sign of the downfall of Israel, also implied the total suspension or cessation of the activity for the realization of the Kingdom on earth (the cessation of the activity of the Divine Right Hand), and this again was caused by the sins of Israel. The real catastrophe in the destruction of the Temple was the removal of the Shekina from earth, the presence of the Shekina in the Temple having made it the representative of God's Kingdom on earth. See Lam. R. Proem. 24. (God removes his Shekina from the Temple on account of Israel's sin, and this is the cause of the destruction of the Temple. 'I have no longer an abode on earth').

by which the 955 heavens were created. Cf. ch. xlv. 7: 'thy right hand that is behind thee, wherewith thou didst stretch out the heavens and the earth and the the 'Ophanim are permitted (to behold), until the day of salvation shall arrive.

(2) And I went by his side and he took me by his hand and showed me (the Right Hand of MAQOM), with² all manner of praise, rejoicing and song: and no mouth can tell its praise, and no eye can behold it, because of its greatness³, dignity, majesty, glory and beauty.

(3) ⁴And not only that⁴, but all the souls of the righteous who are counted worthy to^{4a} behold the joy of Jerusalem, they are standing by it, praising and praying before it three times every day, saying heavens of heavens'. The 955 heavens are, acc. to Masseket Hek. iii, above the seven heavens, constituting the Divine World from which the Holy One goes down when manifesting himself in the 'Araboṭh on the Throne of Glory: "in the hour when the Holy One, blessed be He, descends from the 955 heavens and seats himself in the 'Araboṭh upon the Throne of Glory . . .". Y. Ch. s.v. Mal'atim, no. 98, derives the number 955 by gematria from the letters of haššāmaim (= 'the heavens', the final mēm counted as 600). Metatron alone of all the heavenly household can ascend into 900 of these heavens, but the remaining 55 heavens are the exclusive abode of the Holy One. Cf. Lam. R. Proēm. 24. In Seder Gan 'Eden, BH. iii. 139, the many heavens above the seven heavens are also connected with the 18,000 worlds, and both are conceived of as the impenetrable 'Jenseits' into which no one from the manifested universe, whether from heavens or earth can enter. "A multitude of heavens above heavens did the Holy One, blessed be He, create—and the(se) highest heavens have no measure and no place (but they are the place of the worlds, cf. the similar saying about God) . . . and no eye has seen these higher heavens except . . . God alone . . . and the 18,000 worlds (above the many thousands of worlds that are attached to and comprised in the seven heavens) have not been entered by any one save the Holy One, blessed be He, alone, as it is written (quoting Ps. lxxviii. 18, cf. note ch. xxiv. 17) . . . for there is none who knows them save H' . . . alone".

whom not even the Seraphim and the 'Ophanim are permitted to behold. The Seraphim and the 'Ophanim are apparently represented as the two highest classes of Merkaba-angels, in agreement with the angelological section (chh. xxv, xxvi).

(3) all the spirits of the righteous who are worthy and (i.e. to) behold the joy of Jerusalem, are standing by it. The spirits of the righteous have their abode in the Presence of the Holy One, as acc. to ch. xliii. The 'joy of Jerusalem' may refer either to the earthly or to the heavenly Jerusalem. The centre of the Messianic Kingdom in the end of times is acc. to vs. 10 the earthly Jerusalem. But the wording rather supports the interpretation of the expression 'the joy of Jerusalem' as referring to the heavenly Jerusalem: the spirits of the righteous are counted worthy and (are novo) beholding the joy of Jerusalem. For the conception of the heavenly City, and its different shades (the pre-existent Jerusalem, preserved with God in heaven; the heavenly city which is to descend on earth in the future age; "the heavenly counterpart of the earthly city, the eternal reality of which the literal city is but a shadow") in Apocalyptic, cf. 2 En. lv. 2, 4 Ez. viii. 52 (x. 26 seq., 54, vii. 26, xiii. 36), 2 Bar. iv. 2-6, Rev. xxi. 2, 9-xxii. 8 (Hebr. xi. 10-16, xii. 22, xiii. 14, 1 En. xc. 28, 29) and for a full discussion see BOX, Ezra-Apocalypse, pp. 198 seq. (further references given there). CHARLES, Commentary on Rev., ch. xxi. 2, 10, BOUSSET, Die Offenbarung Johannis, 5 Aufl., 1906, pp. 453 seqq. The heavenly Jerusalem is, acc. to TB. Chag. 12 b, contained in Zebul (the fourth heaven), acc. to Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 21, in Sheḥaqim (the third heaven). Here it is perhaps

(Is. li. 9): "Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord" according as it is written (Is. lxiii. 12): "He caused his glorious arm to go at the right hand of Moses".

(4) In that moment the Right Hand of MAQOM was weeping. And there went forth from its five fingers five rivers of tears and fell down into the great sea and shook the whole world, according as it is written (Is. xxiv. 19, 20): "The earth is utterly broken (1), the earth is clean dissolved (2), the earth is moved exceedingly (3), the earth shall stagger like a drunken man (4) and shall be moved to and fro like a hut (5)", ⁵ five times corresponding to the fingers of his Great Right Hand.

(5) But when the Holy One, blessed be He, sees, that there is no righteous man in the generation, and no pious man (Chasid) on earth, and no justice in the hands of men; and (that there is) no man like unto Moses, and no intercessor as Samuel who could pray before MAQOM for the salvation ⁶and for the deliverance, and for His Kingdom, that it be revealed in the whole world; and for His great Right Hand⁶ that He put it before Himself again to work great⁷ salvation by it for Israel, regarded as having its place in the highest heaven by the Throne, since there is probably the permanent abode of the spirits of the righteous.

(4) the Right Hand of MAQOM was weeping. Cf. Ber. 3 a: the Voice goes forth three times every day (night) in the ruins of the Temple, bewailing its destruction and the dispersion of Israel among the idolatrous nations, and Lam. R. Proëm. 24: God weeping on account of the destruction of the Sanctuary.

five rivers of tears...shook the earth...five times. The number 'five' is deduced from the passage Isa. xxiv. 19 seq. from the five repetitions in that passage of expressions conveying the same thing: the earth being shaken.

(5) This and the following verses contain an eschatological piece treating of the final consummation by God himself in the end of times. No effort is made by the writer to reconcile it with the frame of the preceding acc. to which R. Ishmael is standing by Metatron's side beholding the Right Hand of God.

when the Holy One, blessed be He, sees, that there is no righteous man in the generation, etc. The deliverance of Israel and the establishment of the Kingdom on earth was to have been brought about as a consequence of the intercessions and prayers of the righteous and pious among the Israelites, see vs. 8. As the ideal examples of intercessors in the past the writer points to Moses and Samuel, cf. vs. 6. The identity as final goals of the deliverance of Israel, the revelation of the Heavenly Kingdom on earth and the reinstating of God's Right Hand in its right position and activity is here expressed: who could pray...for the deliverance, for His Kingdom, that it be revealed in the whole world; and for His great Right Hand, that He put it before Himself again. 'Again', i.e. 'as in the ancient days, in the generations of old' (Is. li. 9) when it wrought salvation for Israel by the Red Sea (Is. li. 10) or when it stretched forth the heavens and laid the foundations of the earth (ch. xlv. 7 and Is. li. 13).

(6) then forthwith will the Holy One, blessed be He, remember His own justice, ⁸favour, mercy⁸ and grace: and He will deliver His great Arm by himself, and His righteousness will support Him. According as it is written (Is. lix. 16): "And he saw, that there was no man"—(that is:) like unto Moses who prayed countless times for Israel in the desert and averted the (Divine) decrees from them—"and he wondered, that there was no intercessor"—like unto Samuel who intreated the Holy One, blessed be He, and called ^{8a}unto Him^{8a}, and he answered him and fulfilled his desire, even if it was not fit (in accordance with the Divine plan), according as it is written (1 Sam. xii. 17): "Is it not wheat-harvest to-day? I will call unto the Lord".

(7) And not only that, but He joined fellowship with Moses ⁹in every place⁹, as it is written (Ps. xcix. 6): "Moses and Aaron among His priests."¹⁰ ¹¹And again it is written¹¹ (Jer. xv. 1): "Though

8-8 E om. 8a-8a E om. 9-9 E om. 10 E adds: 'and Samuel among them that call upon His name' 11-11 E: 'and He says'

(6) then forthwith will the Holy One, blessed be He, remember His own justice, favour, mercy and grace: and He will deliver.... The final consummation brought about by God Himself is the burden of the whole fragment. The thought here is, that when the expectations for prayers and intercessions from the righteous in Israel are shown to be in vain, then God will support His work for the deliverance of Israel, i.e. the establishment of His Kingdom, by His own righteousness, merits and mercies: on their ground the establishment of the Kingdom by God Himself and alone will be justified—in spite of the lack of merits on the part of Israel.

Moses and Samuel. The interceding power of Moses with the Most High is a frequent theme in Rabbinic; it is especially attached to the narrative of the golden calf of Ex. xxxii (TB. Ber. 32 a, Meg. 24 a, Ex. R. xlvii. 14, Num. R. ii. 14, Deut. R. i. 2). Cf. also Midrash Petirath Moshe, BH. i. 121 (Moses says: Rather sooner let Moses and a thousand like him perish than that one of the people of Israel should perish!" ib. BH. i. 129: "Numerous times did Israel provoke me to anger, but he (Moses) prayed for them and placated me"). Cf. further TB. Ber. 7 a, Yoma, 36 b, Baba Bathra, 8 a.

The verse, Is. lix. 6, 'And he saw that there was no man' etc. is also in 'Othioth ha-mMashiach', BH. ii. 60, used of the end of times, preceding the appearance of Messiah ben Joseph. and His righteousness will support Him. This re-echoes the latter part of the quoted passage (Is. lix. 6): 'his righteousness, it sustained him'.

Samuel... fulfilled his desire, even if it was not fit. The scriptural reference, 1 Sam. xii. 17, is to support the statement that God granted Samuel his requests, even when their fulfilment might not be in accordance with His own plan. To understand this the following part of the passage must be supplemented: "... I will call unto the Lord and he shall send thunder and rain, that ye may perceive and see that your wickedness is great... so Samuel called unto the Lord, and the Lord sent thunder and rain". The underlying idea is that God on this occasion interrupted the pre-determined course of events (implying a weather not destructive for the wheat-harvest) in favour of Samuel (sending thunder and rain).

(7) He joined fellowship with Moses, 'nizdawweg': associated Himself with, revealed Himself face to face to.

Moses and Samuel stood before me" (Is. lxiii. 5): "Mine own arm brought salvation unto me".

(8) ¹²Said the Holy One, blessed be He ¹²in that hour: "How long shall I wait for ¹³the children of men¹³ to work salvation according to their righteousness ¹⁴for my arm¹⁴? For my own sake and for the sake of my merit and righteousness will I deliver my arm and ¹⁵by it¹⁵ redeem my children from among the nations of the world. As it is written (Is. xlviii. 11): "For my own sake will I do it. For how should my name be profaned".

(9) In that moment will the Holy One, blessed be He, reveal His Great Arm and show it to the nations of the world: for its length is as the length of the world ¹⁶ and its breadth is as the width of the world. And the appearance of its splendour is like unto the splendour of the sunshine in its might, in the summer solstice.

(10) Forthwith Israel will be saved from among ¹⁷the nations of the world¹⁷. And Messiah will appear unto them and He

12-12 E: 'The Holy One, blessed be He, will say (in that hour)' 13-13 E: 'my children' 14-14 so E. A: 'as my arm' 15-15 E om. 16 E adds: 'from one end of the world to the other' 17-17 E: 'them'

(8) How long shall I wait for the children of men (E: my children) to work salvation according to their righteousness. The salvation was ideally to be brought about by the righteousness and merits of Israel (in particular by their proclaiming His sovereignty every day in their prayers), but in the present lack of righteousness in Israel God will depend only on His own merit and righteousness.

The expression, 'how long shall I wait for my children to work salvation', shows that 'the righteous and pious man' (vs. 5) of whose total absence from within Israel the writer is conscious does not refer to a desired leader—in spite of the fact that Moses and Samuel are chosen as examples of righteous intercessors—but to a whole class of saintly men whose prayers and intercessions would have had the effect of drawing the Shekina and with it the Kingdom of Heaven down to earth again.

The symbolical expression, 'the Right Hand' of the Holy One, is in vss. 6-10 changed into that of 'God's Arm'. To the writer these two terms are apparently synonymous, since already, vs. 3, the 'arm of the Lord' in Is. li. 9 and 'His glorious arm' in Is. lxiii. 12, are made to refer to 'the Great Right Hand' of God. The variance of expressions is merely a reflection of the phraseology of the scriptural passages referred to in the fragment.

(9) In that moment will the Holy One, blessed be He, reveal His Great Arm and show it to the nations of the world. The scriptural basis for this statement is given at the end of the following verse (Is. lii. 10): "The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations". The revelation of the Arm is the revelation of the Kingdom but at the same time the Arm is the instrument for the realization of the Kingdom on earth.

its length is as the length of the world etc. Cf. ch. xxxii: God's sword 'like a lightning from one end of the world to the other'.

(10) Forthwith Israel will be saved from among the nations of the world—i.e. Israel's dominion will be established.

And Messiah will appear unto them and He will bring them up to Jerusalem. In contrast with ch. xlv. 5 this fragment apparently knows only one Messiah, the will bring them up to Jerusalem with great joy. And not only that but they will eat and drink for they will glorify the Kingdom of Messiah, of the house of David, in the four quarters of the world. And the nations of the world will not prevail against them,

A:

E:

Israel will come from the four quarters of the world and eat with Messiah. But the nations of the world shall not eat with them, Messiah of the house of David; his role is to lead the dispersed Israelites up to Jerusalem. No Messianic wars bringing about the victory of Israel and the Kingdom are mentioned (contrast ch. xlv ib.)—on the contrary the actual consummation is to be effected by God Himself, through the aid of His Arm. Hence Messiah's role here is essentially passive: 'he will appear, be revealed to them'. Cf. 1 En. xx. 37, 38, lxii. 6, 7, 4 Ez. vii. 28 ("my Son, the Messiah shall be revealed, together with those who are with him"), ib. xiii. 32 ("then shall my Son be revealed"), 2 Bar. xxix. 3 ("it shall come to pass... that the Messiah shall begin to be revealed"), Mysteries R. Shimeon B. Yochai, BH. iii. 80 ("after that the Holy One, Blessed be He, will reveal to them Messiah, the son of David... Messiah will spring forth"), TB. Sukka, 52 b. In ch. xlv. 5 and 2 Bar. xl, on the other hand, the role of Messiah is decidedly active.

they will eat and drink (A)—Israel will come... and eat with Messiah (E). The Kingdom of Heaven as a feast is a well-known picture in the Gospels and Rev.: Matt. viii. 11, xxvi. 29, Luke xiv. 15–24, xxii. 16, 18, 30, Rev. ii. 7, iii. 20, xix. 9. For the banquet prepared for the righteous (with Messiah in the time to come) cf. 1 En. lxii. 14 ("And with that Son of man shall they [the elect] eat and lie down and rise up for ever and ever"), 2 En. xlii. 5 ("At the last coming they will lead forth Adam with our forefathers, and conduct them there that they may rejoice as a man calls those whom he loves to feast with him"), 2 Bar. xxix. 3, 4 ("Messiah shall then begin to be revealed... And Behemoth and Leviathan shall be for food for all that are left"), Pirke Aboth, iii. 20 ("Everything is prepared for the banquet"), Pesikta, 118 b ("Behemoth and Leviathan are reserved for the feast of the righteous in the time to come"), Pirke Mashiach, BH. iii. 76 ("Then [in the Messianic time] will the Holy One, blessed be He, make a feast for the righteous on Behemoth, Leviathan and the wild beasts of the field [Ps. i. 11, lxxx. 13]"), Mysteries R. Shimeon ben Yochai, BH. iii. 80 ("And Jerusalem will come down built and completed from heaven and Israel will dwell therein in safety for thousand years and will [sit and] eat Behemoth and Leviathan and... the wild beasts of the field [ziz-ha-sSade, cf. above, perhaps treated as a technical term]"). Cf. Bousset, Rel. des Judentums, 2nd ed., p. 327, BOX, Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 208.

To this conception is correlated that of the righteous in the future enjoying the (fruits of) the Tree of Life and spices of the Garden of Eden. Cf. ch. xxiii. 18, 1 En. xxv. 5, 2 En. ix, Test. Levi, 18, Sibyll. ii. 318, iii. 46, Num. R. xiii. 3.

(E) But the nations of the world shall not eat with them. Cf. and contrast St Matthew viii. 11, 12: "many shall come from the east and the west and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness". Cf. and contrast also Rev. xxi. 8 and especially xxi. 24, 27: "and the nations of the world shall walk in the light of it (the glory of God in Jerusalem) and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it... and there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth..."

Jerusalem is here obviously the earthly City: the nations of the world are outside its precincts, even desiring to conquer it: (A) 'the nations of the world will not as it is written (Is. lii. 10): "The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God". And again (Deut. xxxii. 12): "The Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him". (Zech. xiv. 9): "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth".

The Divine Names that go forth from the Throne of Glory, crowned and escorted by numerous angelic hosts through the heavens and back again to the Throne—the angels sing the 'Holy' and the 'Blessed' prevail against them. There is no idea of a new earth nor even of the heavenly Jerusalem coming down (although this is not actually refuted). Contrast the passage in Mysteries R. Shimeon ben Yochai, BH. iii. 80, cited above, and Rev. xxi. The tradition embodied in the present fragment thus bears marks of being rather old (or at least archaistic).

(A) the Kingdom of Messiah, of the house of David. There is no hint that the kingdom of Messiah here is conceived of as temporary. On the contrary it is from the context to be identified with the Kingdom of Heaven, the Kingdom of God, see the reference to Zech. xiv. 9: "And H' shall be king over all the earth". The Kingdom of Messiah as identical with the Kingdom of Heaven represents the final consummation, in approximately the same sense as that of the prophetic eschatologies from which passages are drawn as scriptural support.

Ch. xlviii cont. (B, C and D). The additional fragments now following, in the translation marked 'ch. xlviii B, C and D' resp. entirely break off the continuity with the preceding. Not only is the frame of the present section and of all the rest of the book altogether abandoned, but there is also no connection whatsoever with the immediately preceding part of the chapter. B, treating of the Divine Names, is introduced without reference to any spokesman (in the preceding parts: R. Ishmael-Metatron). C, a short Enoch-Metatron piece is laid in the mouth of 'the Holy One, blessed be He'. D, dealing with the 70 names of Metatron and the revelation of the treasures of wisdom to Moses, is partly attributed to Metatron (vss. 6, 7), partly in general narrative form.

Neither E nor A can be made responsible for putting these additional fragments in their present place. In A they follow immediately on the preceding without the slightest break in the text; hence it is safe to conclude that they were already extant as concluding parts of the book in the ms. that A copied. Since A is in no way directly dependent on E, nor vice versa, both must be traced back to a common source in which the said fragments had been embodied.

The same fragments, however, recur in printed editions of the well-known Alph. R. 'Aqiba (rec. A), letter 'Aleph (although missing in some editions). And the ms.

A EFGH: K:

in the text-critical notes referred to as m-š (Lm), explicitly states its indebtedness for its recension of C 3-10, 12 and D (abridged) to Alph. R. 'Aqiba.

A common feature of A and E on one hand and the editions of Alph. R. 'Aqiba on the other is, that in the fragment B the actual Divine Names, there referred to, are missing—and were apparently missing already in the MSS. on which the said printed editions of 'Othiyot R. 'Aqiba were based (since they contain no express statement as to their being omitted in print, as in the case of the names of Metatron, fragment D, see text-notes, ib.).

In Bodl. MICH. Add. 61, fol. 13 a, however, following on a recension of the so-called Sepher ha-qQoma and Seder Ma'ase Bereshith (fol. 12 b) there occurs a fragment which no doubt is closely related to the present fragments—ch. xlviii b, c—although it represents only an abridged version. This fragment is embodied in text and translation in a separate column and is marked 'K' and כּ resp. The distinguishing feature of K is that it gives the Divine Names and thus supplements the other sources.

Cf. further note on ch. xlviii c beginning and introduction.

(1) (K): These are the 72 names... FGH count 70 'names that are explicit', and besides them innumerable names 'that are not explicit'. Ch. xlviii c 9, d 5, also refer to the '70 names of the Holy One'. The tension between the two tendencies of giving the precedence as holy or mystical number to 70 or 72 resp. is noticeable in the case of the Divine Names as well as of the Princes of Kingdoms (cf. note on ch. xvii. 3). In Add. 27180, foll. 39 b-61 a the Divine Names are given as 72, likewise in S. ha-Chesheq, where the (72) names are enumerated (Add. 27120, fol. 17 b). Cf. also the conception of the 72-lettered name.

that are written on the heart of the Holy One... The specific place of the Divine Names is in different sources differently designed. The names are sometimes represented as written on the Fearful Crown, sometimes on the Throne, sometimes on the forehead of the Most High. Cf. the quotation from Alph. R. 'Aqiba in note on ch. xxxix. 1. Here the Names are represented as written on the heart of the Most High. In the Shi'ur Qoma or Sepher ha-qQoma, treating of the various members of the Godhead, it is said: "on the heart of the King of Kings there are written 70 names" (Bodl. MICH. 175, fol. 18 b; Bodl. OPP. 467, fol. 59 a b, in the second recension, the R. Ishmael version; Bodl. OPP. 563, fol. 92 b, also in the R. Ishmael-recension).

The names enumerated here are on the whole identical with those of the Shi'ur Qoma passage just referred to. The resemblance between K (ch. xlviii b) and that passage is as striking as to prompt the conclusion that one is dependent on the other. Hence the Shi'ur-Qoma passage in its different readings may be used as a text-critical aid to the present fragment.

The enumeration of Divine Names given here presents the following different categories: (1) firstly, the various synonyms of the Divine Name, originally drawn from the O.T., may be singled out from the rest. They comprise the category of Divine Names known as 'the Ten Names'. They are here ŠUR, ŠADDIQ, ŠEBAOTH, ŠHADDAY, 'ELOHIM, YHWH, YAH, CHAY, ROKEB 'ARABOTH... The omission of the important name 'EHYE 'asher 'EHYE is, however, remarkable. In the Shi'ur-Qoma passage this name occurs after ŠEBAOTH in all the readings. It is probable that it was originally included also in the present fragment. The addition of this name, moreover, gives the number 72 as the number of names, agreeing with the specification in the opening of the fragment. For the name 'EHYE 'asher 'EHYE cf. ch. xlii. 2. (2) Another category is that of various permutations of the four letters constituting the Tetragrammaton and the 'EHYE', i.e. 'Aleph, Yod, He, Waw. (3) A third category comprises the permutations of other letters, derived from O.T. names or passages completed for Mélek ha-'Olam. The right interpretation of this is doubtful to decide. It seems that there was a tradition, according to which the explanation of the Divine Names or the series of the Divine Names was permissible as far as to the name MELEK ha-'OLAM (the King of the Universe). After that name it was not permissible to give explanations or discourses on the basis of the Names. Hence there arose the technical expression "ad Melek ha-'Olam". Cf. e.g. Bodl. opp. 658, fol. 101 b. The real meaning of the expression in question here is thus probably (instead of 'completed for etc.'): here the series is completed with regard to the rule 'up to the name MELEK ha-'OLAM but not further'.

Holy, Holy, Holy... Blessed be the Name etc... Blessed be He who gives power to the faint etc. The names are inclosed in the responses of the Qēdushsha and in other glorifications. This is also the case with the names in the Shi'ur-Qoma fragment which in all readings ends with the response 'Blessed'. The letters representing the responses 'Holy' (QQQ) and 'Blessed' (BshKMLW) are to be regarded as together forming actual Divine Names, acc. to the Notarikon-system. Some of the other names are perhaps also derived from the responses, e.g. BBB, KKK, KKL. As Divine Names—and not as private additions of praise by the writer—are also to be considered the Notarikon-complexes at the end of the enumeration. As a support for these statements may be adduced the following commenting remark on Sépher ha-Qoma in Bodl. opp. 658, fol. 102 b: "the Names written in this book (Sépher ha-qQoma, thus including the parallel to our passage) are derived from scriptural verses and some of them are deduced from the 'Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom for ever and ever'". For the early connection of the Divine Names with the Notarikon-system cf. the so-called Prayer of R. Nehunya ben ha-qQana embodied in the liturgy, the Notarikon of which forms the 42-lettered Name (known as אֵלֹהִים בְּכָל הַדְּלֵת יְמִינָה תַתִּיר צְרִירָה: וְנוֹ: (אֵלֹהִים יְתֵן קֶרֶן שְׁמֹן

See note ad loc. and cf. vs. 2 here: 'when they bring them back to their place, the Throne'. It is not actually stated here (as in ch. xxxix. 1) that the Names are written on the Throne, only that their place is before or by the Throne, and this in reality accords with the expression of K (and Shi'ur Qoma): 'written on the heart of the King of Kings, the Holy One', the 'heart' being in Shi'ur Qoma, the symbolical expression for the centre of the Throne. The Names are probably here as in ch. xxxix. 1 conceived of as self-existent beings. This is confirmed by the fact that they are depicted as crowned 'with flaming crowns, crowns of chashmal, crowns of lightnings etc.' and as escorted like 'kings' or 'mighty and honoured princes' (vs. 2) by hosts of angels. As self-existent heavenly beings the Names are naturally pictured in the form of angels: crowned (cf. note on ch. xviii. 1, xvi. 2, xl) and winged (acc. to ch. xxxix. 1). Cf. vs. 2. For the conception of the Names as crowned cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 24, where the letters of the Divine Name ('EHYE YHWH) are depicted as crowned: "and all of them (the letters) are crowned with crowns of brilliant flashes"; ib. BH. iii. 36: "At the hour when the Holy One, blessed be He, enters the Merkaba. . . then the letters on the Merkaba come to meet him with songs. . . and the Holy One, blessed be He, embraces them, kisses them and wreathes two crowns on each one of them: a crown of kingship and a crown of glory". Notice the hypostasized character of the letters (of the Divine Names) in the last quotation.

crowns of chashmal. . . with the likeness of chashmal. The chashmal, derived from Ezek. i. 4, is regarded as a celestial matter or substance. Cf. ch. xxxvi. 2 and note on ch. xxxiv. 1 (esp. the quotation from Midrash Kōnēn, ib.). From the same word is also derived the angelic class Chashmallim (cf. chh. vii and xlviii c 4).

Ch. xlviii (c). 1 E: 'thousand thousands'

(2) And they give glory unto them and they answer and cry before them: Holy, Holy, Holy... (and the Chayyoth say:) Blessed etc. The 'going forth' of the Names from the Throne of Glory is thus here, as in ch. xxxix. 1, connected with the heavenly performance of the responses of the Qēdushsha. Cf. vs. 1 (K). In ch. xxxix the performance of the Qēdushsha is treated as the central event to which the 'flying off' of the Divine Names was an accessory, here the representation is rather the reverse: the central interest is attached to the Names, the Qēdushsha-responses are even represented as addressed to the Names (just as the Divine Names are the objects of prayers and glorifications from the side of man).

they roll them. The 'rolling' is perhaps to be understood as referring to the names as angels mounted on wheels, cf. chh. xviii. 25, xxii. 7.

Ch. xlviii (c). This fragment is a version of the Enoch-Metatron tradition and exhibits traits very much resembling those of the Enoch-Metatron piece contained in chh. iii-xv of the present book. In fact, vss. 1-9 present the same details as those of chh. iii-xv, although in an epitomized form, vss. 10-12 add statements about Metatron's functions as establisher of the Divine decrees and as teacher of the prematurely dead children.

Both in A, E and the editions of Alph. R. 'Aqiba the present fragment appears as a sequel to the fragment treating of the Divine Names (ch. xlviii B), and likewise in K. In the present context of AE as well as of edd. Alph. R. 'Aqiba there seems to be no internal connection between the two. In AE the fragment, ch. xlviii B, in its present form gives the impression of being quite out of place. Its only appropriate place would have been by ch. xxxix (also treating of the Divine Names). And also in Alph. R. 'Aqiba—although of a much looser structure than the present book—the reason for placing the fragment B in the context in which it is now introduced is not very apparent. The insertion of the fragment c, on the other hand, strong, I took him, I appointed him: (namely) Me-

AEFGH:

K:

took him and I appointed him"—that is Enoch, the is justifiable both as regards the present book and as regards the Alph. R. 'Aqiba: in the present book in view of its dealing with Enoch-Metatron, in Alph. R. 'Aqiba, letter 'Aleph', on account of its beginning with 'Aleph', representing the Notarikon (or mnemotechnical formula) for the three opening words אֶבְרַתִּי ('I made him strong'), לָקַחְתִּי ('I took him'), פָּקַדְתִּי ('I appointed him'), אֵלֶּף = אֱלֹהִים. The close connection that seems to prevail between the two fragments is hence neither to be explained by the assumption that they originally belong to Alph. R. 'Aqiba (and when borrowed by other writings having been regarded as a unit) nor by the same assumption applied to the present book.

The explanation is presumably to be found in K, the only version that preserves the enumeration of the Divine Names in fragment B, an enumeration which must be presupposed as the original part of the fragment. In this enumeration of the Divine Names we find the word 'Aleph' as one of the Names (the 55th from the beginning). The 'Aleph' as representing the sentence 'I seized him, I took him, I appointed him (K)' is now the starting-point and basis of the exposition of the fragment, ch. xlviii c. Hence it is possible to conjecture that the present fragment in reality is framed as a 'midrash' (in the proper sense) on the Divine Name 'Aleph'. On such a hypothesis the close connection between B and C would be easier to understand. Both B and C may have originated in the circles attaching great importance to the conception of Metatron, God's representative—whose names are based upon the names of his Creator (cf. vs. 9, chh. iii. 2, iv. 1, x. 3 seq., xii. 5). Among the Divine Names the 'Aleph' was chosen here as symbolizing the relation between the Holy One and His vice-regent, Metatron. 'Aleph' is represented as the symbol of God's sovereignty in Alph. R. 'Aqiba, in passages preceding the version of B and C. 'Aleph' as the name or one of the names of the Godhead is also vindicated by the Shi'ur Qoma passage (cf. above on ch. xlviii B). 'Aleph, Beth, etc., as symbolical for the Godhead, expressing different aspects of the Divinity, are dwelt upon in TB. Shabbat, 104 a. ('Aleph-Beth is explained as referring to the instruction in 'Intelligence', or the Tora.) As symbolical of Metatron the 'Aleph' (and Beth) is expressly designed in Hek. R., BH. iii. 104; Metatron's name is there "'Aleph, Beth", BB, GG, DD, HH, WW, ZZ, HH, Metatron etc. (cf. ch. xlviii D)". The name 'Alpha' seems also to have been ascribed to Sandalphon acc. to Hek. Zot. (Bodl. MICH. 9, fol. 67 a)—that angel occupying a position similar to or identical with Metatron's position (scil. in Hek. Zot.).

(1) I made him strong... in the generation of the first Adam. The word 'ibbartiv', here translated 'I made him strong', is of a doubtful interpretation. With reference to the expression 'in the generation of the first Adam' it is probable that the word was to express some activity from God's part in regard to Metatron. But Metatron is evidently from the beginning of the fragment identified with Enoch. Hence the meaning seems to be to allude to God's special care for Enoch during his life on earth, among the men of the generation of Adam. K has the easier reading 'I seized him', which of course is a mere synonym for 'I took him', and like the latter expression is made to refer to Enoch's removal to heaven.

For the details of the present exposition cf. on the parallel passages of the Enoch-Metatron section, chh. iii-xv. when I beheld the generation of the flood: ch. iv. 3. I removed my Shekina etc.: ch. v. 13, 14.

For vs. 2 cf. chh. vi. 1, 3, iv. 3.

For vs. 3 cf. chh. x. 6, viii. 1.

For vs. 4 cf. ch. x. 3 seq. I appointed him over the Chayyoth, the 'Ophanim etc. Cf. the angelic classes enumerated, ch. vii. Metatron is here represented distinctly as the Prince of the Merkaba-angels. (Contrast the angelological section, chh. xix seqq.)

Was the original reading perhaps 'surpasses all the others that are high of stature, with 70,000 parasangs'? The Shi'ur Qoma counts in thousands of myriads of parasangs in its description of the measures of the Throne (with the special units of measure prevailing in heaven) and *TB. (10) Metatron stands and carries it out... the decrees. Metatron standing and executing the Divine decrees represents another trend of traditions than those contained in the statement ‘Metatron sits and judges the heavenly household’. But both seem to have been connected already at an early time. So in a pregnant (and contradictory) form in Rev. of Moses (Gaster, RAS’s Journal, 1893): “Metatron, the angel of the Presence, stands at the door of the Palace (Hall) of God. And he sits and judges all the heavenly hosts before his Master. And God pronounces judgement and he executes it”. Cf. further on ch. xvi. 5.

(11) they do not execute it etc. This verse has no reference to Metatron, and it would seem that it does not belong to the Enoch-Metatron piece. It is a midrashic exposition on the continuation of Is. lv. 11, the scriptural passage used as support for the view on Metatron as executor of the decrees. It is omitted by Lm and may be regarded as additional.

(12) Metatron sits three hours every day... and teaches the prematurely dead. This is a well-known tradition with regard to Metatron, recurring in TB: ‘Aboda Zara, 3 b (in a slightly different form), Metatron sharing the function with God himself, and frequently in later writings, cf. e.g. YR. i. 31 b (quoting ‘Or haChayim).

Ch. xlviii (D). This last fragment of the present chapter consists of mixed pieces of traditions only loosely bound together. The first, vs. 1, treats of the names of Metatron. Seventy names has Metatron. The number is given as 70 in accordance with chh. iii. 2, iv. 1, xlviii c 9. They are as in the passages mentioned, represented as a reflection of or based upon the Divine Name(s). The enumeration contains a larger number of names than the indicated 70. It evidently is a list of all the names that were known by the writer to be applied to Metatron. So also other enumerations, e.g. S. ha-Chesheq, ed. Epstein, and the commentary on Metatron's names, Bodl. MICH. 256, foll. 29 a-44 a, exceed the number 70.

As to the character of the names here enumerated the majority are angelic names of the usual pattern. Nos. 83 and 85-86 (= Zehanpurru) occur as names of angels in ch. xviii. 8, 21 of the present book. Cf. also no. 82 with Zaksakiel, ch. xviii. 17, and no. 73 with Simkiel, ch. xlv. 2, 3. In Schwab, VA., the following names of the present enumeration recur as names of individual angels attested in other writings, viz. nos. 1, 3 and 4 (companion of Metatron, Zohar, i. 149 a, Prince of the Law, ib. iii. 197 b), 5 (Prince of Understanding, S. Raziel, 45 a), 6 (Prince of the Presence, Hek. R. xvii. xxvi, cf. xxx), 19 (in a variant form), 20, 21, 22 (in many variants), 24, 25, 48, 49, 51, 54, 60, 63, 83, 84, 85-86, 96, 104 (1 En. vi. 7).

These names which probably are understood as representing different aspects and functions of Metatron perhaps indicate that Metatron was to be conceived of as combining all the different functions assigned to the special angels of the resp. names. Cf. YR. i. 56 b, referred to below.

Another group among the names enumerated consists of variants of the name Metatron, e.g. nos. 23 (Metatron), 30, 31, 46, 47. This category of names forms part also of other enumerations of Metatron's names.

A few names are permutations of the letters of the Tetragrammaton and 'EHYE, after the pattern of the enumerations of Divine Names: nos. 13 = 16, (53), 80, 81. Cf. note on ch. xlviii B 1.

Lastly mention may be made of the specific appellations of Metatron: no. 17 'Ebed (= Servant) and no. 102 the Lesser YHWH. 'Ebed, 'servant', is expressly attached to Metatron in the Enoch-Metatron sections, chh. x. 3, xlviii c 1, the Lesser YHWH in chh. xii. 5, xlviii c 7. On the other hand it is noteworthy that the name 'Na'ar' which is given a prominent place in chh. iii and iv, is not included in the present enumeration, nor in those of YR. i. 60 b, S. Chesheq, Bodl. MICH. 256, foll. 29 a-44 a. It seems, however, to have been extant in the recension of which Lm is an abridgement. Besides, acc. to traditions appearing in Zohar (e.g. i. 223 b) and elsewhere, cf. YR. i. 56 a (from 'Pardes'), Na'ar is represented as equivalent with 'Ebed': "Metatron is called 'Na'ar' (= παῖς, Servant) because he does the service of a na'ar, he ministers before the Shekina and he distributes maintenance to all the companies of angels". (Metatron as 'na'ar' is also identified with Abraham's servant Elieser—through combination with Ps. xxxvii. 25 also called Zaqen and Saba de-Beta, the Eldest of his house: Zohar, i. 149 a et al.)

Among the other names may be of special interest: Pisqon (no. 48), occurring Sanh. 44 b, and by Rashi referred to Gabriel. It evidently denotes Metatron's office of deciding, passing judgement, cf. ch. xlviii c 8, 10, x. 5. This name also occurs in the form 'Ru'ach Pisqonith, the deciding spirit' (Bodl. MICH. 256, name no. 25); cf. Pesiqtha 27 b. Senegron (no. 22), i.e. 'defensor', whereby Metatron is indicated as occupying the same position as in Rabbinic is usually assigned to Mikael: defending Israel against the accusations of Satan, Sammael, or the representatives of the heathen nations, cf. on ch. xxx. Gal Razayya (no. 88) cf. Razrazyah (no. 68), i.e. 'Revealer of secrets' or 'knower of secrets.' Cf. ch. xlviii c 7, ch. xi. He is the mediator transmitting the celestial secrets to man. The name 'Galli-Razayya' is the sixty-seventh of the names enumerated, Bodl. MICH. ib. Related to this name is no. 91 ('depths scil. of secrets'). Noteworthy is 95 SePhaM, 96 GBIR, 97 GiBbORYaH, 98 GOR, 99 GORYaH, 100 ZIW, 101 'OKBaR, the 102 LESSER YHWH, after the name of his Master, (Ex. xxxiii. 21) "for my name is in him", 103 RaBIBIEL, 104 TUMIEL,¹ 105 *Segansakkiel*², the Prince of Wisdom.

2 FG: 'Sagnezagiel' Lm: 'Neganzegael'

Mekapperyah (no. 93) which would seem to assign to Metatron an atoning function. Yehoel (no. 1) is as well in earlier as in later literature the name of the high angel of the 'Presence' (cf. BOX, Ap. Abr. x, xii). His name is composed of the letters of the Divine Name, hence the 'shemi begirbō' ('my name is in him') could appropriately be applied to him. Cf. Ap. Moses, and in a later attestation e.g. Add. 26922, foll. 41 b seqq. (Yehoel on a level with Metatron as the Prince of the Presence). Lastly the Tetragrammaton itself appears as one of the names: no. 14.

For enumerations of the names of Metatron cf. inter al.: (1) Hek. R. xxvi. BH. iii. 104 (the centre of this enumeration are the 'eight names': Margeziel, Giyothiel, etc., Yehoel... Sagnesagiel): "In the camps of the holy angels they call him: 'Metatron, the 'Ebed YHWH' (!), the long-suffering and the merciful or: YHWH, wise in secrets etc." (2) Hek. Zōt. Bodl. MICH. 9, fol. 69 b, containing nos. 6, 46, 84 here, and 'Uzyah, Menunyah, Sasnegaryah, 'Aṭmon, Sigron, etc. (3) Hek. Zōt. Bodl. MICH. 9, fol. 70 a: "... the prince of the Host on high, the 'Ebed YHWH, God of Israel, blessed be He, longsuffering etc."; cf. Hek. R. above. The Divine Attributes (from Ex. xxxiv. 6-7, cf. 4 Ez. vii. 132 seqq.) seem to have been ascribed to Metatron, and the name 'Ebed' to have been referred to the 'Ebed YHWH' picture of Deutero-Isaiah. (4) Shi'ur Qoma, e.g. Bodl. OPP. 467, fol. 59 a, Bodl. OPP. 563, fol. 92 b: "Metatron, Ru^ah Pīsqonith (cf. above), Iṭmon, Hegron, Sigron, Maṭon, Miṭon Neṭiṭ, Neṭiṭh". (5) YR. i. 56 b from Tiqqunim. This passage makes an attempt at explaining the meaning of the names. Metatron, it says, is called by the resp. names acc. to the various functions he is performing. He is called 'Oṭmon' (from 'aṭam = stop, shut') when he seals the guilty in Israel, 'Sigron' ('sagar = shut') when he shuts the doors of prayers (i.e. the doors through which man's prayers are let into heaven), 'Pithḥon' at the time when he opens for the prayers, 'Pīsqon' (cf. above) at the time when he decides Halakoth in Raqia', in the (celestial) Beth Din... And this angel is called by 60 myriads of names of angels (cf. above). He is called 'Chasdiel' when he does kindness to the world, 'Gabriel' at the time when 'gebura' is in the world, 'Sithriel' when he hides the children of the world under his wings from the angels of destruction. He is also called Sidqiel, Raphael and Malikiel. (6) YR. i. 60 b, from a 'midrash', with reference to Alph. R. 'Aqiba, hence possibly a fragment of a recension of the present verse. In fact, the following names of the present verse occur there: nos. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 11, 27, 28, 17, 30, 49 (variant), 21 (and variant), 22, 48 (as Pīsqonith), 25. Of the remaining twenty names of that passage five recur in S. ha-Chesheq and the related commentary on Metatron's names, Bodl. MICH. 256 and a couple of the rest in the Hek. R. and Hek. Zōt. passages referred to above. (7) S. ha-Chesheq (Add. 27120, foll. 1 seqq.). The following names of the present verse occur there: nos. 11, 17, 21, 25, 30, 41, 49, 51, 54, 58-59, 60, 61, 64, 75, 77, 90, 94, 95. (8) Bodl. MICH. 256, foll. 29 a-44 a, a treatise called Shemoth shel Metatron: 'The Names of Metatron', presenting 77 different names with commentary. The names and order of names are on the whole identical with or resembling those of S. ha-Chesheq. It may be noted that the 'Yephiphayah' of vs. 4 of the present fragment (the Prince of the Law who transmits the treasures of Wisdom-Tora to Moses) is included in this enumeration as a name of Metatron. Sigron, Iṭmon, 'Ebed, Senegron, Galli-Razayya also occur. The comments on the names consist in explanations by means of Gematria. The names are here also represented as signifying different functions of his. The name Metatron e.g. is by gematria 'Shaddai', for he said to God's world: it is enough ('שָׁפָא'); and Metatron carries the world upon the great crown, and he is

The name Tītrasyah is by gematria 'Gash' ('come near', numerical value 303), for he comes nearer to the Throne than any other angel. It is by gematria 'ha-Rahmān' ('the Merciful'), for when the Holy One is wroth with his children, Metatron prays before him and turns him from the attribute of justice to the attribute of mercy (cf. ch. xxxi, Ber. 7 a) and so on.

Acc. to Lm and vss. 7 seqq. it seems that Metatron was the transmitter of the Tora to Moses. This would account for the insertion of the fragment here.

(5) These seventy names are a reflection.... Cf. on chh. xlviii c 9 and iii. 2. The seventy names are here referred to the Most High as King of the kings of kings, probably indicating the aspect of rulership over the world, the seventy nations. When ascribed to Metatron they signify, as may be assumed, Metatron's character of representative ruler of the world, esp. over the princes of kingdoms; cf. the statement following: '(put upon Metatron's name... the twenty-two letters ... with which are sealed the destinies of the princes of kingdoms... and the destinies of every nation and tongue. and twenty-two letters.... The twenty-two letters are presumably conceived of as contained in the Divine Names that were 'put upon Metatron'. The holy letters constitute the Names, hence Names and letters are terms interchanged. with which are sealed. The creations and decrees of the Holy One are often represented as established by, sustained by or sealed with a Divine Name or a letter. Cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 24: "All the Explicit Names are written with He etc. And heaven and earth are sealed with it (them) and this world and the world to come and the days of Messiah. And how many are the letters by which heaven and earth are sealed? They are 12... namely the letters of the Name 'Ehye' asher 'Ehye' (Aleph, He, Yod, He, etc.)". on the ring upon his finger. Cf. ib. 25: "they are sealed with the ring: 'EHYE' asher 'EHYE". the destinies of the... Angel of Death and the destinies of every nation and tongue. 'The lots, פְּתֵי, of the angel of death' presumably means 'the records of the ultimate fate of individuals and nations, kept with the angels of Death'; cf. Alph. R. 'Aqiba, rec. B, BH. iii. 63: "the Pittage, the records of destinies of every nation are kept with thee (the angel of Gehenna, Negarsanael,) but the Pittage of thine do not include the people of Israel".

(7) when I revealed this secret to Moses... the secret by which were created heaven and earth... Gehenna... the Garden of Eden... the Tora and Wisdom and Knowledge etc. all the hosts of every heaven raged against me. With this may be compared the fragment, containing protesting words of the angels, preserved in Hek. R. xxix: "This Secret may not go out from the house of thy treasures and the mystery of subtle understanding from thy treasures. Do not make flesh and blood equal to us".

Another parallel is found in Hek. Zof. MICH. 9, fol. 68 b: "Thou didst reveal secrets and secrets of secrets, mysteries and mysteries of mysteries to Moses, and Moses to Joshua etc. (cf. below)... and Israel made out of them the Tora and the Talmud...". So also here the Tora, Wisdom and Knowledge are said to be formed through the 'Secret'.

The 'secret' is hence the Wisdom or totality of Gnosis on which the written and oral Tora is based, and by which the whole manifested world is created. If brought into connection with vss. 2, 3 the 'secret' of the present verse refers to the contents of 'the treasures of wisdom' that were all opened to Moses on Sinai. What the inner essence of the secret is conceived to be is not immediately apparent here. The chain of tradition set forth in vs. 10 suggests that it was thought to be contained in the mystical knowledge or traditions of the secluded circles of 'the men of faith'. In the present connection it would seem that the ultimate constituent parts or elements of the secret is the 'Letters and Names'. By the letters heaven and earth are created, acc. to chh. xiii, xli, and wisdom, understanding etc. 'by which the whole world is established' (ch. xli. 3, cf. here). The Tora itself, either celestial or as transmitted to Israel, is constituted by the letters in the mystical sense. God's conferring His Names and 'Letters' on Metatron symbolize Metatron's initiation in the celestial gnoseis; thereby he is the Prince of Wisdom, the guardian of the 'treasures of Wisdom' (vs. 2). This view is supported by the following passage in Alph. R. 'Aqiba, BH. iii. 26: "God revealed to Moses on Sinai all the (Divine) Names, both the names that are explicit, the names that are graven upon the Crown of Kingship, the names graven upon the Throne of Glory, the Names graven upon the Ring on his hand, the names that are standing like fiery pillars round his chariots, the names that surround the Shekina as eagles of the Merkaba, and the Names, by which are sealed heaven and earth, the sea and the Besides it is not a direct continuation of vs. 9: it refers to the transmitted lore as 'them', in the plural, vs. 9, speaking only of 'it', the 'secret'. The transmitted secrets are included in the revelations of oral Tora from the treasures on high to Moses, as in vss. 3 and 4. committed them to Moses, and Moses to Joshua. The chain of tradition is modelled on the characteristic pattern, attested in Pirqe Aboth, i. 1 (Moses received the Tora from Sinai, and transmitted it to Joshua and Joshua to the elders etc.). A close parallel to the present passage is found in *Hek. Zof. Bodl.
